Survey Reveals Interesting Facts About LHS Freshmen

State "teachers" colleges are obsolete. Pennsylvania did away with them over ten years ago.

Although many Commonwealth residents still refer to them as "teachers" colleges, Pennsylvania's 14 state colleges and university have long outgrown their parochial role while expanding their academic programs beyond teacher education.

Each state college continues to provide educational opportunities for residents of surrounding areas, but all are now drawing students from across the state and from out-of-state. No longer does the state college exist simply to "train public school teachers" for the county in which it is located.

According to a recent survey of freshmen entering Lock Haven State, more than half came from communities 100 to 500 miles from the college. While most come from small, rural towns, only 23 percent live within a 50 mile radius of Lock Haven and many come from the urban areas around Philadelphia, and Harrisburg.

According to Mr. George Rhodes, acting dean of students, "Lock Haven State has particular appeal to students with outstanding interests and accomplishments in athletics and sports." Rhodes found that the athletic and teacher education programs were primary considerations in the selection of LHS by the freshmen.

While half the freshmen have indicated a desire to become professional educators, an equal number are enrolled in the arts and sciences degree programs.

Rhodes' survey revealed the family income of 60 percent of the freshmen was in the $8,000 to $11,000 bracket, with ten percent of the parents having an income under $8,000. One-fourth indicated their parents' occupation as businessmen, with another one-fourth as skilled or semi-skilled workers. Three-fourths of the parents had a high school education or more.

Rhodes found that more than half the freshmen intend to complete their baccalaureate program and go on to graduate study. He noted that the majority of the freshmen "intend to be productive workers and value the establishment of a home and rearing of a family."

Crucible Seeking Student Work; May 15 Is Out

The Crucible, Lock Haven State College's literary publication, is slated for release in September, 1973. The distribution of this journal was originally set for May 15, the first day of finals. Staff members, however, are postponing distribution to insure widespread student exposure to their publication.

The cover of this year's collection of student prose and poetry will be commercially printed. It will contain a poster insert also to be commercially handled.

Any students wishing to submit work to the Crucible may drop it off in Russell Hall to Mr. Stewart or Mr. Nicholson.

Attorneys Pushing Berry Case; Hoping for End of This Month

The state will hear the case of former Lock Haven State College faculty member, Barbara Berry, in her civil rights action against officials of the college. Attorneys for Miss Berry, Campana and Ambrose, Williamsport, are pushing for court action by the end of this month. If the plaintiff's case does not make it to the courts by this time, it will be slated for the June session.

Now at Towson State College in Maryland, Miss Berry was employed at Lock Haven State College from September, 1969 until May, 1972 as an assistant professor in the school of health, physical education and recreation. Her annual salary was $11,800.

Miss Berry, who holds a bachelors degree and a masters degree, was informed that her contract as a teacher at the college would be terminated in May, 1972.

The plaintiff seeks payment of her salary since May 31, 1972; payment of all attorneys fees and court costs, payment of damages and the opportunity for a hearing in which to respond to the reasons for her dismissal.

Deputy Attorney General Mark Widoff granted the on-campus hearing which was held February 21. The hearing board granted Miss Berry the relief she requests in federal court after reviewing allegations she made in her federal complaint.

Miss Berry charges officials of the college with denial of her Constitutional rights under due process of law. "The college gave the reason for dismissal saying that she is not a good teacher. This is not true. She is a good teacher. Barbara Berry has been denied her Constitutional rights under due process of law."

A NOTE FROM THE EDITOR

Contrary to popular belief, the Eagle Eye is not being fickle or temperamental in its choice of publication size. Because of a contract agreement made before the start of the new smaller page size, we are obligated to print the Kodak advertisement (see back page) the size it appears. For this reason, the EE was printed in its old style today. This will occur once next month also but unless otherwise stated, publication will remain in its small, multiple-page format.

1500 See Immaculata Cop Women's Tourney

Little Immaculata College of Pennsylvania won the Eastern Mid-Atlantic Regional Women's Basketball Tournament championship Saturday afternoon at Lock Haven State's Thomas Fieldhouse with a 60-53 victory over East Stroudsburg State College.

Both teams will now advance to the National tournament to be held at Queens College, Flushing, N.Y. on March 22, 23, and 24. At this tourney Immaculata will be defending its National title won at last years event held in Bloomington, Illinois.

West Chester State, defending Regional champions, defeated Federal City College of Washington, D.C., 55-43 in a battle for third place. The Ramettes had lost the opportunity to repeat as tournament winners in the semi-finals losing to East Stroudsburg, 59-53.

In the consolation bracket championship contest Trenton State topped Towson State of Maryland, 51-40. The new Jersey school after losing in the opening round to Ursinus College, 72-46, came back with wins over Temple University, 80-36, Morgan State, 66-51 and Towson to wrap up the consolation title.

Immaculata, led by freshman sensation Marianne Crawford, a 5-foot-5 playmaker, and high scoring center Theresa Shank rolled over Towson State, 66-53, University of Maryland, 73-54, and Federal City College, 56-46, to reach the finals.

East Stroudsburg, behind the brilliant performances of Polly Case and Shirley Braine, earned a shot at the title with victories over Temple University, 74-49, Ursinus College 42-40, and the 59-53 decision over arch-rival West Chester in the semi-finals.

The three-day 23 game tournament with action at both Thomas Fieldhouse and Zimmerli Gymnasium was well attended by basketball fans throughout the four state area with 1,500 at the championship game.

These three young men just made the discovery of a lifetime. The oldest is 34.

Remember when young people could get ahead in business simply by growing old? It was a good system for those with a little talent and a lot of patience, but today's technology moves too fast to wait for seniority.

At Kodak, our extensive involvement in basic research has made the need for fresh, young thinking more pressing than ever. So we hire the best new talent we possibly can. Then we do both of us a favor by turning them loose on real problems, and giving them the freedom and responsibility they need to solve them.

That's how three Kodak scientists in their early thirties just made a breakthrough in liquid lasers, developing an organic dye laser with a continuous beam. Their discovery means more than just a new kind of laser. It means a whole range of new laser applications, in fields from medicine to communications.

It was the kind of discovery most men and women work a lifetime for. Yet these young men still have most of their lifetimes ahead of them.

Why do we give young men and women so much freedom and responsibility? Because it's good business, and we're in business to make a profit. But in furthering our own business interests, we also further society's interests. And that's good.

After all, our business depends on society. So we care what happens to it.
