Non-credit courses offered to students

As a community service, Lock Haven State College will offer a series of short, non-credit courses in a variety of subjects, both enjoyable and educational, beginning the week of October 4.

Some courses are being offered again by popular demand. Olive Schribner is once again teaching a course on "Investing with Confidence" on Tuesday evenings from 7 pm to 9 pm. According to Mrs. Schribner, the conscientious student will have no difficulty in comprehending the material presented and will be able to supervise his or her own investment program upon completion of the course.

The non-credit courses are also open to students enrolled in the college. Any student may take one course free of charge provided that there is a sufficient number of paying customers enrolled in the course and the student has permission from his advisor and the dean of his school.

"Indoor Gardening" is being offered for the second time, Wednesdays from 7:30 to 10 pm beginning October 13, by Dr. Kenneth Settlemyer. The course is intended for both the beginner and the experienced plant enthusiast.

A practical course in which the participants are taught lettering skills that may be applied toward a broad range of advertising materials will be taught Thursdays, 7pm to 9pm, by James Hamilton. The course is entitled "Lettering and Poster Design".

Ronald Jodun, highly qualified in the preparation of state and federal income tax returns, will offer a course on "Taxes for the Layman" on Thursdays, 7 pm to 9 pm. Those successfully completing the course will be able to prepare their own income tax returns with a large degree of confidence.

Robert Storch, an attorney at the college whose second love is pop music, will offer once again a strictly fun course called "The British Invasion: Early Motown Sound." The course deals with the arrival of the Beatles on the American music scene in 1964, with focus on the actual music of such groups as the Beatles, the Yardbirds, the Temptations, and the Supremes. Offered at a special cost of

LORML seeks to decriminalize pot

By KEITH VERNON
Staff Reporter

The Lock Haven Organization for the Reform of Marijuana Laws (LORML) is playing an active role in the battle against what they consider unjust laws regarding the possession of marijuana.

A major goal of this student organization is the decriminalization of marijuana possession. Under the present Pennsylvania law, according to Patrolman Richard Hepner, a person convicted of possessing under one ounce of marijuana is subject to a $100 fine and/or up to 30 days in jail. LORML hopes to make possession of under one ounce of marijuana punishable by no more than a $100 civil fine, which could not be entered on the defendant's criminal record.

Pennsylvania is one of eight states in the process of decriminalizing marijuana possession. According to a spokesperson from LORML, a number of bills urging decriminalization are currently on the floor of the state legislature.

One of the strong supporters of LORML's cause is Alan Ellis, a lawyer at State College. At a recent press conference Ellis stated, "The present Pennsylvania marijuana laws are irrational, excessively severe and scientifically incorrect. Government

New facts told on drug raid

To the Editor:

Although your article concerning the recent drug raid was lacking in opinion, as all news stories are, I would consider it a damaging story to one of the people mentioned in it. There were two reasons for this: 1) The facts that were left out, and 2) The opinions that were missing since it was a news story.

For this reason, we would like to add some fact and opinion in an effort to clear up some rumors which have been spread.

1) The article led readers to believe that the two people were arrested for incidents which occurred recently. In truth, one of the incidents materialized almost a year ago as a naive freshman was led to believe he was doing a favor for a friend and instead was being set up with an undercover agent.

2) The article may have led people to believe that this same person was also a well-known drug dealer who made his spending money by selling illicit drugs to his fellow students. Well, that is totally unbelievable in the opinion of we who know him, and in the opinion of those who know who the real drug dealers on campus are. The fact of the matter is that he simply didn't deal.

3) Why was the persons bail

Dance proves great success

To the Editor:

We would like to say thanks to each and every one of you who devoted so much time and energy in such a special way by holding the recent Dance Marathon, and to the administration of the college for allowing the use of the college facilities.

We are especially grateful to the Phi Mu Delta fraternity for sponsoring the marathon and doing such a fine job of getting it all together.

You made the Dance Marathon the most successful event ever held for the benefit of the Infant Development Program.

