Former LHU student runs for city treasurer

Scott Evans Eagle Eye Staff Reporter

Most Lock Haven University students know Patrick Johnson as a student, and former treasurer and vice president of the Student Cooperative Council on campus, but few know that he is running on the Democratic ticket for the office of Lock Haven City treasurer.

Johnson grew up in nearby Woolrich and is a 1997 graduate of Lock Haven High School.

Johnson said there was supposed to be a voter registration drive on campus but was cancelled because of the September 11 terrorist attacks.

"Students need a presence in city government," Johnson said.

It's been 20 years since an LHU student has run for a city position.

LHU student James Manser is also running in this year's election under the Republican ticket for city council.

Johnson spoke of the apparent separation between the city, its residents and the University students.

"The university is the future of the city," he said. our size have a state university in it, and the city need to take advantage of that."

AIDS quilt returns to Lock Haven

Sumer Buttorff Eagle Eye Staff Reporter

The presentation of the AIDS quilt and the host of events surrounding its arrival communicated messages of awareness to students, faculty, and other participants earlier this week.

Some partook in the events because they've lost loved ones, while others gathered to show their sup-

The events, sponsored by the social work club, residence hall association and the student cooperative council, began on Sunday and ran until Tuesday evening.

A portion of the AIDS quilt including 160 panels, each measuring 6 feet by 3 feet and sewn into groups of eight, were on display in Thomas Field House.

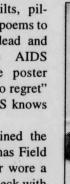

Marlin Snyder, the director the of Susquehanna Valley Chapter of the AIDS Memorial Quilt said, "The panels are the same size as a coffin to give families the closure they couldn't get otherwise." Snyder said at last count there were a total of 5,500 panels being displayed all over the US.

Each panel memorializes one life lost to the epidemic. The memoirs are decorated with flowers, balloons, and doves, favorite poems and songs, as well as, treasured tee shirts and baseball caps.

Unlike last year, volunteers and social work students created quilts, pillows, posters, and poems to recognize those dead and to communicate AIDS awareness. One poster read, "Don't live to regret" and another "AIDS knows no race."

"It bothers me knowing that he died by himself," she said. "He didn't know what was going on. At that time [1980's], doctors didn't even know what was going on."

Food services, vacant positions discussed at SCC meeting

The Lock Haven University Student Cooperative Council (SCC) met to discuss food services and the appointment of two vacant executive board positions and two senate positions.

Dressed as a vampire, Speaker of the Senate Joe Domkowski swore in Melissa Hassler and Natalie Haas into senate. Hassler will represent Russell Hall, and Haas will represent off-campus students.

SCC President Tiffany Smith recommended to senate to appoint Darrick Harr and Michael Richards to the two vacant executive board positions. By a unanimous decision, Harr was appointed PUB Administrator and Richards as Information Systems Task Force SCC Public Relations chair Elizabeth Bollinger reported that two different flyers were being run throughout campus to boost awareness about the SCC. The committee is also seeking to advertise on campus radio and televison.

Food Services chairperson Heather Camp reported on meetings her committee had with representatives from the Eagle Wing Snack Bar and Bentley Dining Hall. There were concerns that the lettuce was bad, as well as the congestion in the Eagle Wing when waiting for food. The lettuce problem has been solved, and the committee made suggestions to have students hold numbers when waiting for their food to alleviate congestion.

At Bentley, representatives are asking all vegetarian students to suggest vegetarian meals for them to serve because of the scarce choices of meals for vegetarians. They are also asking students to report any employees they see who are not wearing either gloves or hairnets while serving food.

Other students said they attended the vigil because they felt comfort through participation. Joe Burn, member of the social work club, said, "It makes me feel good to be here [at the AIDS events]. Many first time donors came out to do their part to help keep the blood supply up in the area.

According to Olshefskie, the new donors probably came out partly because of the terrorist attacks on September 11; however, the blood collected at the drive will stay in the northeast.

The blood supply in the area is currently in good shape, with levels where they're suppose to be, but there is always the need for regular donors.

Students make a difference at the Shamokin Dam

Matthew English Eagle Eye OP/ED Editor

Nearly 20 students of Lock Haven University traveled to Shamokin Dam to participate in Make A Difference Day, a national day of service, Friday, Oct. 26. Make A Difference Day is one of three days throughout the year, which are designated as national days of service, which emphasize volunteerism in the local community. While the trip to Shamokin Dam was conducted under the auspices of the Lock Haven University branch Americorps and comprised mostly of Americorps members, there were also several students attending who were not affiliated with any volunteer organiza-

The two van loads of volunteers arrived at the park near dusk Friday. They quickly set up their tents and prepared a fire. Although it was cold, people diverted their attentions from the weather by playing games, making smores, and getting to know each other.

Early the next day, the Lock Haven contingent was joined by two other volunteer groups, one from Penn State University and another from the local community. There were roughly 50 volunteers in all. It was decided that fifteen or so volunteers would work on the construction of new playground equipment while the remaining volunteers would set to work on clearing roughly two acres of forest of brush and debris in order to beautify the woods.

