Aero Club To Organize

Early this year more than 125 students exhibited an interest in forming an Aero Club. After much delay and considerable effort, a meeting with several aeronautic representatives has been scheduled in Ulmer Planetarium Sunday evening November 21 at 7:30 p.m.

Present at the meeting will be Mr. Jim Shantz, Manager of Air Science Education for the Piper Aircraft Company; Professor Harold Wood of the Parks Air College, affiliated with St. Louis University, St. Louis, Missouri, who is also the Executive Director of National Intercollegiate Flying Association; and the current secretary of the University Aviation Association; and Mr. Allan Steephan, Assistant to the President, General Aviation Manufacturing Association and President of the N.I.F.A., 1970-71, while he was a student at San Jose College.

These three gentlemen, well qualified in the general aviation field will present an exposure to the National Intercollegiate Flying Association, explaining what it is, what it does, and Lock Haven State's place in this type of activity.

It is hoped that student interest has stood the test of prolonged delay and that they will find it possible to attend this informative meeting pertaining to the formulation of an Aero Club.

SCC will present two showings of the movie "Wood-Stock" on Monday, December 6 in Price Auditorium. One show will begin at 6 p.m. and the other at 9:15 p.m. Admission is 25c with all proceeds to go to the United Fund.

Buy your I.F.C. Raffle tickets now at $1.00 a ticket or $5.00 a book. Prizes: $300.00, $100.00 and $75.00. Tickets can be purchased from any fraternity man.

Students Earn Credit With ACTION

ACTION, the agency combining the Peace Corps, VISTA and other volunteer programs, has a new opportunity for college students—the University Year for ACTION.

Encompassing 31 schools and over 1,000 students, UYA places students in a poor district near their schools to work with the underprivileged for a year while earning credit toward graduation.

"The University Year for ACTION indicates a willingness on the part of the nation's institutions of higher learning to make their resources available to the poor," Blatchford said in announcing an additional 20 participating schools in the demonstration, 16-month program recently. "And it is a renewal of their commitment to experiment with new modes of education. I can only be encouraged when I see the formation of a creative partnership between universities and their students to do something, get involved and make sure that learning takes place at the same time."

Blatchford explained that the UYA volunteers work in education, health, justice, manpower and job development, housing, welfare, and economic and business development. They receive a subsistence allowance of about $200 per month, and must work for one full year with no outside employment permitted.

Students begin their year's work next March after working out their assignments with faculty advisers at their schools. Forty-two percent chosen are juniors, with seniors and sophomores making up 21 percent each; freshmen account for 5 percent, graduate students for 11 percent.

Another program in the planning stages at ACTION involves using surplus army equipment for civilian pilot projects, such as rural transportation systems. An ACTION spokesman said the outcome of this plan will be known around the first of the year.

LHS Students Are Enjoying Nottingham

The following report on the activities of the Lock Haven State students currently studying at Nottingham College in England was recently received from Bea and Perry Brown:

"Our students have adjusted very well to an entirely different system from the one we have at Lock Haven. They are all enrolled in an independent study program with a British tutor, and seem to be getting a great deal out of it. Their work ranges anywhere from philosophy, math, history, geography, and literature to divinity and social studies.

"They have also been active in the organizations and clubs here at Nottingham. Just to cite a few—Jerry Luckovich and Jim Furry are playing Rugby; Jim Wilkinson has given readings for the Drama Society; Kathy Bennetti and Jim Wilkinson served on a panel with the Browns for the third year students at the college and discussed life in America, with questions submitted from the audience.

"Kathy Clough and Dottie Haas have joined the Riding Club and are learning to jump. Jim Lebda and the Browns went to the BBC and taped an interview about the exchange program, which was aired over Radio Nottingham a few weeks ago.

"As far as trips are concerned, you name it—we've been there. Locally, our students seem to have become familiar with every English pub in and around Nottingham. We all took a bus trip to York, and almost everyone has spent some time in London. We also visited the cathedrals at Lincoln and Southwell.

"Over the half term vacation in October, Peggy De Shullo, Jim Lebda, Jim Wilkinson, and Jack Hunsberger went to Scotland; Gloria Strubeck, Jerry Luckovich, and a Nottingham student went to Paris; Bob Eichenshr went on a camping trip to Scarborough; Kathy Clough and Barbara Moyer visited in the homes of British students. Another group went with the BROWNS and a Nottingham faculty member on a tour of Southern England—Cambridge, Canterbury, Dover, Rye, Hastings, Battle Abbey, Brighton, and Oxford; plus Blenheim Palace.

"The students will begin student teaching assignments on January 3. They have all been observing and participating in the British schools. Then they will finish up on February 15, in time to return to the U.S. on the 16th."

Successful White House Conference On Youth

The 1971 White House Conference on Youth was the first White House Conference devoted to the concerns of young people.

A 310-page report to the President includes approximately 550 recommendations from the 1,500 delegates to last April's meeting in Estes Park, Col., covering subjects as wide-ranging as day-care centers and extra-territorial exploration.

"You may not agree with all 550 recommendations of the delegates," Stephen Hess, chairman of the conference said, "but their proposals are certainly provocative and are well worth discussion and debate in classrooms and community meetings."

The Conference was called by the President almost two years ago in an attempt to separate the concerns of youth aged 14 to 24 from those of children, whose problems were aired at the White House Conference on Children in Washington last December.

