President emeritus Andruss dies in Bloomsburg at age 81

Harvey A. Andruss Sr., the man credited with keeping Bloomsburg State Teachers College alive during the Depression and World War II, died Thursday, Feb. 9, 1984, not far from the campus he loved and nurtured for more than 30 years.

Dr. Andruss, president of the college from 1939 to 1969, died at the Bloomsburg Hospital at 1:20 a.m. He had been a patient there since Dec. 30, and would have been 82 on Feb. 19.

His three decades of service was the longest tenure of any Bloomsburg college president.

"He provided leadership which kept the college viable during the difficult years of economic depression and wartime," said James H. McCormick, interim chancellor of the state education system and president at Bloomsburg State College until it became Bloomsburg University last summer.

"His foresight in planning the expansion of programs and facilities in the post-World War II period has enabled the college to accommodate the educational and cultural needs of countless Pennsylvania citizens."

Remembering 'The Andruss Years'

This issue of The Alumni Quarterly is respectfully dedicated to the memory of Dr. Harvey A. Andruss, president emeritus, and his commitment to Bloomsburg University.

Photographs of "The Andruss Years" appear throughout the issue.

Shortly after World War II began, student enrollment at what was then Bloomsburg State Teachers College dropped to a handful of civilian men and several hundred women.

The college might have been forced to close but Dr. Andruss — college president for only a few years and only in his 40s — was able to get Bloomsburg State designated as a Civilian Pilot Training Center.

The success of that program was followed by others for hundreds of U.S. Army and Navy flying officers and thousands of Navy enlisted men, some of whom completed both academic degrees and pilot training at Bloomsburg.

Dr. Andruss came to the college in 1930 to organize and direct the department of business education, seven years later, he was named dean of instruction.

He succeeded the late Dr. Francis B. Itaas as president in September, 1939, when Itaas was appointed superintendent of Public Instruction for the Commonwealth of Pennsylvania.

After World War II, enrollment dropped to approximately 700 and Dr. Andruss urged the board of trustees to develop a plan to accommodate 1,200 students.

"The college community, and indeed the entire town of Bloomsburg, is indebted to Harvey A. Andruss for his outstanding service to the college," McCormick said.

His long-range plans — to construct new classroom buildings, campus residence halls, dining halls, a library, an auditorium, a gymnasium-fieldhouse, football and

Alumni Fund shows growth of more than 43%

Growth of more than 43 percent was recorded in 1983 by the Annual Fund of the Bloomsburg University Alumni Association.

Alumni and friends of the university contributed more than $165,400 during the year ending Dec. 31, up from $115,000 in 1982.

Contributors included 5,380 alumni, 47 non-alumni faculty and staff, and 175 businesses and friends of the university, according to Doug Hippenstiel, Director of Alumni Affairs.

Complete list of Alumni Fund donors inside

"We are very encouraged by the enthusiastic response of our alumni and friends," said Hippenstiel. "The annual participation rate of BU alumni is above the national average for four year public colleges and universities."

Since the first Annual Fund was conducted in 1974-1975, contributions have totaled more than $635,000.

Speaking for the university, acting president Larry W. Jones credited the Alumni Office staff and the Alumni Board of Directors for providing outstanding leadership to the Annual Fund.

"More importantly," Jones said, "we are pleased that our alumni and friends recognize the importance of their support to maintain the 'margin of excellence' in university programs and services."

In 1983, the Annual Fund included $85,574 in unrestricted gifts, up slightly from $81,628 in 1982. Designated gifts in 1983 totaled $55,121, a significant increase from $18,362 the previous year. Contributions for scholarships were $24,748, up from $15,557 in 1982.

For the first time, alumni and friends were given the opportunity to designate their contributions for the Deans' Fund for Excellence.

Forever in his debt

Imagine Bloomsburg without the college.
Just houses, or maybe only fields, instead of the beautiful campus

No concerts in Hoos Auditorium.

No students.

No professors.

Unthinkable? Today, yes.

But it was not so very long ago that the college which has become synonymous with the town almost fell victim to a war.

That it did not, and that it went on to become one of the best schools in the state system, was due largely to the efforts of an intelligent, strong-willed man who always seemed to know just what the college needed, and somehow managed to get it.

Harvey A. Andruss Sr., president of Bloomsburg State College from 1939 to 1969, died last Thursday at age 81.

But his work will always be a part of us.

When Andruss was promoted from acting president to president of the college in 1941, the girls on campus were already spending their spare time knitting khaki-colored socks for soldiers stationed overseas.

And after the war was brought home to America at Pearl Harbor later that year, those girls were about the only students left on campus.

For a while, it seemed as if the college might simply cease to exist. In fact, legislators who believed private colleges could produce enough teachers proposed bills that would have converted some of the teacher colleges into vocational-technical schools.

With student enrollment dropping by the semester, Andruss realized his tenure would be a short one, indeed, if he did not reshape his school to fit the needs of the times.

Through his efforts, Bloomsburg became the only state college in Pennsylvania approved for the training of Navy pilots and officers. More than 1,200 servicemen were educated here during the war, and when it was over, many of them returned as four-year students.

After that kind of start, no one would have blamed Andruss if he had taken it a bit easier and enjoyed the post-war years. But he never slowed down.

He never stopped challenging himself or the resources of the school. Looking ahead, he saw there would one day be a great demand for the quality low-cost education offered by the state schools. And in the 1950s, he set in motion a building program that prepared BSC to service that demand.

In sum, it was not just that Andruss' 30-year tenure was for longer than most of the college's other leaders. It was that, right from the start, he seemed to make every day of it count.

The school, now a university, and the region remain in his debt.

baseball stadiums, an administrative office building, a student center, a campus maintenance building, recreation areas, and parking areas — were already underway in 1957, when enrollments began a swift and dramatic increase which lasted for more than 10 years.

A later plan, developed in 1967 under Andruss's supervision, included facilities for a college community of 10,000.

Remembered as an "inspiring" classroom teacher, Dr. Andruss was always interested in improving and expanding academic programs to meet changing needs.

According to those who remember him, his leadership with the faculty helped prepare the Teachers College to become a multi-purpose school when it became Bloomsburg State College in 1960.

Programs leading to the master's degree became one of the missions of the college the same year.

"Dr. Andruss' sound leadership established the foundation principles which sustained the college through difficult times in the past," McCormick said.

"And I believe (those principles) will continue to guide us into the future. His many contributions to the college will find a lasting monument in the lives of its students."

For years, Dr. Andruss emphasized the importance of a library as the heart of the college, and in 1966, his interest was recognized when a new campus building was designated the Harvey A. Andruss Library.

The Endowed Lecture Fund, which he established with the help of alumni, trustees, and others in the college community, has made it possible for the university to bring internationally renowned artists and lecturers to the campus each year for first-hand experiences with students and faculty.

Dr. Andruss, a resident of Bloomsburg for nearly 54 years, traveled throughout the world with his wife, Elizabeth, whom he married on June 12, 1929. He was fond of sharing the highlights of his travel experiences with students, faculty, and other audiences throughout the region.

He was a member of Phi Beta Kappa for 52 years, and was instrumental in organizing a chapter of that honorary fraternity at Bucknell University.

He continued his support of higher education after his retirement in 1969, maintaining a tradition he established while presenting budgetary requests to state House and Senate Committees in his capacity as chairman of the budget and fees committee of the state college board of presidents.

A native of Fort Worth, Tex., Dr. Andruss was the son of Edward Hamilton and Myrtle McDaniel Andruss.

He earned a bachelor of arts degree at the University of Oklahoma, a master's degree in business administration at Northwestern University, and the doctor of education degree at The Pennsylvania State University.

His career began as a teacher and administrator in Oklahoma public schools, and continued when he became a lecturer in the Northwestern University School of Commerce. Before coming to Bloomsburg, he was a professor in the commerce department at Indiana University of Pennsylvania.

Andruss wrote four widely-used textbooks and published 39 magazine articles. He was a special lecturer at New York University, the University of Oklahoma and Oklahoma A&M College. During the summer of 1957, he was a visiting professor at Penn State University.

In June 1945, he went to England to serve as an educational consultant and head of the accounting department at the new American Army University at Shrivenham. During the years that followed, he served various commissions and organizations as an editorial, educational, or fiscal consultant.

When in Bloomsburg, he served on the board of directors of the Bloomsburg Bank-Columbia Trust, the Bloomsburg Hospital, the Bloomsburg Public Library, the American Red Cross, and the Salvation Army.

An active member of Caldwell Consistory, Valley of Bloomsburg, for nearly 50 years, he was a retired trustee and was crowned with the 33rd degree in 1951. He was a member of Lodge 38, F&AM, in Norman, Okla., he was a member and elder of the First Presbyterian Church, Bloomsburg.

He is survived by his wife, Elizabeth Archbald Andruss, 802 Country Club Drive, Bloomsburg. A son, Harvey A. Andruss Jr., and two grandchildren live in Minneapolis, Minn.

Services were held Feb. 13 at the First Presbyterian Church in Bloomsburg with his pastor, the Rev. David C. Kingsley, and the Rev. Dr. G. Douglas Davies, retired former pastor of the church, officiating.

Foreign language society honors alum

Fenstermaker gets initiated to Phi Sigma

The Iota Theta chapter of Phi Sigma Iota, the national foreign language honor society at Bloomsburg University, held its 10th initiation recently in Bloomsburg.

The chapter was established at Bloomsburg on Nov. 14, 1976, and recognizes students and faculty who have shown outstanding ability in the study and teaching of foreign languages.

New initiates for the spring semester were Spanish majors Kelly Rohrbach and Donna Sees, and Spanish professor Sharon Gulnn.

Retired foreign language professor Howard Fenstermaker '12 was initiated as the chapter's first honorary member. He is the father of Dr. Mary Lou John, faculty advisor of the chapter and head of the department of languages and cultures at Bloomsburg University.