As the day and the projects progressed the weather softened, allowing brief instances of warmth and light. The individuals from all the organizations involved work diligently on their respective projects, and people were also able to mingle and meet individuals they may not have otherwise had the opportunity under other circumstances.

By the end of the day, a significant portion of the forest had been cleared, and the playground equipment was near fin-

The large turnout of volunteers, despite rough climate, hopefully sent an encouraging message to the local community that there is a strong dedication to public service and volunteerism at Lock Haven University.

Anyone who is interested in participating with upcoming volunteer projects, including participation in local Habitat for Humanity projects, is welcome to drop by the Office of Community Service, room 133 Smith

RANDOM MUSINGS:

What kind of friend are you?

Taj Brown The Eagle Eye

Some things in life are just inevitable. And, as much as we'd all like for everything to be perfect- for the things we enjoy to never change and the things we hate to change ever so quickly, that's just not the way life goes.

There are times when we have to be uncomfortable and uneasy, times when we have to change, even if it is against our own will. There are times when we have to make hard decisions...

...especially when it comes to those people we call friends.

I think friendship is a very odd phenomenon, mostly because it seems there are a lot of different interpretations of what it means to be a friend. For some, friendship is about confidence and trust. For others, a friend isn't much more than someone to hang out with on the weekend. Some people have many acquaintances and very few friends, while others seem to live the open-book-life with many, many friends.

And to make matters all the more complicated, what happens as you grow and your interests change? Doesn't your circle of friends change too? Do friends grow with you in these situations, or do friends grow apart?

I think it's our different understandings of what friendship really is that makes the subject so wild. Maybe you've said, 'you should never allow a friendship to be compromised for anyone reason.' Or, perhaps you live by the creed: 'friends come and friends go, no big deal.'

Well, I think it is a big deal. A very big deal.

I write that because I, for one, believe there is a measure of responsibility that comes along with calling someone a friend. There are few things that are as valuable

There are times when...we have to change, even when it is against our own will.

as a good friend. True that. But, there are also few things that are as hard.

I am officially coining this semester, "the semester of shade." Very different from any other semester I've known here at LHU, there are more and more people becoming more and more shady everyday. Sure, I've been accused of being shady once or twice... okay, maybe three times, but that's always been a jovial type of shade. Never malicious or vindictive. But some people are taking the word "shady" to a whole new Unfortunately this new level of shade knows no bounds. Recently, I've been seeing more and more groups of friends be shady towards each other. And that is just plain triflin'.

Sure, we all have our shady ways... but wouldn't you like to believe that when you call someone a friend, that transcends all the shade in the world? I would, and I do.

Friendship is about being honest and sensitive, at the same time. It's about integrity: refusing to use friends for personal gain. It's about not taking the easy road, but taking the higher (and often much harder) road, by respecting and protecting your friends. That's the responsibility of friendship.

It's inevitable that our friends are going to change. There's no escaping that. But it isn't inevitable that we have to be shady to our friends, whether new or old. Friendship doesn't have to be eternal in order to be genuine.

Being a good friend is both uncomfortable and uneasy at times. It does mean making tough decisions. But more importantly, it means that you are a friend. And that is what life is all about.

And that begs the question: what kind of friend are

Letters to the Editor

Ruminations of a road running communication professor

Dear Editor,

I am unimpressed by the lamentations I read occasionally in the Chronicle of Higher Education from senior professors who want me to feel sorry for them because they no longer are considered "cool" by their students. These professors are saddened because they don't know such things as their students' latest slang, pop artists or film stars. They feel their life is somehow devalued because they have lost touch with the culture of their young students.

I have a succinct message for these floundering instructors: LSD. No not the drug, long slow distance. It works for My life with LSD began in August of 2000 when I walked to the mailbox on a hot, muggy day and found an attractive brochure that seduced me at first to a 30-minute, three-days-aweek, self-inflicted torture, which has extended itself this year to hour-long sessions. The Haven University Foundation announced its first 5K LHUP homecoming race open to all comers. Little did I know then that this brochure meant I would spend the next year in more pain and agony than I ever before had experienced in my life.

I immediately began a mental calculation. A distance of 5 kilometers is equal to 3.1 miles. Although I never before had run a race of any kind, I had walked four miles a day, five days a week for nearly 12 years. I should be able to run three miles shouldn't I.

The next day, I excitedly donned my only set of sneakers and set off precisely at 6 a.m. to run down the length of the Lock Haven levee because it is nicely measured in one-quarter mile segments. After making it to the mile and one-half mark in nine minutes, I was forced to stop, completely out of breath.

Undettered, I just continued my effort by walking a quarter mile and running a quarter mile several times until I had completed the entire four and onehalf mile round trip.

After that dream-dimming dose of reality, I rethought my goals and determined to add one-quarter mile a week to my run. In five weeks, I would be up to an uninterrupted threemile run. The race, however, was only four weeks away.

Upon reciting my predicament to the well-known, longtime runners at the University, I received the same, entirely unwelcomed, three-word advice: "Slow down dummy."