Sincerely,

Apathy abounds at Lock Haven

To the Editor

I have a few comments concerning the so-called "Day of Student Activism." Tuesday Sept. 28th was set aside by the Penna. state colleges and university (PSCU) system for the students to prove once and for all that apathy is truly dead on state college campuses. The sad truth, however, is that this day proved that apathy is alive and flourishing (at least here at LHSC). To my knowledge not a damn thing took place on this campus concerning activism. No political speakers. No voter registration campaigns. Nothing! Oh yes, there was one group of bombed asses putting on a freak show in the lobby of Bentley (while a Coffee House was going on no less!) This bunch is a great example of what apathy has created here on campus. These were the same wierdo-clowns who

The SCC and You

By Lorin Mock

A few weeks ago as the Executive Committee was reviewing the forthcoming proposed Constitutional Revisions (which are posted all over campus and I urge you to read them so that you may vote intelligently in the constitutional referendum on October 19) we came upon the idea of upping the number of Faculty Advisors to five, the Constitutional limit. We felt that the addition of two carefully chosen advisors could greatly expand the ability of the advisors to give us counsel on areas in which problems may arise in the future. So with that goal in mind we asked and received positive replies from Ms. Taylor and Mr. Washburn.

I would just like to take a few minutes to acquaint you with two new faces to the SCC. They are not students but rather members of the Lock Haven State Faculty. They are Mr. John Washburn and Ms. Sharon Taylor both newly appointed advisors to the SCC.

Ms. Taylor was approached to become an SCC advisor because of her special knowledge in the areas of Womens Athletics, and her experience with Title IX and Affirmative Action Programs. We realize this is an area the SCC will more and more have to address itself to in the future.

Our other new advisor is Mr. Washburn and it is our hope he will bring his professional advice to our operation. Mr. Washburn is a member of the Political Science Department and we hope he can level that knowledge to the election committee as well as our government operation in general. In light of recent developments in our electoral process another look at our election system may be in order. With this he will work with our new elections committee chairperson Jeff Caukins to improve the participation in our elections systems. His knowledge of government may prove helpful in giving us advice as to possible improvements in our operations so that we may be more responsible to the students needs.

Hopefully the addition of these two people, combined with our current advisors Mr. Karl Herrmann, Mr. Larry Lebin, and Mr. Dave Arseneault we will have a wide range of expertise, so that they may give us the guidance we need in problems that develop in our organization. It follows naturally from this that the eventual benefit to the students is a better and more responsive student government for us all.

ASS releases questionnaire results

To the Editor:

The recent survey conducted by A.S.S. (Apathetic Student Senate), showed significant results on the part of concerned students for action. For those of you not familiar with the survey, which was sponsored by A.S.S. at the activities fair last Thursday, a questionnaire consisting of eight questions based on student needs was to be filled out to the best of one's ability. A total of 300 students filled out the questionnaire. The total response varied on the content of different questions.

PRO BALI

By STEVE HEVERLY

After another sub-par week of predictions (8-6 again. 16-12 overall), I head onward. Last week's upsets were New England over Pittsburgh, San Diego over St. Louis, and my upset predictions; Baltimore over Dallas and Houston over Oakland never came about. But I can't make excuses It lines up like this:

Philadelphia 27 Atlanta 10

The Eagles rolled up 418 yards total offense against the so-called tough Redskin defense on Monday night but still found a way to lose.

Atlanta shut out the Bears 10-0. But everyone knows

Chicago doesn't have an offense. Eagles will be too far ahead to blow this one.

Cincinnati 20 Cleveland 14

Cincinnati coasted to a win over the Packers last week while Cleveland was getting mauled by Denver. Cleveland never has any problems getting up for this inter-state and inter-conference rivalry. Should be good game.

Kansas City 24 Buffalo 14

Buffalo will get behind early and won't be able to catch up as Kansas City gets their first win of the season. Neither of these two teams are going anywhere and Buffalo struggled to get by Tampa Bay last week 14-9. Don't be surprised if this is Lou Saban's last year.

Oakland 24 New England 21

It's very tempting to pick New England in another upset, but now I wouldn't feel it would be an upset. Oakland will be ready for the Patriots and Kenny Stabler most likely will be back playing. Another tough game to pick.

St. Louis 28 New York 20

St. Louis had a bad game last week in San Diego but will recover against the Giants, who seem to have a bad game every week. Giants put up a good fight for a half against the Rams, but will be flat this week.

Baltimore 35 Tampa Bay 10

Baltimore gets back on the winning track with an easy win over Tampa Bay. Both teams had tough times last week. Baltimore lost on a last second field goal at Dallas, while Tampa Bay felt they should have beat Buffalo.

Chicago 17 Washington 13

Washington's defense can be beat as Philadelphia showed Monday night. Chicago's defense will bottle up Washington's attack. Its an upset pick, but very possible.

Detroit 13 GreenBay 10

A closer game than might be expected. Detroit will probably have a letdown after an extra-point miss botched up a shot at a win over the Vikings. Good chance for an upset here.