Attending the initiation in addition to Fenstermaker and his wife, Mary, were language professors Dr. Ariane Foureman, Ben Alter and Whitney Carpenter; students Melinda Coates, Scott Poppele, Kevin Dangle and Donna Staffa, and alumni members Rebecca Elster of Sunbury and Janine Wasilewski of Watstown.

Special guests were three exchange students from France studying business at Bloomsburg U this semester: Anne Lau-Begue, Arlette VanDenBerghe and Sylvie Biscarra, all of the Institut Commercial de Nancy.

New French student exchange program at full swing at Bloom

Language, business studies combined

By DE CREASY
For the Alumni Quarterly

The French exchange program at Bloomsburg University was inaugurated last spring when Steve Slampyak and Connie Djien of Bloomsburg went to the Commercial Institute of Nancy in France.

At the same time, French student Françoise Le Clere came to Bloomsburg for an internship in American business.

The program, designed by Dr. Ariane Foureman, professor of French and Russian language and culture at Bloomsburg, benefits students with either a major or minor in French in addition to a major or minor in business administration.

While at the Commercial Institute of Nancy, students spend about three months with a local firm in an internship relating to their major, and then take two seminar business courses lasting one month. Students get to experience the French culture and to learn management skills.

"American students of today are no longer as much interested in the study of the French language and culture as they have been in the past," says Dr. Foureman.

"The exchange program in France gives American students a chance to experience first hand another culture."

According to Foureman, the goal of the project is to revitalize the study of French and to give young Americans an appreciation of French language and culture.

"At the same time, the students get equipped with a stock of knowledge which will be of use to them in the future," she says.

A Franco-American live-in study program means becoming immersed in the country and the lifestyle.

In addition to classroom work, students go into the business world for experience, getting the opportunity to use their knowledge in a career.

The program begins with a Welcome Week, during which individuals have preliminary contact with a business. The internship aims for rapid acquisition of knowledge through direct contact.

"I'm pleased about the success the program has achieved," Dr. Foureman says. "I feel good about bringing the beauty of French culture to the student, and the department; at the same time promoting the discipline of France."

This spring, junior management student Linda R Fegley will be one of the students who gets immersed in French culture.

"I am particularly thrilled to go to France," Linda says, "because it will give me the greatest opportunity to combine knowledge of French business with application."

Another student planning to go to France is junior Lisa Jean Hackett.

"I love the French language, and I feel that in order to really understand a language you must understand the culture," she says.

"To learn French, it is essential to be around French-speaking people. I've met several exchange students who have been instrumental in my decision to attend a college or university in France."

Dr. John speaks up for foreign language study

Dr. Mary Lou F. John, head of the Department of Languages and Cultures at Bloomsburg University, spoke recently in favor of legislation that would require two years of foreign language study for high school graduation.

Testifying at a public hearing on House Bill 1181, conducted by the House Education Committee of the Pennsylvania Legislature at Pittston, Dr. John recommended that these studies begin as early as possible so interested students may continue with further years of study in high school.

The BU educator quoted numerous recent studies which point out the urgent need in government, business and industry for people proficient in foreign languages. She said the U.S. is falling behind other civilized nations, most of whom offer eight years of foreign language study in their public schools.

Environmental planning a new study option at BU

Bloomsburg University students now have of the option of studying Environmental Planning, a new program offered by the Department of Geography and Earth Science.

Environmental Planning joins the Urban and Regional Planning option which Bloomsburg has had for seven years.

The major emphasis of the new Environmental Planning option is on land and water resources management.

While the program is predominantly associated with geography, other departments such as political science, economics and biology are involved. The program includes a semester internship experience as well as new courses in land resource management, water resource management and recreation geography.

The program is coordinated by professors Brian Johnson, James Lorelli and John Serff Jr.

Husky mascot to be cast in bronze soon

Catawissa artist at work on statue

By PATRICK J. MURPHY
Student Feature Writer

After eight years of false starts, Bloomsburg University will soon boast a statue depicting the University's mascot, the husky.

The larger-than-life-size bronze sculpture will be located on the southwest lawn of Carver Hall, with the unveiling expected on Homecoming Day in October.

The idea of commissioning an artist to make a mascot statue that would embody the University's ideals has been talked about since 1976, but not until last December did the idea move toward reality.

"People have wanted it for at least 10 years," said Scott Righter, chairman of the investment/statue committee, "but no one really sat down and put in the time to see the project through to completion."

Righter, a senior, started pushing the project in his junior year and is gratified to see the end in sight. He credited the committee for its help in the search for an artist, and noted that then-president Dr. James H. McCormick and John Walker, vice president for institutional advancement, were very supportive.

At its meeting in December, the committee voted to accept the proposal of E. Richard Bonham, a resident of nearby Catawissa. Bonham was one of several artists who submitted proposals and models in response to a national search.

Funding of the $15,000 project has been guaranteed by the Community Government Association, but Righter hopes most the money will be raised through gifts from former BU classes. Righter is confident that alumni will support this project.

Classes contributing to the project will have their years inscribed on the base of the sculptured mascot.

As The Alumni Quarterly went to press, Bonham was busy sculpting the husky which he described as having "a lot of character and athletic spirit."

The husky will be sitting on its back legs, with its left paw slightly raised and its right paw resting on a rock. After it has been sculpted, the husky will be sent to a foundry for final casting.

As part of their proposals, the artists were required to submit a descriptive statement of intent.

Bonham wrote: "Staring at an adversary or into the future, the male husky is dynamically poised for action with the lines and contours expressing his regal bearing and serious intent."

"Lacking in the statue is predatory viciousness; this husky is alert and ready for either offense or defense, not death and destruction. As such, he would make an apt symbol of the University, its teams, its students and its graduates."

Bonham is using the lost-wax method of casting metal for his rendition of the mascot.

Briefly, this method involves taking a sculpted piece to a foundry where a rubber mold of the work is made. Wax is then poured into the hollow rubber mold and the mold then looks "like a chocolate bunny."

Plaster is then poured into the mold through a round hole which is cut into the mold. Finally, bronze is poured into the mold and allowed to harden.

The foundry requires from six to eight months to complete the casting. Then Bonham must "chase" the figure, using a hammer and chisel to provide the details in the sculpture.

Students and alumni alike are looking forward to the unveiling of the mascot sculpture this fall.

BRONZE HUSKY — This larger-than-life-size bronze sculpture of the Bloomsburg University Husky mascot will be put on the lawn of Carver Hall, and should be unveiled at Homecoming in October.

More than $8,000 was earmarked for this fund in 1983 and will be used to enhance the academic programs of the university. Several thousand dollars, for example, has been set aside to sponsor undergraduate student research projects.

Many designated gifts were also earmarked for grants-in-aid to develop and maintain the university's successful athletic programs. Still other contributions were intended for the Alumni Room, campus beautification, or other specific projects.

Sixty-nine companies matched their employees' contributions to the Annual Fund, boosting the fund by $9,579. The matching gift total in 1982 was $6,760.

The top 10 matching gift companies in 1983 were American Telephone and Telegraph, Pennsylvania Power and Light Co., IBM, Nationwide Mutual Insurance Co., Illinois Bell Telephone Co., Price-Waterhouse, Air Products and Chemicals, Inc., Sperry Corporation, Whittaker Corporation and Aetna Life and Casualty Co.

The largest contribution to the Annual Fund in 1983 was $5,500. Twelve individuals or companies contributed $1,000 or more, and 31 gifts were $500 or more. Gifts of at least $50 were received from 574 alumni and friends.

Do we have a trademark?

By LAWRENCE V. KEEFER
Class of 1920

Does Bloomsburg have a trademark? Consider some distinguishing marks of other schools before dismissing the question as meaningless.

During the late 1920s the Harvard University football team and its followers made a trip to a mid-western university. This was unusual for them since their regular schedule commonly included only Ivy League schools.

In this invasion of the West, the conduct of the players on and off the field was closely watched and commented upon. The comment in final form was that Harvard men were splendid sportsmen and even if they did lose their game, they did it in a superior manner with a display of good sportsmanship.

If this was their standard conduct, it spoke well for the university, and was a fine trademark.

Consider further the superior eloquence of one of the debaters who represented a visiting college.

In his remarks both in the introductory speech and in the rebuttal, his style was so refreshing and distinguished, listeners remarked about the unusual display of eloquence long after the team had departed.

This could have been a trademark if the team as a whole had the same oratorical ability.

Explain too why a certain mid-western school, not very large as universities go, has produced so many college presidents? What is there about a small college that it should produce leaders? This is outstanding, and a trademark.

When then are the distinguishing marks of a Bloomsburg man? Are there any salient points that are noteworthy?

It is difficult for an alumnus of 50 years past to evaluate the quality of present day graduates because of lack of knowledge, and also because the general trend of education in the United States has been downhill.

But let us look back and see what the school had to offer years ago.

For a long time the courses ran for only two years. Such a short program imposed severe restrictions on the faculty and the courses offered. With so many classes from 7:50 in the morning until 5 in the afternoon, five days a week, and a daily chapel exercise of 15 minutes, it would seem nothing outstanding could be accomplished.

But as we look back, the contrary was true. In addition to the regular courses in Education, particularly in History of Education, the student was urged (nay, almost forced) to complete a side course in Palmer Method Handwriting, and obtain a certificate from the home office.

And handwriting in our day was a distinguishing mark of the Bloomsburg graduate. The handwriting spoke well for him, and of all the favorable comments in afterlife, for this I have received my share.

Likewise the course in manual training — this was far from the present four-year course in industrial arts now offered in Pennsylvania.

In those days it was only wood shop, but at that time few teachers colleges elsewhere offered it at all.

So it was a good beginning and a valuable start for anyone wishing to specialize in that field.