I heard the same words from Dr. Jim Smalley, Associate Dean of Enrollment services; Dr. Brad Black, Chair of the Physical Education Department; Dr. Wayne Allison, Chari of the Recreation Department; Alan Anderson. Director Affirmative Action; Jack Fisher, Former LHU Head Football Coach; Dr. Dave Bower, Associate Professor of Health Sciences, and Jim Dolan, Associate Professor of Health Sciences and former national, Division-I, 10-mile champion.

I was told a six-minute mile pace was for youngsters under 40. Geezers like me, nearly 60, should cruise at about an eight to ten-minute mile.

Reflecting on this advice today, I recall the recent words of Alan Webb, the first high school student since 1970 to run a mile in less than four minutes. He addressed a sports editors' seminar I attended in Washington, D.C., at the American Press Institute in April, 2001. When he was told to slow down so that he could run farther, he said, "It is, after all, a race."

I wish I had thought of that snappy response, but, alas, my mind is no quicker than my legs. As a result, I took the unanimous advice of all the local running experts and slowed down.

Guess what? I went instantly to a continous five-mile run. Slowing down worked. At least it allowed me to run farther.

Gradually, I settled into about a seven-minute-mile pace, setting an inner goal of running the first LHU 5K in under 22

When race day arrived, one of my female students showed up; she was a former high school basketball player. I worried. Would I embarrass myself by trailing her badly? It was too late to pull out. My wife, Beverly, was there—as she is for all my races—with her cameras to record the event for our four grandchildren (ages 4 to 8), who, bless their hearts, see nothing unusual in a balding old man running a race, and who fully expect me to beat all the other runners, no matter what their age. I finished in a disappointing 22 minutes and 27 seconds, for a 7-minute, 14-seconds-permile pace. I was first in my class (55-59) and 39th out of 117 runners. Decent, but not Acceptable, I spectacular.

My student, it turns out, had not done any training for the race, so I was able to finish before her. She was very gracious and sincerely congratulated me.

I have run several races since, eventually doing a 5K in 20:37, a 6:39 pace and an 8K (5 miles) at a 6:51 pace, which puts me in the top ten percent nationwide for runners in my age group. I also ran the famous Utica Boilermaker 15K (9.3 miles) in 1:10:15, where I finshed 11th our of 99 in my age group (9 seconds behind the 10th place finisher and three minutes behind the first place), and 1564th out of more than 9000 runners.

After all that sweat-as much as five pounds in a single run-you know what? I don't care if I don't know my students' latest slang, pop artists or film stars. I don't even know the names of the TV shows they watch because the only thing I watch on network television anymore is the news and Norm Abrams.

Nevertheless, my students don't disrespect me for this ignorance because they don't care that I don't know. I can tell you this, however; they are impressed that I can outrun 99 percent of them over a distance longer than three miles. All it takes is a lot of LSD.

A second-round knock out, that is what Dave got for challenging me to a fight in last week's article. It took just over four minutes for me to knock him out. The fight took place in an undisclosed location and was witnessed by many people, although all asked to remain nameless. If you missed it, all you need to know is I won the fight, but Dave won the war. My lack of character and style swung the crowd in his favor early, and my plain dress was the straw that broke the back as I got booed out the door after the fight was over. Calvin: "This drawing I did obviously challenges knownothing complacency of those who prefer safe, predigested, bucolic, genre scenes. It firmly establishes me on the cutting edge of avant-garde."

Hobbes: "Don't you have to wear silly clothes then?"

Saturday morning I woke up a bit sore from the prior night's exercises, but was excited to rise, I had a purchase to make. I had decided to buy a new bicycle and the drive to State College gave me ample time to consider which bike I was going to purchase. I ran through the choices: a nice, new, state of the art, 21-speed, fully loaded, ass kicker of a bike; or a used, run of the mill, 10 speed, 1980's relic. The obvious advantages to having a new bike were clear in my mind as were the price tags of each. The new bike would cost me just under $600, where the used bike was much less pricey, coming in at just over $20.

At first when making my decision, I took into consideration only the quality of the product in comparison to the price. The used bike would give me a bit of that character and style the crowd assured me I was missing, would get me from point A to point B and back (most of the time), and would only cost a small amount. The new bike would get me from point A to point B in a much more comfortable, quicker fashion but would cost a large amount. I fooled around with the comparison for a while before it finally struck me that I was not taking into consideration the correct issues. I pulled over at a local coffee shop to clear my head.

While sitting at the counter of the shop, I noticed someone who looked quite familiar to me. I did a double take before I was assured it was the one and only Mike Tyson. I approached him and sat down, asking his advice on what I should do about my bike situation (how could I pass up the opportunity). His answer was simple:

"Do ya have anything else to spend ya money on?" he squeaked.

"No, I don't really have any other expenses right now," I replied, still stunned by how high this huge man's voice was.

"Well, then buy da expensive one stupid, money is made to be spent, ya know," he countered.

I excused myself, thanking Mike for his help. I never knew an evil person could be so much help.