Houston 17 New Orleans 7

Houston will probably also have a letdown after a one point loss to Oakland. New Orleans is riding sky-high after beating the Chiefs last week. Houston's big plays will win it for them.

Los Angeles 23 Miami 17

Los Angeles should be able to run on the Dolphin's and are a solid team. Miami's best chance of winning this game is Bob Griese's arm. If Griese has a good game, the Dolphins will win. Miami's advantage: It's in Miami.

San Diego 28 Denver 27

This is really a toss-up with two of the leagues best offenses going at it. Just playing a hunch and going with San Diego by 1.

San Francisco 28 New York Jets 16

It's tough putting the Jets this close to anybody. Plunkett will have a big day on Jet:

Olnick on sports

Some random notes on sports:

San Diego continues to be the surprise team of the NFL with their upset win, and an impressive one at that, over a good St. Louis team. San Diego's offense is extremely explosive, and their rookie-loaded defense can get nothing but better. Their offensive line is as quick and strong and big and young as anyone's.

Barring major injuries, the Chargers will finish above .500 for the year, maybe even close to playoff country. Give Tommy Prothro and the management credit for having the patience to build a team from near scratch and not giving up after last year's dismal 2-12 record. Look for them to impress people as much as last year's Baltimore and Houston teams, or Buffalo the year before that.

Chicago Black Hawks management and fans can breathe a lot easier now after watching the performance of super-superstar Bobby Orr in the recent Canada Cup series. Orr, the MVP of the international competition, played like the old Orr in leading Team Canada to victory. Although it was obvious he is still a little slow in his moves. Yet Orr's battered knees held up well throughout the series, giving hockey fans everywhere the hope that Orr may have at least a few seasons left in those knees. Hopefully like the Orr of old-perhaps the greatest ever to lace up a pair of skates.

And speaking of hockey greats, Houston's Gordie Howe has decided to give it another go at age 48. Seems like he said he'd retire at the beginning of this season, just like he had for the past three years. But Howe apparently loves the game too much to quit, so he'll be back directing the Houston attack on the ice. The real reason Howe won't quit is he probably would feel useless doing since he was a couple feet tall; knocking the puck into the net better than just about anyone else.

This is not surprising, as many athletes feel this way. They moan and groan and can't wait until the day they can retire and sit back and enjoy life, but when they reach that point in time, they suddenly decide... well, maybe it's not that bad, and maybe I can give it another go. The real reason is they can't do anything else in life. A lot of examples around, like baseball's Brooks Robinson and Henry Aaron, football's Geritol Kid, George Blanda, Jacques Plante and the late Tim Horton in hockey, and a horde of famous boxers, like Archie Moore, Joe Louis, Emile Griffith, and many, many others.

Contrast this to young athletes who in the peak of their careers are forced into retirement by injuries, and who would most likely give anything to play, but cannot. A prime example is Detroit Red Wings' winger Mickey Redmond, who retired recently at the tender age of 28 because of back injuries. Redmond nearly broke into tears at the press conference announcing his retirement from the game, and said he would give "anything to anybody" if he could play again. Contrast that to an athlete who may be playing the game for no other reason other than the fact he can't do anything else, as he ho-hums his way through the games. Makes a person a little sad thinking about it.

And finally, the declaration by a federal judge that the NFL player draft is illegal will have a much deeper impact than even now forecasted. It would seem to follow that other sports drafts are illegal also, and thus the salaries and money paid to players will skyrocket, ticket prices will go up, and teams may start falling by the wayside soon. NFL Commissioner Pete Rozelle recently told a Senate committee, "Anyone would have to either be a masochist, a riverboat gambler, or very wealthy and not concerned about money to invest in or buy a professional sports franchise now. The way I see it, pro sports has nowhere to go now but downward."

A meeting for all those interested in participating in the Susque-View volunteer program will be held Tues. at 1 pm in Raub 307.

There will be a Student Publications election Thurs. Oct. 7, in Bentley Hall Lounge 11 am to 6 pm.

Student autos parked illegally

The Law Enforcement Division was contacted by the Chief of Lock Haven Police Department on September 29, 1976, in reference to student parking on Fairview Street near the silk mill. Residents have complained that student autos are being parked there and not moved for long periods of time. There is a city ordinance requiring an auto to be moved within a 12 hour period. As a means of cooperation, Mr. Carl Nelson, Director of Law Enforcement & Safety, recommends that students using Fairview Street move their autos to Area 9 near the Gulf Station until further notice.