Consider, too, the head start of anyone wishing to specialize in science.

At Bloomsburg, the student was offered liberal doses of plant and animal studies, so as to equip him for further courses. These would not qualify him to identify all marine life in Jules Verne's "Twenty Thousand Leagues Under the Sea," but as a beginning, as a two-year study, certainly a giant step upward.

And then there was Table Manners — not a scheduled course, but a practical exercise in daily living. They say if you want to see whether a man has any culture at all, observe how he eats. If he has any bringing up at all, it will be manifest at the table.

For most of us, so it seemed, we had to start at zero and grope our way upwards. It sometimes was painful, but that was the way we learned. I can say Bloomsburg did an outstanding job in this area.

Add to the above mini-courses in line arts, music, athletics, bird watching, geology, religious training, public speaking, and discipline. These may seem small items but they can be deciding factors when looking for a job. Understand, not all students in Teachers course received the above: I must have been one of the lucky ones.

The best way to compare schools is to attend them for a time and then to see and compare.

Some have alumni groups, others none. Some help graduates obtain jobs, others seem helpless. One school has school spirit; its neighbor nearby never heard of it.

And so it goes. What should Bloomsburg's trademark consist of? Only the graduates can determine its final form. My own conclusion is that years ago it was an excellent place to prepare for further studies.

New ideas on teacher exchanges

By TODD JONES
Student feature writer

When most people think of faculty exchanges, they think of professors from the United States teaching in a far-off land while professors from a far-off land teach in the United States.

Some professors at Bloomsburg University have participated in such an exchange, but some have had very exchanges of a very different sort.

BACKYARD EXCHANGE: From January to June 1983,

Dr. Mary Hill of the special education department exchanged jobs with Barbara Newhart, a teacher of educable mentally retarded children at Bloomsburg Memorial Elementary School.

"I talked to Barb, and we thought it would be interesting to trade jobs," says Hill. "An exchange involving an elementary teacher and a professor of higher education has hardly ever been done. It's a whole new technique."

Hill and Newhart contacted Bloomsburg Area School District superintendent Alex Dubil, who supported the idea. Dr. Andrew Karpinski, head of the university's special education department, also liked the concept.

Dubil and Dr. Howard Macauley, dean of professional studies, made the final approval, and within a year and a half, Hill was in an elementary classroom, and Newhart was at Bloomsburg U.

The same guidelines used for European exchanges were used in this exchange. Hill was still employed by the university and Newhart was still employed by the Bloomsburg Area School District.

Hill had taught mentally retarded children in Selinsgrove and Pennhurst before coming to Bloomsburg, but had been out of the elementary classroom for 10 years.

"The experience really freshened my teaching skills," says Hill. "It gave me an idea of the new materials that had come out in 10 years. It was a new challenge for me. I can use what I've learned in my lectures."

One thing that challenged Hill was a new law that requires every mentally retarded student to have an Individual Education Plan. Tests are given to each student in order to determine education levels.

Then, an IEP is made up by the teacher that has to be approved in writing by the child's parents.

"I was teaching about the IEPs to my students, but I never practiced them," Hill says. "I was learning the new material from books, not life."

"I never worked so closely with parents before. Some of the mothers still call me for advice."

Although she enjoyed the exchange, Hill found that the workload was hectic.

"I have more planning time for my college courses," she says. "I had supervised student teachers before, but I was watching, not doing."

Hill encourages more faculty members to participate in this kind of exchange and all kinds of exchanges.

"The kind of exchange I did was probably more practical than going to Europe," says Hill. "Within the next 10 years, I'd like to do another one. Faculty exchanges can open up new avenues to a person."

COUNSELING EXCHANGE: Judith Gaudiano of the nursing department is another faculty member who is involved in a different kind of exchange, counseling adolescent girls at Geisinger Medical Center in Danville who have anorexia nervosa or bulimia.

The exchange is set up as an adjunct appointment between the university and Geisinger. Gaudiano gets a quarter release from her teaching load and works one day a week at Geisinger.

There is no one assuming Gaudiano's duties at Bloomsburg because of the lack of nurses with master's degrees, which are needed in order to teach at Bloomsburg U.

"The whole model was set up to bridge the gap between nursing and education," says Gaudiano. "The exchange has been beneficial to me because I bring increased clinical skills back to the classroom, and eventually, it will help the nurses from Geisinger get more familiar with the curriculum at Bloomsburg and be more supportive of student nurses."

This is the first year that Bloomsburg has been involved with an exchange at Geisinger, and Gaudiano views the exchange as a trial run to see if other nursing exchanges are viable.

"Perhaps other faculty members could go to different places and work in critical care units and other areas of nursing," she says.

Gaudiano's emphasis is psychological mental health nursing. She holds weekly group meetings, open to the public, with the girls. These meetings help the girls with stress management, self concept, and coping.

"We want to fit these girls into the Geisinger system," Gaudiano says. "We want to find out who's going to be responsible for them. There are no treatment centers for girls with eating problems established in the area except this one, and there's no parent awareness. This area has a great need for more treatment centers."

Gaudiano is working toward a certificate that will make her a psychiatric specialist.

In order to help professionals and the public become more aware of anorexia and bulimia, Gaudiano travels to different places and has talked to physicians, high school nurses, and officials at various colleges.

"I teach people how to relate to young adults who have these problems and how to refer them for treatment," says Gaudiano. "I never realized how rampant the problem was. It's much larger than I anticipated. There is a great need for early identification and prevention of anorexia and bulimia."

OVERSEAS EXCHANGE: Unlike Hill or Gaudiano, Dr.

David Washburn of the educational studies department was involved in an overseas exchange.

Washburn spent the school year of Fall 1981 and Spring 1982 at the International Centre for Multicultural Education at Birmingham Polytechnic in England.

Washburn taught Multicultural Studies and Social Foundations of Education at Birmingham while Dr. Andy Hannan taught a graduate seminar and Social Foundations of Education, and also took on Washburn's duties at the Multicultural Education Center at BU.

"The Multicultural Studies

HILL

class I taught was made up entirely of women physical education majors," says Washburn.

"They didn't have to show up for class, only if they were interested. In the same building there was a pub where all the students hang out, and they still came."

"My class in Social Foundations of Education consisted of older people who were teachers, and they were very interested in continuing their education. I had very good students in both classes."

It took about three years to arrange the exchange. Washburn met Hannan in 1978 when Hannan was visiting Bloomsburg and they started exchanging information about multicultural education.

"The college has a faculty exchange policy, but professors have to arrange exchanges on their own," says Washburn. "We exchanged our homes, positions, and automobiles."

In addition to teaching two courses at Birmingham Polytechnic, Washburn gave a lecture series at universities throughout England and developed working relationships with the Commission for Racial Equality, the Birmingham Education Authority, and many other organizations related to multicultural education.

"This experience really changed my perception of the world and how I interpret world events and cross-national policies," says Washburn. "You really need to live in a country for a year to focus on the way one culture shapes the perceptions of others."

During his stay in Birmingham, the British were involved in the Falkland Islands dispute. The British view of the crisis was quite different than the American view.

"There was a news blackout in Great Britain during the invasion, and I had to go to Ireland to get news of it," Washburn says. "All the people were saying, 'Go out and beat the Argies.' The two countries were friends two weeks before the invasion."

According to Washburn, Americans are stereotyped in the minds of the British, and that the average Briton doesn't have any idea of the size and complexity of the United States.

"They don't know how diverse we are in our cultures and opinions," says Washburn. "A lot of people didn't believe my family and I were Americans because we didn't talk like 'J.R.'"

"Britons think the United States is violent. They think everyone in the United States carries weapons."

Washburn views his experience in the United Kingdom as a positive one.

"I gained a lot of professional growth during my stay in England," he says. "I'll continue to search out new growth experiences, and share those experiences with my students."

Reading conference in April

BLOOMSBURG — The 20th annual Bloomsburg University Reading Conference for teachers, reading specialists, supervisors and other school administrators will be held April 13 and 14. This year's theme is "The Goal is Independence."

Addressing the general sessions will be Dr. Marjorie Johnson, professor of reading psychology at Temple University, Dr. M. Jerry Weiss, distinguished science professor of communication at Jersey City State College, and Dr. Carol Chomsky, lecturer on education at Harvard University.

All are authors of well-known publications pertaining to their fields.

Bloom U recruitment officer Michael C. Estrada, 45, dies

Michael C. Estrada, 45, a recruitment and orientation specialist in the Bloomsburg University admissions office for three and a half years, died Jan. 3 at Geisinger Medical Center in Danville. He had been in ill health for several months.

Born in Puerto Rico on July 16, 1938, he was a son of Migue Estrada and Justa Mercado Estrada of Queens, N.Y. He received a bachelor's degree in theology from North Central Bible College in 1972, a master's degree in 1973, and an E.D.S. degree from Fort Hayes (Kansas) State University in 1975.

In addition to two general sessions and the Friday banquet, approximately 45 workshops, discussion groups, and demonstrations will be held.

Complete books and material displays will be on exhibit throughout the conference in Centennial Gymnasium.

The annual conference has developed into one of the outstanding reading confabs in the country. Reading clinic director Dr. Edward Poostay took over the clinic after Dr. Margaret Sponseller retired in 1981.

Registration information, including a complete list of speakers and their topics, can be obtained by writing Poostay, Benjamin Franklin Building, Bloomsburg University, Bloomsburg, PA 17815, or by calling (717) 389-4092.

Welcome parents!

With this issue of The Alumni Quarterly, we welcome to our readership the parents of our 6,000 full and part-time undergraduate students.

We think this will be another effective way of maintaining lines of communication with those who have an interest in Bloomsburg University.

As an important part of the Bloomsburg family, parents are invited to send your comments and suggestions to the Alumni Office, Bloomsburg University, Bloomsburg, PA 17815.