I made my way to the bike shop and bought a brand spanking new bike for $600. It was beautiful and I decided to test it out as soon as I got home. I started in the direction of a friend's house, though it wasn't long before I realized I didn't have any so I just wandered around aimlessly, maybe I could become an artist. I rode past the old high school on Church Street, wondering if people understood the value of its existence. I mean it played a large part in producing me and for that alone it deserves credit, I decided, in my new artistic mind. After realizing what I was thinking I decided I didn't want to be an artist anymore.

The old high school building has been the most hated spot of children and young adults for almost a century and people just seem to ignore that it is part of reality. I can't believe people are so wrapped up in their personal lives that they don't think about things like that. Stupid Americans. I rode home after my adventures on my new bike. I decided not to give it a name, too artsy. I think "my bike" will suffice.

I'm not real sure what the point of this article is. But I guess that is the new way of the editorial page; write an article no one can understand so you don't offend anyone. Maybe I was underscoring my point from last week by telling you I made the choice to buy an expensive bike. Or maybe there was some hidden meaning in all that artsy stuff I was talking about. You don't know do you? That's good, neither do I.

On a side note, I hope all you readers out there enjoy Dave and I explaining to you what we think and why we think it. If you don't, please feel free to write a letter to either of us, and be explicit, four letter words are encouraged. It would do you good to read the articles and take into consideration what it is we are talking about rather then just hating the article itself. I guess I'm not being too artistic in this paragraph; maybe I'm just a Stupid American.

So the other columnist and I are snoozing on politics, bombs and social welfare for a change. His fist in my face somehow made me change my tune. And as for the whooping he gave me, I paint only one word of description; stars-gene. That's the concept of seeing stars after someone socks you in the face.

I was riding Princess, a cheaply made 24-inch ten speed and that's really what this article is about. Just my bike, and me you know. And since Shep and I can argue about anything, we chose to spiff and squeal about our bikes.

Shep lives on the edge with his holley-four barrel double sprocket, KC accessory pack, and dual exhaust, but I prefer a more modestly priced unit. Gluttony is the devil.

There's so much to know about bikes, like how to tell if it's a boy's bike or a girl's bike. There's a little bar that's supposed to let you know. A boy's bike is not structured around the anatomy like one might think. So it's easiest to tell by looking for that crazy bar. If you find that and you still don't know, then just look at the cat riding the bike. Few will stray outside the lines of gender when selecting a bike, even if it is purchased at Goodwill.

Bike gender is almost directly representative to the world's male/female population. Fifty-three percent of all bikes are females and only 46 percent are males. The other one percent not accounted for are bikes that have had their bars removed so that it is impossible to tell. It's also wise to note that 64 percent of all bikers are better than average at biking and that 67.4 percent of all Op/Ed statistics are made up on the spot.

Last night I had a terrible dream. I rode my bike to a local coffee shop and I saw Henry Miller eating an 'everything' bagel. Who eats an 'everything' bagel? Maybe that's why I could never finish his books. So he's telling Charles Bukowski where to find some vintage clothing really cheap, and I know Bukowski was just looking for the pub.

This scares me, and I start peddling princess as fast as she can go. Her bolts are rattling away and the chain is clanking. In my peripheral I see signs everywhere saying, "Narrators wanted; Op/Ed columnists need not apply!" I mean, they're everywhere! And I'm thinking, am I going to be out of a job? Doesn't anyone care that I'm a Green! And then my bike swells, and rises, and the sky pours to white.

Princess and I must have crashed because now I'm in a room and there's a man taking care of me. His beard is long and white, and I have this crazy feeling like I know he's god or something. It's strange how god doesn't have a nick name. I guess it's because it is only three letters. We would have to call him G-man or something and that name has already been

My head is dizzy and I open my eyes quickly the next morning. I shut them again to see if my dream still remains. Nothing; only phosgene.

Companies cash in on patriotism

Knight Ridder

In the aftermath of the Sept. 11 attacks, Madison Avenue wasted little time devising ways to draw customers to their products. Some of these efforts have bordered on the unseemly.

United Airlines is running a commercial about a firefighter who boarded a recent flight. The advertisement says that once the crew found out there was a firefighter on board, they placed him in first class and the captain announced, "There's a hero on board." The commercial ends with the sentence, "People are getting back on board United."

A Chevrolet commercial shows dramatic scenes of firefighters before a shot of a highway. The advertisement ends by flashing the patriotic words, "Keep America Moving.'

Even Lee jeans has gotten in on the action. A Lee doll is featured in a commercial with a Band-Aid on his arm and a Red Cross sticker that says, "I gave blood."

In a radio ad, Toys-R-Us encourages parents to bring their children into the store to color a flag.

The Food Network is running promotional commercials to encourage people to cook together to relieve stress and to watch their programming. The ad states, "We're all feeling a little overwhelmed, but we have to keep going."

Newcastle Beer has advertising posters in bars that say, "Drink Newcastle to help the victims of September 11." This type of ad is now a common corporate tactic. The consumer is told that part of Chevy cruising down a scenic the company's profits will be donated to a Sept. 11 relief fund. Corporations should not prey on Americans' desire to help the victims' families by turning the tragedy into an advertising ploy.