The Conference began work on ten areas, from foreign policy to values, ethics and culture, by assigning adult and youth co-chairmen to oversee the preparation of advisory reports to the delegates.

When the Conference convened the delegates used these reports to draft their own recommendations, and resolved that a report be submitted to them a year later on the progress of implementing their requests.

"The President directed all departmental secretaries and agency heads to appoint liaison officers who would coordinate a government-wide response to the Conference proposals," Hess writes in the report's introduction.

A Conference spokesman said last week that this report is well underway in the 11 cabinet departments and 14 independent agencies, and will be included in the April report to the delegates.

The Conference report has also been sent to 26,000 "institutional leaders"—businesses, unions, churches, mass media, foundations, schools, etc. These institutions will fill out a questionnaire on their plans for acting on pertinent recommendations, and a summary will be prepared in time for next spring's report.

In the eight months since April 22, when the Conference ended, at least two recommendations have taken effect, according to the spokesman.

First, the President's ACTION agency, established July 1, fulfilled a Conference wish that the Peace Corps and VISTA be merged into one volunteer agency.

Second, the National Endowment for the Arts has appointed youth members to its Art Advisory Panels at the Conference's recommendation.

"Most recommendations were in the form of proposed legislation," the spokesman said. "So, Congress has had no chance to pass any laws implementing those ideas since the Conference."

Copies of the Report to the President can be obtained for $2.50 each from the Superintendent of Documents, Government Printing Office, Washington, D.C.

Rehabilitation

I tend to forget.

As I sit through classes in sociology, as I talk humanism in my student-oriented world, as I ponder What I Want To Be When I Grow Up after college, as I write for this college newspaper, I tend to forget that not everybody between the ages of 18 and 25 to college. Some young people aren't in academia because they've chosen other alternatives. Or because other alternatives. Or because other alternatives have chosen them.

MILWAUKEE, WISC. — Atop a factory laden city, atop a high hill, atop a huge new building, lie hundreds of prostrate young bodies. There is no noise on the top floor except the sound of an old movie on the community TV, the sound of an occasional doctor's diagnosis. There is no laughter. Very little talking. It's not a scene out of Marcus Welby. It's the real thing.

Down the hall in a starched white room lies a young graduate who will never see, speak, hear, taste again. Vegetable. He just lies in bed and thinks. He nothing else. Nearby, a kid in a bed chats with a guest. His head is propped on three pillows and he talks animatedly. A nurse wheels a sleeping patient to a therapy room. He can't move anything below his neck.

They're all young. They're all our age. And they're all quadraplegics. Paralyzed from their neck down, they walk with their talk, they run with their ears, they move with their eyes. From the neck down it's just the neck down. Their legs are shrunken, their hands just slightly quiver. They may never move again.

They did it for their country.

They had not chosen to go to college. Now they have few choices left.

I visited the Milwaukee VA hospital recently. I wandered up and down hallways of the spinal injury ward and asked the Vietnam veterans there what was important to them. They often talked like elderly men in rest homes — reminiscing about their war years or months. Because they have little else to do. Except wait till they get better. If . . .

"What's important to me?" said a 26-year old veteran who'd been in this hospital for a year and a-half. "The war is important to me. I totally agree with it. If I could get out of this chair, I'd go back tomorrow and take care of them. I'm waiting for the day I can go fighting again. America's given me everything I've got."

A long-haired 22-year old sat up in his bed. A sign that read "Love" hung over his head. "I'm not mad or bitter at anybody. I'm just disabled. It just happened. My country said go in there and so I did. I was brought up to believe not to kill, but sometimes you have to kill to bring right. I'm happy . . . I'm happy to be back here. Yeah . . . When I came back, my buddy took me out — and he didn't care if I was disabled or not."

They talk about student protests. Surprisingly, as pro-war as they are, they feel that students should protest the war if they're against it. "They're protesting to get out of the war," one said. "That's what we're fighting for. It's a free country."

"Nobody likes to get killed," another said. "But burning flags is hypocritical. If I saw anyone burning a flag, I would have to shoot him. A lot of men died for that flag. If you can't believe in your country, you don't belong. Get out."

"What's important to me now is that I'd like to go back to school," said a dark-haired, good-looking young veteran hunched over in a wheel chair. "I want to work with people, to become a psychologist. I want to be able to cope. I want to get back into society."

"The war? I never believed in killing people. I had to kill people to survive. I think about it a lot. How would it feel to you?" And then he began to cry.

They all want to "get back into society." But until then, they live in a strange society which is a curious combination of day-to-day rehabilitation activities, the disabled people who surround them, their memories, and their hopes for the future.

But what they don't know might hurt them. "Many of them don't know how serious they are injured," a doctor at the hospital said. "Many will be here for years. They have many conventional dreams — maybe go to school, get a job, get married, have children. They don't know, however," he said sighing, "that they most likely won't be able to fulfill that dream. We don't tell them. It would be too shattering."

It's quiet. They don't talk much. Their worlds are basically lonely. When they do talk about the war, it's in glowing patriotic terms, possibly trying to justify their own disabilities — so that it shouldn't have been for nothing. Many talk eagerly about going back to fight in Vietnam — as if, once there, they'll be whole again.

Without the war too. As students, with Newsweek and news. We often talk all about it as if we know all about it. Without these non-students, residing with a life-long lease on the top floor of a Milwaukee VA hospital, do know all about the war. They are the war.

It could've been me. I tend to forget.