Anderson to speak at Mock Convention

John B. Anderson, the 1980 Independent presidential candidate, will be "Distinguished Lecturer" at Bloomsburg University's Mock Presidential Nominating Convention on April 6 and 7.

Anderson's appearance is scheduled for Friday evening, April 6, in Centennial Gymnasium.

speaker on March 28. The actress, who appeared as Miss Hathaway on "The Beverly Hillbillies," is running for Congress in western Pennsylvania. Anderson, a Republican from Illinois, served nearly 20 years in the United States Congress before deciding to test the presidential political waters in 1979.

He started out by seeking the Republican nomination, but despite a growing constituency told it was unattainable and decided to pursue an independent course.

Anderson's independent candidacy offered Americans an alternative to the Republican and Democratic nominees.

He continues to speak out on critical issues at college and university campuses throughout the country. He has taught both graduate and undergraduate courses at Stanford University and the University of Illinois Law School.

As chairman of the National Unity Party, Anderson recently completed a book, scheduled for publication in the winter of 1984, which deals with his ideas on what is needed to restore the health of the United States economy and the nation's position in the world community.

The mock convention is the fifth at Bloomsburg since 1968 and is sponsored by the political science department and the Community Government Association.

More than 1,500 people from BU and other colleges and universities are expected to attend. Delegates will be attending from as far away as the University of Missouri.

The Mock Presidential Nominating Convention gives students an opportunity to express their views on current issues through the adoption of a party platform and to choose nominees for president and vice president.

Alumnus seeks woman from WWII

By CHUCK MUIR

Harrisburg Sunday Patriot News

A kind act 38 years ago, a small gesture of decency amid the atrocities of World War II, is drawing John F. Magill Jr. of Millerstown R.D. 2 (Class of 1948) back to a farmhouse in Munster, Germany.

"I'm one of the lucky statistical ones," says the ex-paratrooper of his service in the war.

"I'm convinced the difference rested one day—April 3, 1945—in the hands of an unknown German woman at that farmhouse.

He's returning as part of a three-week trip to Europe on a long-shot hope of finding and thanking her for looking after him and 19 other unarmed and seriously wounded paratroopers that day.

"I want to thank her for all the men who were in that farmhouse," Magill says. "It's a desire to pay a debt."

It's also psychological therapy—a way of coping with his survival when so many others in the American 17th Airborne Division did not.

Magill and his wife, Marge, have written letters over the years, trying to develop leads on the woman's identity. They've been unsuccessful.

The woman, Magill says, could have handed over the defenseless men to a fanatical SS unit entrenched nearby—the very force that cut the paratroopers to shreds with concentrated artillery fire.

Had she reacted as some German civilians did to the invasion of their homeland, it would have cost the Americans their lives. Many paratroopers operating behind the lines died at the hands of civilians, Magill says.

The mysterious woman stayed with the wounded men for five hours, offering them coffee, adjusting bandages and spreading foreign words of comfort that everyone understood, he said.

She was taking a chance, Magill believes. Had the SS found one of their own helping the enemy, it would have been treason and death for her.

His visit to Munster will include a stop at the farmhouse, if it's still there. His only hope of finding the woman, if she's alive, is to contact print and broadcast media in Germany. The woman would be in her sixties, he says.

"There have been little differences that contributed to my life," Magill says. "That woman's kindness may have made the difference between life and death."

Those five hours on that day 38 years ago is one of the positive things Magill may resurrect from the horrors of World War II.

After nearly four decades, the horrifying cost of the war is still hard to deal with, he says. Meeting and thanking the woman will help him psychologically to cope.

"It may make my own reconciliation with life finally complete."

Magill was attached to a forward observer section that pinpointed enemy positions and called in artillery fire.

"It's a horrifying thing to send in death," he says.

"Artillery barrages were devastating."

He says it's difficult to live with the sight of devastation, knowing it resulted from the fire you called in.

Magill was among 20,000 American and British paratroopers who took part in Operation Varsity, a massive drop 10 miles behind German lines. They held the rear while Allied troops on barges breached the Rhine River.

He was wounded a few days after the drop. His unit was setting up an observation post in the woods near Munster to call in artillery relief. An infantry regiment was pinned down by SS troops with eight 88-millimeter artillery pieces and a captured Sherman Tank.

"The SS detected their position and opened fire," Magill says. "The woods became a veritable hell, just beyond description."

He took shrapnel in the face and right shoulder. The wounded were moved to the farmhouse.

The woman suddenly appeared. Later, as American troops returned for the wounded, she vanished as quickly. Her ministering to the wounded was a bright spot in the war, Magill recalls. "The whole world isn't bad," Magill remembers thinking. "Love seemed to be apparent."

He was 20 then. He's 60 now. "Paying a 38-year-old debt will make my own mortality more palatable," he says. "If you were responsible for the death of so many, and have come to terms with your own mortality, then you make sure you've crossed all the t's and dotted as many i's as possible."

DAMM MAD: Bloomsburg University alumnus forms group to fight Reagan's 'military mania'

By MIKE DILLON

Student Feature Writer

Thomas Little is an attorney at law, a former Marine drill instructor, and a Bloomsburg University alumnus... and he's "DAMM MAD."

Little's son, Patrick, was stationed in Beirut, Lebanon, during the November suicide attack on the U.S. Marines.

Patrick, who was not injured in the attack and is now home, says that "Beirut is as close to hell as you want to get," but he was proud to serve his country there.

Patrick's assignment in Beirut was the reason that his father organized DAMM MAD (Dads Against Military Mania), Mums Agree Defiantly), to protest the U.S. military presence in war-torn Beirut.

At a press conference last September, Little announced the formation of DAMM MAD and rallied against President Reagan, calling Reagan a "raving military maniac," and a "liar."

Little first became upset with the President and the Beirut mission when the first Marines were killed there last summer, and he was particularly upset about the way Reagan broke the news of the deaths to the victim's families.

Little sent a telegram to Reagan asking, "How many parents of dead Marines are you going to call before you finally acknowledge the U.S. Marines are actually in combat?"

Little said he was tired of hearing the war in Lebanon referred to as a "peacekeeping mission."

He received no Presidential response to his inquiry, but after he announced the formation of DAMM MAD, other parents of soldiers stationed in Beirut did respond.

Hundreds of parents called Little to express their support, and informed him that they, too, were DAMM MAD.

Besides rallying support for his cause in the community, Little began to correspond with Delaware's House and Senate representatives.

Little told them quite plainly that he wanted no personal response from them, only their votes opposing any legislation which would keep the Marines in Beirut.

By Oct. 9, less than a month after he started his campaign, Little could announce that "We (Delaware) are the only state in the United States with a delegation unanimous against war in the Middle East."

Little's formation of DAMM MAD and his comments about the President's policy thrust the Bloomsburg alumnus into the public eye, but that was nothing new for him.

Little, now an attorney in Wilmington, was once a state legislator, and claims that his silence during the Vietnam conflict is partly responsible for his vocal opposition to the Marine deployment in Beirut.

"I was a wimp then," said Little. "A wimp is someone who knows what's right and doesn't do anything about it."

If Little was a wimp during the Vietnam conflict, he is a lion now.

His actions let the administration know that there are vigilant citizens who care about foreign policy and will speak out about it.

Perhaps Little's efforts are not directly responsible for the withdrawal of troops from Lebanon, but perhaps the next time the administration considers troop deployment, they will consider the possibility that some people will become DAMM MAD, and that they will do something about it.

Bloomsburg U profs visit Egypt

Carlough and Micheri take six-week tour

By ANDREW HEINTZELMAN
Student Feature Writer

A six-week visit to Egypt this winter enabled two Bloomsburg University professors to see places they had only read about before and to better understand Egyptian culture.

Contacts made with Egyptian university officials during the trip also provide the possibility of student and faculty exchanges for Bloomsburg and other Pennsylvania state universities in the future.

Dr. William Carlough, chairman of the philosophy-anthropology department, and Richard Micheri of the political science department traveled throughout Egypt from Dec. 28 to Feb. 4 with 22 other Pennsylvania state university professors on a trip sponsored by the Pennsylvania Consortium for International Education.

The professors met with government and university officials, saw famous tombs and pyramids, and took a five-day cruise on the Nile.

"The Egyptians have a sense of a very long history, mixed with a sense of modern times," says Micheri. The six-week trip provided the professors with this view of past and present Egypt.

The professors spent the first three weeks in Egypt's capital, Cairo, touring the city and areas nearby.

Within 10 miles of the city, at the beginning of the desert, is Giza, the land of the Egyptian pyramids and the Great Sphinx.

According to Carlough, the oldest pyramid there was built in 2640 B.C.; it is 146 feet high and is constructed of stones weighing two and one half tons each.

Even without mortar, the stones are fit together so tightly that not even a credit card can fit between them, Carlough said.

The 66-foot high Great Sphinx, carved where it stands from the natural rock, has a lion's body, and what is said to be the portrait of Pharaoh Khafé as its head. The Sphinx was built in the third century B.C. and displays the astounding skill of the ancient Egyptians.

The first Egyptian burial site, also near Cairo, is Saqqara. Micheri said the tombs and step pyramids at Saqqara encase the bodies of pharaohs and other nobles from as far back as the fifth century B.C.