> The New York Stock Exchange is now running commercials that end with, "Let Freedom Ring." It's associating the civil-rights movement with the bell that ends each day's market speculation.

> These ads want us to associate patriotism with consumerism. But there is something tawdry about it, as when fast-food chains like Arby's and McDonalds placing "God Bless America" on their outdoor signs right above "99 cent Double Cheeseburger Special."

> These ads demean the memory of the more than 5,000 people who lost their lives on Sept. 11.

Just | hink!

If your ad was placed here it would be seen by nearly 4000 students and faculty.

A "haunting" good time from University Players

Ken Taylor Eagle Eye Staff Reporter

As the elevator doors opened, there she sat, rocking back and forth playing with her doll. Our mysterious guide tells us she was the little girl who escaped from the grave. She sat in the corner humming a tune without knowing we were watching here.

The elevator stops, the master invites us in to a studio full of haunting surprises. On October 28, The University Players presented their Second Annual Haunted Studio.

As we walked through the studio, we were entranced into a world of the macabre. While we walked to the entrance of the studio guests were greeted by the screams of people who were buried alive. After entering the studio, guests were invited to dinner by a psychotic mother whose daughter hanged herself after coming home too late after the prom. While walking through the studio, visitors were closely followed by a person who was living among the dead. At the end of the tour, guests were "thanked by the spirits" for coming to the studio. Upon reaching for a piece of candy, a hand grabs yours. Truly, this was a very bone-chilling experience and a fine production by The University Players.

In response to the overwhelming participation by students and the community, the Players intend to have the Haunted Studio for two days next year. All funds raised from the Haunted Studio go to fund

Incubus makes best album yet

Evelyn McDonnell Knight Ridder Newspapers

Hybrids work when disparate influences are integrated, not stuck together willy-nilly. That's why so much rap-metal sounds like bison snorting over geese honking.

Incubus, whose guitarist Mike Einziger recently railed against rap-metal in Spin, blends its sounds together, instead of welding. The band's third and most musically advanced album opens with skittering trip-hop beats played by drummer Jose Pasillas and echoed in singer Brandon Boyd's stuttered, whispered scatting. Trendy enough, except Incubus is a hard-rock band, as the KERRANG of big guitars quickly makes clear.

"Nice to Know You" is a strange, adventurous amalgam; lyrically, the song is at once hopeful and dismissive. Incubus, with the help of producer Scott Litt (R.E.M.), is looking beyond the angst of nu-metal - not quite leaving the genre's constraints, but certainly pushing them out. Flutes, Japanese ko-kyu, lyrics about life's circularity and "temporaryism"- you could diminish it as nu-AGE metal. But you should give it credit as the maturation of a music not known for its maturity.

Boyd has been lauded for being in touch with his sensitive, "feminine" side. "Call it woman's intuition, but I think I'm onto something here," the Bjork fan sings on "Just a Phase," a song not just about love, but about pop. Incubus isn't phase-shifting - it's forging. Not every track on "Morning View" (named after the Malibu coastal house the group turned into a studio) catches the dawn's light. But at least Incubus is looking.

Kevin Spacey fans should be pleased with "K-Pax"

Chris Hewitt Knight Ridder Newspapers

An alien who comes to America to observe us and comment wisely on our failings, the main character in "K-Pax" is the sort of showy, emotional role most actors can't resist.

Most should, though, because these characters are inevitably hollow. Prot, the main guy in "K-Pax," is either an alien or a troubled man who believes he's an alien. Either way, he's given plenty of scenes that show how different from (and superior to) most humans he is, interspersed with moments when he cracks us up with his whimsical innocence and others where, in interviews with a kind therapist, he moves us with the depth of his psychic scars. In other words, it's a 'ot like "Nell," except Kevin Spacey's intelligent, subdued performance as Prot is way more compelling that the ditzo cracker Jodie Foster played.

"K-Pax" (does anyone else think the title sounds like the next superstar who's doing a duet with Missy Elliott?), is nowhere as schmaltzy and fake as "Nell" because it's directed with taste and restraint by Iain Softley ("The Wings of the Dove"). The movie has a hushed quality, like the sound of a muted trumpet, which offsets some of the pushily sentimental material (Prot's fellow patients,

Steven Tyler says just push `patriotic'

Brian McCollum Knight Ridder Newspapers

If you don't believe America is a different place these days, just chat with Steven Tyler.

The Aerosmith vocalist certifiably one of the 1970s' most decadent rock n' roll wild men - has wrapped himself in the red, white and blue. And he has some unexpected pronouncements to make.

Like this one: "We need to go back to the way it was 30 years ago, when everybody had Grandma and Grandpa, and we were willing to pass moral judgments about right and wrong."

Or this: "We may need to change the way we think. As in Israel, I think there should be a mandatory draft, where you go away for the service of your country for three years."