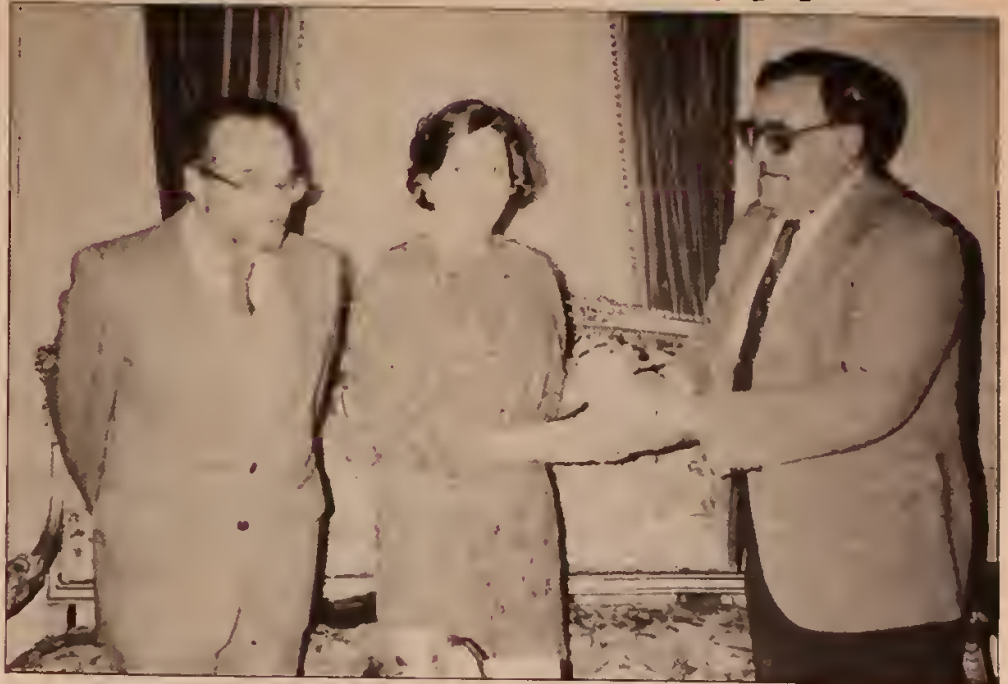

Both professors said Saqqara, a less crowded tourist attraction covering nearly 20 miles, was "very impressive."

The professors also toured mosques, churches, and museums in Cairo.

Carlough said Cairo's population of 13 million is growing by nearly one million yearly, resulting in transportation problems.

In fact, Micheri said, "The only thing I could not put up with over there is the reckless driving." Pedestrians and motorists crowd the streets of Cairo, and according to Micheri, no one recognizes traffic lanes.

"We felt safer on the buses than in the little Peugeots."

But buses weren't exactly safe either; according to Carlough they were decrepit, overloaded with passengers, and the drivers crossed double lines, ran red lights, and nearly hit other vehicles, pedestrians, and donkeys.

While in Cairo, the professors visited a section of the city where, according to Carlough, tourists are not advised to go: the City of the Dead.

Carlough said the City of the Dead is an old cemetery; however, it is not a graveyard of headstones, but, instead, rows of walled spaces with dirt floors (some have roofs).

According to Carlough, the spaces were initially built for the tombs of Egyptians and were divided into two rooms, presumably one for the males, and one for the females.

On the anniversary of a person's death, family members take food to the building and spend the day.

However, Cairo's overpopulation is changing this.

"Hundreds of thousands of people are now living in the City of the Dead," Carlough said.

The conditions of the cemetery are primitive; many buildings lack water, bathrooms, and electricity, according to the professor.

"About 12 of us walked through one day and people stared at us from windows in the buildings," Carlough said. "It was a bit frightening; I wouldn't go through there at night... even with 12 guys."

While in Cairo the professors also attended lectures on ancient and contemporary Egypt, and took Arabic language lessons.

They took a one-day trip to Ismailia, a city on the Suez Canal. The professors rode on a boat in the canal and saw oil tankers and oceanliners passing through.

While in Ismailia, they also spoke with administrators from the Suez Canal University, which, according to Carlough, has about 60,000 students on its six campuses throughout the Sinai Peninsula.

Carlough said contact with officials at the university, and elsewhere in Egypt, makes research projects possible for professors at Bloomsburg and other Pennsylvania state universities.

And, according to Carlough, there is even a possibility of student and faculty exchanges with Egyptian schools in the future because of these contacts.

Another one-day trip was from Cairo to a 50,000-acre experimental farm, where studies on irrigation and converting desert to agricultural land are conducted, Micheri said.

He said there were several unexpected features of Egypt's capital. One was the numerous video-night clubs, and the other was an all-day rain storm which "stopped everything in Cairo."

Cairo's drainage systems and numerous unpaved streets were not built for extensive rainfall, he said.

During the rainy day in Cairo, however, the professors were somewhere else, enjoying what they both thought was perhaps the most exciting part of the trip: the cruise on the Nile.

The professors flew from Cairo to Aswan, a city in southeast Egypt, where they boarded an oceanliner on the Nile.

Carlough said the trip began at the Aswan Dam on the tip of Lake Nasser. The professors crossed the large dam, built on the Nile for irrigation and flood control. They also visited granite quarries near Aswan where stones for Pyramids and temples were cut.

On the trip up the Nile, the most famous tourist spot that the professors saw was the Valley of the Kings, where the tomb of King Tutakhamen was discovered earlier this century.

The tombs brought to and built at the Valley of the Kings were dug deep into the mountains to hide them from Giza and Saqqara for this reason.

After touring other landmarks, islands, and tourist attractions along the Nile, the professors finished the cruise at Luxor. Temple complexes covering dozens of acres within the city of Luxor were built to honor Egyptian nobles.

Across the Nile from Luxor is Karnak, another "elaborate" temple complex, Carlough said.

"We saw so many temples, tombs, and monuments which were very impressive," Micheri said, making the Nile cruise enjoyable for him.

Carlough's wife, and spouses of other professors, came to Egypt for the cruise and several other days of touring. The Egyptian trip also included plans for the professors to donate toys to an orphanage and another organization dealing with poorer neighborhoods in Cairo.

Unexpectedly, a professor from Indiana University of Pennsylvania who had taught in Egypt had connections with some government people, Micheri said.

She arranged for the toys to be presented directly to Hosac Mubarak, wife of Egyptian president Hosni Mubarak. Mrs. Mubarak, as patroness of the orphanage and other organization, would distribute the toys to the children.

"We didn't expect to meet her," Micheri said, "We ended up talking with her and others in the president's palace for nearly two hours."

Micheri and Carlough agreed that the government officials and, in general, the people throughout Egypt were "friendly, happy, (and) willing to talk and share ideas."

University boasts high student retention rate

By PATRICK J. MURPHY
Student Feature Writer

In a decade of declining enrollments and fewer students applying for admission to academic institutions, Bloomsburg University enjoys a retention rate of 62.5 percent — twice the national average for similar four-year colleges.

The Cooperative Institutional Research Program bases its figures on the number of students who start and finish a baccalaureate program in four years.

The study, completed in conjunction with the American Council on Education, found the national rate to be 31.1 percent. A total of 566 colleges and universities participated in the study covering the years from 1978-1982.

"The retention rate at Bloomsburg is extremely high," said John L. Walker, BU vice president for institutional advancement.

"A student has twice the chance of graduating from Bloomsburg than the average public school."

Many reasons contribute to the high retention rate at Bloomsburg: a large applicant pool, the university's academic reputation, its student life programs, the location and appearance of the campus, the ability of students to receive financial aid, and a good career placement record.

A campus-wide retention committee continues to study student retention, seeking ways to maintain and improve the rate.

The committee is chaired by Tom Lyons, director of financial aid, who notes that obtaining financial aid dollars for needy students in the future will be a greater challenge because of the severe cutbacks in student aid programs.

"To retain students, the university must raise more dollars for its own students," he concludes.

Interpreting BU's enviable retention rate, Dr. Hugh McFadden, director of institutional research, explains:

"Students are here because it is their first choice. Of the fall 1983 freshmen, 77 percent were accepted at one or more other institutions and chose BU."

McFadden noted that the number of applicants each year gives the university more selectivity (in 1983, 4,582 students applied for 1,051 places in the freshmen class).

The study points out that "clearly, a major correlate of an institution's retention rate is its selectivity level."

BU is afforded the luxury of being selective and choosing students with higher SAT scores and better high school grade point averages than many other similar institutions.

The survey states that "since academic preparation is the strongest predictor of retention across all types of institutions, it stands to reason that the public four-year colleges would have lower retention rates."

Even though the statistics show the highest retention rate is for highly selective private four-year colleges (80.8 percent), BU's rate of 62.5 percent reflects a quality of educational atmosphere.

McFadden also noted the role of student support services in helping to retain students.

One such support service is the Career Development Center, directed by Tom Davies, which offers counseling as students attempt to focus on career goals.

In recent years, eight out of 10 BU graduates have found meaningful employment in the first year, often with the assistance of the center.

Annual career fairs bring potential employers to campus to meet students and to answer their questions.

In the center itself, the professional staff is augmented by trained students who serve as peer counselors.

In addition, the center provides placement files for all students who wish to have one.

One of the center's goals is to expand its services in helping students to arrange internships which provide valuable on-site experience. A successful internship is a great asset and makes a student more marketable.

College administrators believe these are some of the things that contribute to BU's high student retention rate.

New TV prof eager to work at new center

What prompts a man whose family encouraged him to be a physician and graduated from college with a degree in physics, to get involved with the media?

For Dr. Dana Ulloth, new faculty member at Bloomsburg University, it boils down to interest.

"Ever since I saw 'The Music Man' in California — I guess I was 11 or 12 — I was captivated with the theater and its production," he says.

Ulloth continues to be fascinated with nearly all aspects of the media. His background is an extensive one, including work with radio, television, film-making, and book writing.

Ulloth was born in Orlando, Fla. His father, a country doctor, and his mother, a secretary, expected him to be a physician.

However, Ulloth says, "I always liked broadcasting, theater, drama, and that sort of thing. Even as a teenager I had my own transmitter and receiver and talked to other amateurs over the air."