Tyler, 53, relishes the idea of "'America the Beautiful,' flags in school, children respecting their hometown." He's all for sky marshals on airplanes, and he has some choice, non-newspaper words for terrorists. No pacifist counterculture senti-

Tyler - who quit drugs and alcohol several years ago talked with the Detroit Free Press as Aerosmith headed to its third Detroit show this year.

Q. Some readers may be startled to hear such conservative-sounding ideas coming from somebody like you.

A. Well, there's the American thinking: "How can he be saying this? He was a drug addict!" But (Sept. 11) brought me to my knees. It made me change. When that second airplane hit the building, we all changed. We need to get back to some serious thinking.

Q. Does your music maintain a vital role amid all this?

A. Well, I'm still also "Steven Tyler from Aerosmith," a guy who needs to celebrate that when the music plays, the channels change. It's that whole idea of "been working hard, now it's Friday night." Aerosmith is the fountain of youth. It's a time machine.

I was really concerned that Tuesday (Sept. 11) that we were supposed to play that Friday in Washington, D.C. We talked about it and finally canceled that weekend. Did we really want to go back in and play songs like "Mama Kin" and "Dude Looks Like a Lady" while people were burying their dead? But we did get on with business as usual, which is to rock out and forget about everything else.

Q. Your latest album ("Just Push Play") failed to match the sales success of other recent Aerosmith releases. Should we put much stock in that?

A. Nothing is ever a barometer. Nothing is ever for sure except that this band has been around forever. (Laughs) ... We wanted to produce the record ourselves, so we did. And it only sold 2.5 million around the world. That's not bad, but it's not great.

Q. You've managed to maintain your upper range and projection well beyond the age most rock vocalists lose their potency.

A. It's very simple. We used to be on tour for a year-and-a-half, never taking time off. When we felt tired, bored, we'd take a little coke, have a drink. But you pay for it the next day onstage. The interesting thing is that I was never really singing. Yeah, I got it right on the records, in the studio, but you listen back to the live stuff, and it was godawful.

Now it's the dream tour. One day on, one day off. We're still going for a year-and-half stretch, but we get a day to recuperate. ... Now that I'm in it with my eyes open, it's rejuvenating. I sweat my ass off, and I'm in better shape than ever. And it's still so beautiful to look out and know that a song you wrote in your basement is moving all these

The men's and women's cross country teams hosted the PSAC championship last Saturday. Chris Cowan (L), Mike Trumbull and Jana Kauffman earned All-PSAC honors. In men's competition, Cowan finished fourth and was the top rookie runner, while Trumbull finished 12th for the Bald Eagles. On the women's side, Kauffman led LHU runners, finishing in the 11th position. Edinboro swept both team championships. The men's team finished fourth, while the women finished sixth overall.

Women's lacrosse fare well at fall tournament

The women's lacrosse team has been practicing together for a little over three weeks now, and already they are seeing improvement from last year.

The team traveled to Shippensburg last weekend to participate in a fall ball tournament, where it finished 2-1-1 overall.

went up against the host, Shippensburg. The team lost 3-4, despite goals put in by Diana Strizki (2) and Amy Richter. The offense was helped out with assists from Dina Lewis and Kim Hedden.

In the second game of the tournament, the Haven defeated West Chester, who was ranked No. 1 last year, 4-2. Scoring for the Haven in the contest were Jess Pease, Anne Marie Ritzell and Richter. Last year, the Bald Eagles lost to West Chester 4-20.

The Haven then went on to In the first game the Haven tie with Millersville, 3-3. Scoring in that game were Laura Lucchetto, Lewis and Ritzell.

> tournament the team went up Philadelphia against University, shutting them out 6-0. The Haven had a strong offensive showing, with four different players scoring goals. With Strizki, Richter (2), Ritzell (2) and Goody all scoring goals. Also contributing in assists were Hedden and Brown.

Goalkeeper Emily Gray had a good showing even though she was only in practice for seven days before the beginning of the tournament.

The team is already on the In its final game of the road to improving upon last season record of 1-11, 0-6

Two Bandgladesh national boxing coaches train with Bald Eagle boxers

Jon Parrish Eagle Eye Columnist

Two national Bangladesh boxing coaches are spending a week on campus training under Dr. Ken Cox and his Jayanta Majumder and Abu Sayed Khan Bulbul train the Bangladesh national team at the famed Mohammed Ali Boxing Stadium under the auspices of the Bangladesh Amateur Boxing Federation, in the capital city of Dhaka.

The visiting coaches came to the USA to study American boxing theory, tactics, and technique under elite USAB coaches Cox and Al Mitchell, the 1996 USA Olympic Coach.

Majumder and Bulbul spent last week studying under Mitchell at the U.S. Olympic Education Training Center at Northern Michigan University in Marquette, Mich.

Both Majumder and Bulbul had a very friendly meeting with University President Dr. Craig Dean Willis yesterday afternoon.

They have also been the houseguests of Dr. Zakir Hossain (Dept. of Sociology) Dr. Muhammad Khalequezzaman (Dept. of Geology), who are both natives of Bangladesh.

They also had dinner with Dr. James Bean (Dept. of Psychology) who has conducted research in recent years at the University of Dhaka in Bangladesh.

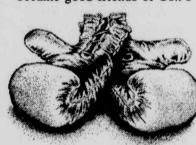

Boxing team captain and 2001 national 185 lb. Champion, Chuck Mussachio and the international students on the Bald Eagle boxing team treated the coaches to a real Italian home cooked spaghetti and meatball supper prepared by Mussachio.

On Tuesday, they traveled to the Altoona Boxing Club, coached by veteran John Robertson to observe three Haven boxers, John Stout, 125; Jeff Raymond, 156; and Miro Jelev, 195, spar against the top boxers from the Allegheny Mountain Association - USAB.

The coaches have also been working the corners for the Haven boxers during daily All-Comers sparring sessions.

Majumder and Bulbul became good friends of Cox's when he was in Dhaka in July teaching International Olympic Committee (IOC) Solidarity Boxing Coaches Certification Course at the Mohammed Ali Boxing Stadium.

According to Bulbul and Majumder it has been a lifelong dream of theirs to come to the USA and study amateur (Olympic Style) boxing techniques under USAB Elite (Level IV) coaches Cox and Mitchell.

"We have learned a great deal and have gained much information to take back to country," Majumder.

Bulbul said, "The experiences they are having in the USA have all been very positive and the student-boxers as well as the students and faculty they have met strolling around campus have been most helpful and especially friendly."

"It is our hope that [the Bangladesh Amateur Boxing Federation] can have many more fruitful experiences in future years with the American boxing community," said Majumder.

Dr. and Mrs. Cox will take them to Harrisburg this afternoon to watch the Red Land School High Harrisburg High School football game (their first) and then on to Atlantic City, NJ where they will visit Chuck Mussachio's dad's gym in Wildwood before they return home to Bangladesh.

Ringside Notes: Bangladesh boxing coaches were stranded in Dhaka, Bangladesh for several weeks because of the Trade Center bombing and were forced to cancel the USAB Coaches' Certification Clinic at the U.S. Olympic Training Center in Colorado Springs in September.

Dr. Cox hustled to get them situated at Marquette, Michigan and LHU plus visitations to four "grass roots" boxing gyms in Pa. and N.J.

Female boxers, Heather Joerg, 125; and Kim Schuetrum, 106; along with sub-novice boxer, Rob Sharples, 156, competed in the annual Philly Boxers Marathon last week-end in Philadelphia.

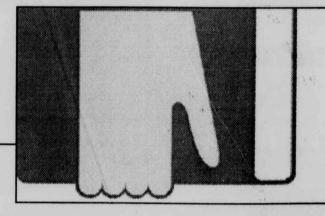

All three finished in the upper half of the 5-mile marathon. All money raised goes toward the Middle Atlantic Boxing Scholarship

All-Comers bouts are continuing daily in the Boxing Room with the season opener set for the Maryland Club in Baltimore on Nov. 8.

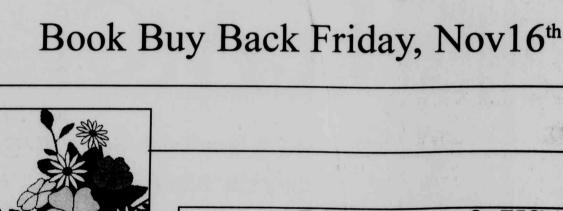

The match-ups will be announced by USNA's Jimmy McNally early next week. Expected to box will be John Stout, 132; Gus Pugliese, 139; Comanche Garcia, 147; Miro Jelev, 195; and Chuck Mussachio, 185.

Editor's note: There will be a picture of the coaches from Bangladesh printed in next week's edition.

Taylor worked the ball into the goalie box and fed Clarke who pounded the goal into the net from about eight yards out. That score would hold at the half.

Taylor would then net her two goals at 52:05 and 64:21 to give the Bald Eagles a 3-0 lead.

The first goal came off an assist from Brooke Rangi. Rangi fed Taylor, who slipped it past the IUP keeper. Taylor's second goal came after Becky Nichols sprinted down the sideline and fed Taylor, who then beat the IUP keeper again, this time in a one-on-one situation.

"Katie is a coaches dream," said Moore. "She's only 5'4", but the most of it is all heart. She's brave and she's a good little player. She comes off the field black and blue because of how hard she works. Nobody deserves it more than her. We know what she does, so it's great to see her get a couple."

Senior Erin McKasson ended the scoring when she scored off an assist from Adria Vitale at 84:32.

The game against Bloomsburg will be the second time the two teams have met this season. The first, on October 9 in Bloomsburg, ended in a 2-0 win for Lock Haven.

"We're ready to go," said Moore. "We don't fear Bloom and I'm sure they're ready for us. We have home field advantage and that's always a factor.

Hopefully we'll get some people to come out."

"We're confident because we know we can beat them," Moore said. "It's going to be close. It's one of those games where anything less than our best could be dangerous."