Ulloth grew up in a small town outside of Asheville, N.C., where he attended the private Fletcher High School. In 1959 he enrolled in Southern College, a liberal arts school in Collegedale, Tenn.

Ulloth worked with the campus radio station and helped to wire it. He became program director, and was also a disc jockey.

"I liked hearing my voice over the air," Ulloth says.

In 1963, he graduated with a major in physics, and a double minor in mathematics and communication.

After college, Ulloth became director-producer for a television station in Tupelo, Miss. His career was cut short, however, when he was drafted into the Army.

"At the time," Ulloth recalls, "I hated the Army, but after I got in, I enjoyed it."

He did engineering work on a base in Alabama and in his spare time moonlighted as an announcer on an off-base commercial easy-listening station.

Ulloth left the Army in 1967 to attend graduate school at the University of Missouri, where he did some audio programming and produced a syndicated radio show with the College of Agriculture.

In 1971, Ulloth earned his doctorate in radio, television, and film. His dissertation — "The Supreme Court: A Judicial Review of the Federal Communications Commission" — included the legal history of the FCC.

After graduate school, Ulloth taught film and broadcasting at Andrews University in Michigan where he made a short promotional film for the school.

After two years, he went to thaca College in New York, where he taught radio and television courses and wrote a book with colleague Sandra Hybels: "Broadcasting: An Introduction to Radio and Television."

Ulloth then teamed up for another book with Peter Klinge and Sandra Eells. Five years later, the three completed "Mass Media: Past, Present, and Future," which was published in 1983 by West Publishing Co.

"I'd love to use my books in my classes," says Ulloth, "but they are somewhat outdated."

He says when he heard about the job in Bloomsburg, he was interested for several reasons.

"I liked the area, and I like being so close to New York City," Ulloth says. "It gives me an opportunity to keep up with the media and go to the theater once in a while."

Another attraction is the new McCormick Human Services Building: "I think our equipment is severely limited now, but when the building is completed, we can compete with most other communication schools."

The building is scheduled to open next fall and is to include three studios and a complete control room.

Ulloth is now teaching two speech courses, a radio and television course, and broadcast journalism, and is at work on another book: "Coaching Technologies: Cable, Satellites, and Computers."

A fourth book is not yet started, but he is preparing for it: "Selected Histories of Broadcasting Radio and Television — The Early Days."

"In this book I want to focus on the people behind the scenes, whose work is often neglected," Ulloth comments. "I want to do it because no one else has, and I think it will be fun."

Co-op Ph.D. set with IUP

By JEFF BACHMAN
Student Feature Writer

Bloomsburg University graduate students can earn credits toward their doctor of education degrees by enrolling in the new cooperative doctoral program in elementary education with Indiana University of Pennsylvania.

Although BU has offered the master of education degree for several years, the cooperative program, begun last January, offers Bloomsburg students their first opportunity to do doctoral work in education here.

Ten candidates are enrolled in this semester.

According to Dr. William O'Bruba, head of the department of curriculum and foundations which oversees the program, earning doctoral credit at Bloomsburg reduces the time they have to study at IUP.

"People in the program often live and work in the Bloomsburg area, and it's a great inconvenience for them to move to Indiana to finish their degrees," says O'Bruba.

IUP awards the doctorate, and requires those doing the work to be full-time resident students.

Students can earn up to 30 credits toward their doctorate at Bloomsburg, but must take the remaining 30 at IUP. Lorraine Shanoski, the first student through the BU end of the program, plans to start her work at IUP this summer.

Dr. John Hranitz, coordinator of the program at BU, says the Ed.D. is useful for people interested in administrative careers in elementary education including school principals, district superintendents, curriculum supervisors, and people wanting to teach at the college level.

Hranitz points out, however, that other careers are open to Ed.D.'s as well. Both Hranitz and O'Bruba hold Ed.D.'s from IUP.

Shanoski has, of yet, made no concrete decision as to what she will do with her degree. She intends to wait until she develops a more specific direction in her studies at IUP.

The program's development has put no undue stress on the university's budget, according to O'Bruba, because it uses existing courses and faculty, and is nearly cost-free.

"Other than minor expenses, such as those incurred when borrowing a university car to drive a student to IUP for an interview, the program costs the university nothing," says O'Bruba. "To provide the program we just have to work a little harder."

Another distinguishing feature of the program is an internship requirement. The internship must be in an area the student has not worked in before.

For example, a student who has worked in a classroom cannot do so again to fulfill the requirement.

Shanoski, a counselor at Memorial Elementary School in Bloomsburg, did her internship at BU's Child Care Center. She was involved in all activities of the center but especially in working with the developmental and learning needs of "special children."

Shanoski believes the internship requirement to be an excellent idea.

"It was a good way to combine practical application with classroom theory," she says.

According to Dr. Daniel Pantaleo, BU's dean of the School of Extended Programs and Graduate Studies, BU is one of only a "handful" of schools to make such a requirement.

Admission to the program requires application to, and acceptance by, both IUP and BU. The Department of Curriculum and Foundations provides a handout describing the program and admission procedures.

The program's size, O'Bruba believes, also sets it apart from similar programs.

"Our program is small compared to, say, Penn State," says O'Bruba. "But students in our program are not just numbers, but people who deserve personal attention."

Shanoski agrees.

"The personal nature of the program enabled me to both build on my weaknesses and improve my strengths."

Changes coming to teacher education

BU looks at how children are taught

A decade ago, the public was asking "Why can't Johnny read?"

That concern has recently shifted toward the source of the problem: how Johnny is being taught.

And although teachers and teacher educators are usually perceived as being on the defensive against criticism, some are now taking initiative, acting as their own critics, and seeking out effective changes.

The teacher education program at Bloomsburg University is one of these few, having launched an in-depth study to change and improve the quality of the teachers it produces.

"Change is seldom easy," notes Howard K. Macauley Jr., dean of the College of Professional Studies, under which most of the university's teacher education departments fall.

"One thing that has always bothered me is how changes are usually made," he says. "A lot of rushing and scissors-and-paste work then little or no follow-up."

Macauley is working with others in the school and in the field of education to engineer a systematized approach to change.

The exercise in planned change is bringing together faculty, students, outside educators, and members of other academic disciplines to talk about what elements of teacher education need to be changed, how they can be changed most effectively, which changes should take priority, and what results can be expected from the change.

"Too often changes are made from the top down," Macauley says. "Administrations make decisions with little or no input from other levels, yet others are expected to carry out the change."

"In this situation, we're working to give a voice to all the parties who will be affected by the change."

"Everyone can feel he or she has a personal stake in the decisions and in their outcome."

Six academic programs at the university are involved: secondary education; special education; early childhood/elementary education; business education; communication disorders, and reading.

Seeds of the planned change were planted in 1977 when Macauley was acting dean of professional studies for a year.

"We were preparing for a visit from one of our professional accrediting organizations, the National Council for Accreditation of Teacher Education (NCATE)."

Noting the flurry of activity to prepare reports and presentations for the visit, Macauley realized later there was little follow through or monitoring of changes after the NCATE committee's visit and recommendations.

"I looked at other schools, too, and realized that no group seemed to have in place a systematic way to evaluate programs and institute change."

In 1979, Macauley was appointed permanently as the dean of professional studies, and one of the first actions he took was to find a mechanism for self-evaluation and possible changes in teacher education. He called in Ray Babineau, a member of the education faculty, who was subsequently put on special assignment to assist in implementing the planned change.

"We wanted to do more than just a superficial job on this change," Babineau says.

"Here's a lot happening in the field of education, and we wanted to outline changes that would keep our programs abreast of new developments now and in the future."

Babineau and Macauley soon realized they weren't simply preparing for the next accrediting committee visit, but were talking about a game plan for the remainder of the 1980s and into the next decade.

Together, Macauley and Babineau drafted the first planning document, issued in December 1980. At the same time, individual teacher education departments were asked to begin a comprehensive self-evaluation, reviewing each undergraduate and graduate program and making detailed recommendations for a change.

A task force was formed that was to become the central planning group for the systematic change, and that group reviewed eight categories:

Philosophy; goals and objectives of programs; admission; monitoring and exit criteria for students; resources and facilities; public service and in-service work by the faculty; faculty development; and governance of the programs.

A working group was developed for each category. The working groups involved every member of the education faculty, so that changes could evolve from the entire group rather than from a few, and each working group was given a deadline for preparing a position paper on its subject.

A final review of each position paper was held at an open meeting, and departments or individuals were asked to make formal response to the papers. These position papers and their responses were incorporated into a final plan by the task force, which has been enlarged to include students and outside educators.

In April 1982, the state Department of Education sent a team of educators to the university to review the change process. The team met with the working groups and, in their final report, extended their appreciation for the rich, professional experience provided by the Bloomsburg experimental review.

The first change instituted was to introduce microcomputers into the teacher education program. Macauley notes that many school districts are already purchasing microcomputers for their students.

Singers, actors going on Japan tour

With spring just around the corner, the Bloomsburg Madrigal Singers and the cast of the Children's Theater production of "Step on a Crack" are busy preparing for a summer tour in Japan.

The groups plan to leave New York on July 30 and return on August 11.

While touring major cities such as Tokyo, Kofu, Tenri, Osaka, Kyoto and Nara, the students will perform in various churches, civic and city halls, professional theaters, and in Disneyland, Tokyo.

As ambassadors of the United States and Bloomsburg University, the Madrigal Singers and student actors will present the highest quality performances, thus enhancing the reputation of Bloomsburg University while broadening the educational experience of the BU students.

One unique aspect of this tour will be the preparation of a professional broadcast-quality documentary.

Dr. Dana Ulloth, professor of mass communications at Bloomsburg, will travel with the group and compile a videotape record of the tour.

The touring groups have also approached the public television networks in the United States and Japan, and they have expressed interest. An appearance on Japanese national television is also a possibility.

The BU production of "Step on a Crack" will be the first by an American children's theater company in Japan.

Both student groups are seeking funding from various sources.

Children's theater specialist starts new university program

"The United States is a cultural wasteland for children," says Marci A. Woodruff, Bloomsburg University's new children's theater specialist. She teaches a class in Children's Theater and is active in the relatively new field.

She believes this wasteland can be alleviated by training children to become more culturally oriented.

Woodruff plans to make many changes at Bloomsburg to increase activity in children's theater.

In November she staged "Step On a Crack," a "zany" play which addressed problems that are real for children. The play centered around a young girl who has a new stepmother.

"Fifty-three percent of the children under 12 are living in single-parent homes," she said. "These children will have to face this problem; this is unfortunate, but true."

She believes the play helped children deal more effectively with the same or similar problems.

In the spring, Woodruff and her theater students plan to go on tour with a play not yet selected.

The play will have a small cast and be suitable to entertain a variety of age groups. Sets, crews, and actors must fit in one van.

There are no definite plans for the summer, but Woodruff would like to present a production in Bloomsburg Town Park.

Woodruff says the program will make a significant impact on educational opportunities in the community.

"It will develop a community that is more arts oriented than it already is," she said.

Woodruff's goal for the University includes providing a program that offers theatrical experience for children. Her long-term goal at the University is to train quality children's theater specialists.

The Children's Drama Program will be a focus for the whole department, Woodruff stated.

Others in the theater department share her enthusiasm.

Woodruff's goal is to encourage students to consider graduate work in children's theater.

Woodruff has a large background in theater. Her undergraduate work was completed at Western Kentucky University, where she was a theater and child psychology major.

She continued her education at Florida State University where she earned her master of arts degree in theater and child psychology. Woodruff also received her doctorate in theater at Florida State.

Woodruff has taught in several universities, and was a guest professor at Western Kentucky University. She taught theater at Louisville, Ky., and at the University of Pittsburgh, where she was the director of children's drama.

She is an active member of the Children's Theater Association of America and participates in the International Children's Theater Association.

Distinguished Service Award nominees sought

Do you know a Bloomsburg graduate who has excelled in his or her profession? Is there someone who has made outstanding contributions to society in general? Or can you think of an alumnus or alumna who has served the Alumni Association or the University in an extraordinary way?

These are people you should nominate for the 1984 Distinguished Service Award(s) of the BU Alumni Association.

Nominations will be reviewed by a committee which will then submit its recommendations to the full Alumni board of directors.

The 1984 award or awards will be presented at the annual banquet of the Alumni Association on Friday evening, June 15.

Nomination letters should be accompanied by resumes or biographical material to support the nomination. A source of additional information should also be listed, if possible.

Deadline for nominations is Friday, April 13.

Bloomsburg pitcher in big leagues

By ANDREW P. HEINTZELMAN
Student Feature Writer

The Gibsons have always loved baseball. Many times, they have traveled the 10 miles from their home in Springfield, Pa., to Veteran Stadium in Philadelphia to see the Phillies.

But on several occasions last summer, the Gibsons traveled nearly 1,000 miles to Milwaukee, to see the Brewers, and for good reason. As of March 7, 1979, their son, Bob, who played baseball for Bloomsburg U, was signed as a relief pitcher on the Brewers' farm teams; last year he stepped up to the major leagues.

"I never dreamed I'd have a son in the major leagues," Gibson's mother says. "I used to drive him to the Philly games when he was just a little guy."

But now Gibson is in the major leagues.

"We watch him on television and see his picture and life history go up on the scoreboard," his mother says. "It's really a nice feeling."

And it's surely a nice feeling for Gibson himself, but there was a lot of hard work and sacrifice before the success.

"His friends used to laugh at him when he'd be running or lifting weights or something," said his mother, "and they went out and had a good time. But, it has really paid off for Bob."

As a student at Bloomsburg, Gibson was in the Beta Sigma Delta fraternity, and majored in business administration. However, because of signing with the Brewers, Gibson left the college 18 credits short of a degree. According to his wife, Lori Buckshon Gibson, a BU graduate, Gibson hopes to take the courses and get the credits he needs for a degree next winter.

His wife added, however, that even the winters have been busy. Gibson has played baseball in Puerto Rico for the last several years during what would be the off-season.

"The more you play, the more you're noticed," his wife explained as a reason for the winter playing.

Gibson's mother says the Brewers would like to have Bob as a starting pitcher this season; therefore, he was urged to play and train for this in Puerto Rico, where Gibson had a good record and was selected for the league's all-star game, and his team won the Puerto Rican championships.

Four years as a pitcher at the college preceded Gibson's minor and major league careers. Gibson was co-captain for two years at BU and was nicknamed "Hoot" by fellow BU players.

(The same nickname was given to a former St. Louis Cardinals pitcher, also named Bob Gibson).

In 1976, Gibson was eighth in strike-outs in the National Collegiate Athletic Association; in 1978, he was seventh. In 1979, his final season, Gibson was 6-4 and helped BU to its first winning season since 1969.

Gibson was coached at BU by Clark Boler, who now coaches football, basketball and baseball at a high school in Georgia.

"He showed good talent," Boler said about Gibson's freshman year. "We knew he had possibilities (for a major league career) if he stayed at Bloomsburg for four years."

Boler and Gibson have little contact now, but Boler does try to follow the Brewers and enjoys hearing from Gibson.

"It's delightful to have something like that happen to one of your players," Boler said.

Gibson and the Brewers began talking in 1978 when the Bloomsburg team was in Florida during summer break. After an exhibition game in which Gibson struck out 16 batters, Brewer scout Joe McIlvaine offered him a contract.

The Baltimore Orioles also made an offer, but Gibson signed with the Brewers on March 7 of the following year. By March 18 he was in Phoenix for spring training.

A four-year minor league career began for Gibson later that year in Burlington, Iowa, with the Burlington Bees. After one season with the Brewers' farm club, he was named to the Mid-West Class A all-star team.

During the next two seasons, Gibson played for the Brewers' Class A team in Stockton, Calif. He also played in Mexico during the winter seasons. In his initial season in Mexico, Gibson's team won the league championship.

In 1982, Gibson moved to Class AA baseball in El Paso, Texas, where he had 18 saves as his team reached the playoffs.

After the season in El Paso, Gibson was sent to Vancouver, British Columbia, for three weeks, then to Puerto Rico during the winter of 1982-1983. As the 1983 season developed, however, the Brewers were faced with a weakened bullpen.

Relief pitcher Vida Blue was still having arm troubles and was not expected to be at full potential for the season. Gibson was called in from AA to bolster the bullpen.

At the time, Brewer general manager Harry Dalton said he and the coaches anticipated no problems in bringing Gibson from Class AA to the majors without Class AAA experience. Gibson was one of 25 men named to the regular 1983 season roster of the defending American League champions. He joined the others in spring training.

Gibson's mother remembers her son's first appearance in a major league game.

"We were watching the game on television. It was at Yankee Stadium, and Bob came in with the bases loaded, no outs, and the middle of the Yankees' batting order was due up."

According to his mother, Gibson handled the situation as a relief pitcher must: "He pitched two beautiful innings and didn't give up any runs."

Gibson returned to his home in Springfield only once during the 1983 season.

"It was a very hard summer," he mother recalls, "trying to stay in touch with Bob to hear how he did in each game."

The Gibsons saw 40 of the Brewers' 160 games, traveling with their son during several road trips.

"It was fun to go on the road and register with the Brewers," his mother says.

They saw games in Milwaukee, Kansas City and other cities during a month when Gibson's dad was not working. They also saw a number of games in Baltimore.

Bob and his wife have a home in Milwaukee, but neither are there very often, except during home stands. Lori goes along with Bob to spring training, where she takes advantage of her teaching certificate to tutor the children of other Milwaukee players. She has also tutored while in Puerto Rico.

Gibson has kept in contact with another BU graduate, Ed Hess, who also pitched at Bloomsburg.

With the help of Hess, the Gibsons have started a hobby that comes with being baseball fans: collecting baseball cards. According to Lori Gibson, three companies have recently printed Gibson's rookie card. Each card has a different picture, one lists Bloomsburg on the back, and another lists Gibson's nickname as "Hoot." The Gibsons have 19 of the cards so far.

According to the Donruss baseball card, Gibson had a 3-4 win-loss record last year with two saves. In 81 innings pitched, Gibson had 45 strike-outs and an ERA of 3.80.

As the 1984 season begins, the senior Gibsons are making plans to see their son on television and at the ballparks again. And although Gibson's mother admits she is still somewhat a Phillies fan, the Milwaukee Brewers has acquired a special place in the Gibson family.

BLOOMSBURG UNIVERSITY ATHLETICS

A very successful season for Huskies

By JIM HOLLISTER
BU Sports Information Director

The 1983-84 athletic season at Bloomsburg University has been very successful, with four of five teams in action posted winning records.

□ Coach Charlie Chronister's men's basketball club was considered out of everything in late January when the Huskies lost four straight games to fall to 5-9, but BU captured 14 of its last 16 contests, including 12 consecutive games, and for the fourth year in a row reached the Pennsylvania Conference championship game.

Although Bloomsburg fell 61-54 to Mansfield in the PC title game and missed in its attempt at another trip to the NCAA Division II Tournament, the Huskies did post a 19-11 mark, the school's 18th consecutive winning season.

Senior captain Barry Francisco has already been selected for PC Eastern Division and NABC East District first team honors and has an excellent chance of becoming an All-American performer.

□ Although competing with as many as six freshmen in the lineup at one time, the wrestling team, under Roger Sanders, had a fine season piling up 14 wins against just four losses and won the Pennsylvania Conference Championship for the fourth time in six years.

A string of 12 straight dual match victories and the PC Championship highlighted the season, which continues to go on as three wrestlers are set to compete in the NCAA Division I Championships.