Lock Haven controls its own destiny with Nationals. A win over Bloomsburg is an automatic birth. A loss, and then it becomes a tender situation. Currently ranked first in the region, Lock Haven would have to see if they got in past second seeded Bloomsburg and third seeded Adelphi, who they lost to earlier this season, 2-0 on October 6.

The Bald Eagles are one step closer to achieving their season long goal of becoming national champions once again.

Led by a trio of superheroes on the offensive side and a stingy defense on the other side of the ball, The Haven looks to repeat National Champions.

In defeating East Stroudsburg University 4-0 at home Saturday night, The Haven earned back-toback PSAC Championships, as well as a birth into this weekend's NCAA Division National Championships at College Bentley Waltham, Mass.

PSAC Championship MVP Shannon Spease scorched the Warrior defense for 2 goals and 2 assists in the victory as Tara Beach stopped 6 shots to earn her 12th shutout of the season. Val George sandwiched her 2 goals between Spease's tallies in the first half of action.

The Haven will take on PSAC rival Stroudsburg again today at 5 p.m. This will mark the third game against the Warriors this year, with the Eagles winning both previous contests (1-0, 4-0).

A third victory over ESU will propel The Haven into the national championship for the second straight year.

The championship game will be played Sunday afternoon at 1 p.m.

This trip marks Lock Haven's 10th appearance in the national playoffs, a tournament in which the Eagles have enjoyed tremendous success, winning five titles in ten tries.

Lock Haven has been a very balanced squad, using the perfect mix of a highly talented offense and a stingy defense to find success.

The offense is led by PSAC leading scorer Shannon Spease's 62 points (25 g, 12 a).

She is complimented by Val George and Erika Grap. George posted 19 goals and 8 assists, while Grap added 14 goals and 7 assists.

As a defensive unit. The Bald Eagles have given up a mere 4.4 shots per game average while only allowing 6 goals all year. Tara Beach has a strong .250 goals against average.

Has Lock Haven established a field hockey dynasty? Will these superheroes come through?

"Tune in" next week to find out.

The Rock's other back Dorrian Glenn gained 153 yards and accounted for the game's other score.

Melvin Kirby paced the Bald Eagle ground game with 53 yards on 13 carries, and Maurice Walker added 25 yards on 13 carries.

Bill Witmer managed only 20 yards passing on 3-15 and an interception, and was sacked three times for a minus 23 yards rushing.

Defensively, Derrik Metz's 15 tackles led the team. Chad Koleno added 12 and Rob Carey contributed with 10.

Now 2-7, the Bald Eagles will have to regroup to play Clarion tomorrow. Clarion is coming off a heart-breaking overtime-loss to #3 IUP. The kickoff is set for 1 p.m. at the Jack.

Women soccer to play for conference title Eagle Eye Staff Reporter

Katie Taylor scored a pair of goals and added an assist to lead the women's soccer team to a 4-0 win over Indiana University of Pennsylvania in a PSAC semifinal match at McCollum Field.

This was the second time in three games that LHU had knocked off IUP. The first victory came on October 23 when the Bald Eagles won 3-0.

Next up for the squad is the PSAC final. Topseeded Lock Haven, twotime defending PSAC champions, will square off against second seeded Bloomsburg, who beat Edinboro 1-0 in the other semifinal. Game time is Sunday at 1 p.m., at McCollum Field.

Lock Haven started and finished strong, never allowing IUP into their zone. The Indians managed only three shots on goal in the game while facing 21 shots. Lock Freshman Andrew Battersby finished as the team leader in goals scored with 14. Dizdarevic followed with nine goals, four of them coming in the last two games. Junior John Schumann and freshman Nick Apostolou were tied with five assists for most on the squad. Goalies Paul Maguire and Swailes both played in 10 games. Maguire allowed 12 goals and posted a 1.4 g.g.a. Meanwhile Swailes let eight past, good enough for a 0.83 g.g.a.

As a team, the Bald Eagles out scored their opponents, 47-20, which included nine shutouts. They registered 287 shots Gablehouse had three on goal and scored 2.6 g.p.g. The Haven started out the season by winning their first seven games and only allowing one goal. They were ranked as high as No. 5 in the nation. The Bald Eagle volleyball team went 4-0 this week, winning the Lady Eagle Invitational, as well as a PSAC west contest against Clarion bringing its record to 23-10 overall, 6-1 PSAC West.

The Bald Eagles defeated Dowling College in the opening match of the tournament in three straight games, 30-25, 32-30 and 30-26.

Lauren Nuzum contributed some key kills towards the end of the first game that brought the Haven out on top.

All three games of the contest were close ones, but the Haven was able to keep them to a three-game match.

Leading the Haven was Kelli Crouch who had 14 kills. Also contributing kills were Nuzum, Beth Hackenburg and Amanda Snyder, all posting nine. Shana Fessette had 35 assists and a team-high 11 digs in the win.

In the second match of the tournament the Haven against up Southampton, totally dominating the court.

Kara Warnke led the Bald Eagles with 11 kills and five blocks. Other key contributors to the win and seven digs, Nuzum with eight kills and eight digs and Hackenburg with eight service aces. The team posted 17 service aces throughout the three game match.