Eastern Wrestling League champion Rocky Bonomo (126) leads the BU performers along with brother, Rick (118) and junior John McFadden (190). The Bonomos, both first year performers, posted records of 25-3 and 24-3-1 respectively while McFadden was 18-8-1.

□ For the first time in eight years, the women's basketball team reached post-season action. Coach Sue Hibbs' squad qualified for the conference playoffs where the Huskies fell to eventual PC champion Millersville 77-66 in a preliminary round contest.

Despite an 11-14 overall record, Bloomsburg came out even (6-6) in the Eastern Division and finished in fourth place. Sophomore Jean Millen continued her assault on the record books as she was among the nation leaders in scoring (20.7 ppg.) and rebounding (15.6/game) as well as being the top rebounder in the PC.

□ To add to the long list of All-American and finish as one of the country's top 10 teams is the goal of Mary Gardner's women's swimming and diving team as the Huskies prepare for the NCAA Division II Championships.

After completing their third straight 9-1 season and placing second to powerhouse Clarion in the PC Championships, BU qualified seven competitors for the national meet and hope to improve on its 11th place showing of a year ago.

As has been the practice over the past few years, several team and pool records fell once again and senior Sue Boyer and junior Gwen Cressman, both All-Americans, carry Bloomsburg's best hopes for a strong national showing.

□ Eli McLaughlin's men's swimming team posted its third winning season in a row going 8-3 and placing sixth in the PC Championships. Bloomsburg served as host of the conference meet and several performers, most notably sprinter Ken Chaney and breaststroker Matt Thran, fell just short of national qualifying times.

McLaughlin completed his 22nd season as head coach of BU men's swimming and diving.

Good luck to all competitors in the national events and bring on the spring!

New '2+2' program for students in allied health BU now affiliated with Jefferson U

By DOROTHY DIX
Student Feature Writer

If you are a student hoping to major in physical therapy, occupational therapy, cytotechnology, or dental hygiene, and you think Bloomsburg University is not the place, look again.

Due to a new affiliation between Bloomsburg U and Thomas Jefferson's College of Allied Health Sciences in Philadelphia, students may now attend their first two years of training at Bloomsburg University, and receive their baccalaureate from Thomas Jefferson University.

In addition to the College of Allied Health Sciences, Thomas Jefferson University includes a comprehensive medical library, several clinical sites in the Philadelphia area, and a medical hospital on campus.

The students will be able to assist in actual laboratory situations, in addition to the traditional classroom settings.

"Students are not automatically enrolled into Thomas Jefferson University after they complete their two-year training at Bloomsburg," notes dean of admissions Dr. Tom Cooper.

"They must apply and be offered admittance."

Certain criteria must be met by the students, says Dr. James Cole, head of the department of biological and allied health services.

"They must have a high academic average and personal qualities that lend themselves useful in person-to-person relationships," Cole says. "Also, I recommend that they have had some working experience in a health setting, like a hospital, so that they know what they're getting involved with."

There are approximately 600 advisees in the department of biological and allied health sciences at Bloomsburg University. Of the 600, about half have chosen allied health careers and a number of them are involved in the "2+2" program.

Says Cole, who advises the 2+2 students, "The program was just introduced this fall; therefore, it is relatively new and many students may not know what it's all about."

Bloomsburg University offers baccalaureate degrees in medical technology, radiologic technology, and public school dental hygiene. With the new affiliation, the Department of Biological and Allied Health Sciences has been greatly enhanced.

Says Cole, who acts as the liaison between Thomas Jefferson University and BU, "I'm excited about it, because I think it's another avenue for people to gain skills that will eventually lead them to meaningful jobs."

Frosh reception planned

The BU Alumni Association would like to sponsor a reception for incoming freshmen from Montgomery and Bucks counties sometime in early August.

If you would like to volunteer your patio or backyard for this get-together, please contact the Alumni Office.

If these trial programs are successful, similar receptions in other geographical areas may be planned in 1985.

Bernie Donegan's career is really on the track

West Milford, N.J., Argus

Bernie Donegan doesn't run, in the strict physical sense.

"I used to jog," he laughs, "but as you can see, I got rotund and I stopped."

He does, however, run around, all over the east coast, practically every weekend from December to June, officiating at track and field meets in high schools, colleges and even the Meadowlands and Madison Square Garden.

Come next summer, the 41-year-old Ogdensburg resident (Class of 1963), may officiate at the grandest games of all: the 1984 Olympics in Los Angeles.

Donegan, science supervisor in the West Milford School District, is a track official certified by the New Jersey Track and Field Officials Association who also officiates for the Eastern Collegiate Athletics Conference and The Athletics Congress.

Donegan was asked to officiate at a track meet in 1964, when he was a teacher at Middlesex High School.

"I took a tremendous liking to it," he said.

The science supervisor has officiated at hundreds of meets, ranging from the Junior Olympics to the Millrose Games, which he calls the most prestigious indoor meet in the world.

He has served as either starter or clerk of course at meets in such colleges as Rutgers, Yale, Villanova and Princeton. (Princeton, he raves, has the best indoor running track in New Jersey.)

He has officiated at track meets in the Meadowlands and Madison Square Garden, and two years ago he officiated at the National Sports Festival held in Syracuse by the U.S. Olympic Committee.

Donegan does state sectional meets, parochial meets, mixed meets, relay events and all the championship meets for Morris County high schools.

He has also officiated at the Quantic Relays in Virginia, the IC4A Championships, the NCAA Cross Country Championships, the Olympic Invitational Meet, the National TAC Indoor Championships, the National Club Relay Championships, the International Police Olympics and the Eastern Schoolboy Championships.

With a meet here and a meet there, Donegan has gotten involved to the point where his every weekend from December through June is booked up, with an average of 80 to 90 events a year.

He also donates his time to amateur sports under the auspices of the AAU and the Junior Olympics.

Because of his, er, track record, Donegan, vice president of the executive board of the New Jersey track officials organization, was afforded the opportunity to apply to be an official at the 1984 Olympic Games.

Donegan, who has served in the West Milford district for 14 years, is married with three children, but his crowded calendar and busy weekends haven't cut into his family life.

It helps that his wife, May, a tutor in the West Milford school district, is also a track official and the daughter of John Gibson, a former Olympian who broke the world record for the 400 meter intermediate hurdles in the 1928 Games.

"I have an understanding wife, because of her track family nature," grins Donegan.

He also brings his two sons along to weekend meets — they're the real autograph collectors.

Contributions sought for Seronsy Scholarship

This May the first Cecil C. Seronsy Scholarship will be awarded to a Bloomsburg University student enrolled in a program of study leading to a bachelor of arts degree in English/general English option or a bachelor of science degree in secondary english.

The English Department invites contributions to the scholarship fund, established by his wife, Dr. Louise Seronsy, so that the grant may be increased in future years.

The award is a memorial to a scholar-teacher whose constant intellectual curiosity, wit and love of teaching inspired many graduates of Bloomsburg University over the years.

Contributions may be sent to the Alumni Office, payable to the Bloomsburg University Alumni Association, and designated for the Cecil C. Seronsy Scholarship Fund.

Computer workshop

The Bloomsburg University department of business education and office administration will sponsor a workshop on microcomputers on June 14-16 at the Hilton/Lackawanna Station in Scranton.

Highlights of the conference will include four hours of hands-on applications using various software packages: accounting, word processing, keyboarding, simulations and data bases.

Topics such as "Computer Aided Instruction," "Basics of Programming," and the "Impact of Microcomputers on the Business Education Curriculum" will be presented by recognized speakers in the field.

A fee of $10 will include registration and lunches on both days.

This conference is limited to 125 participants and is funded by the Pennsylvania State University Center for Vocational Education and Temple University Center for Vocational Education.

For further information, contact workshop coordinator Dr. John Olivo, (717) 389-4510 or 4516.

Alumni conference

Doug Hippenstiel, Bloomsburg University director of alumni affairs, served as alumni track chair at the annual conference of the Middle Atlantic District of the Council for the Advancement and Support of Education.

More than 100 alumni professionals from Pennsylvania, New York, New Jersey, Delaware, Maryland, West Virginia, District of Columbia and Ontario, Canada, attended the three-day session in Hershey.

The total registration was nearly 950, a record for CASE district conferences in the United States.

Hippenstiel was also elected program chair for the 1985 conference which will be held at the Waldorf-Astoria Hotel in New York City next January.

The program will include about 20 seminars on alumni relations, annual funds, capital campaigns, foundations/corporate relations, independent schools, institutional relations, management, periodicals, planned giving and publications.

Also attending the conference in Hershey were John L. Walker, vice president for institutional advancement; and Anthony Ianiero, director of development.

A BU senior, Scott Righter, was one of six students in the district to receive a scholarship to attend the conference.

Dr. James H. McCormick, interim chancellor of the State System of Higher Education, participated in a panel on the final day of the conference.

Roberts' poetry published

A series of recently composed incantations by Dr. Percival R. Roberts III was included in "The Clouds Threw This Light," the most comprehensive anthology of contemporary Native American poetry published to date.

Edited by Phillip Foss, this new large format book was published by the Institute of American Indian Arts Press in Santa Fe, N. Mex., with the support of the National Endowment for the Arts.

A professor of art, Dr. Roberts is on sabbatical leave this semester. He was in residence at St. Andrews College in Laurinburg, N.C., in October.

Sponseller editing newsletter

Dr. Margaret M. Sponseller, retired BU faculty member, is editing the newsletter of the Secondary Reading Council of Pennsylvania, a special interest group of the International Reading Association.

Record Bloodmobile visit

A record 377 units of blood were collected during a recent Bloodmobile visit on the BU campus. The collection was a record for a single day, according to Darlene Weidner, director of the Bloomsburg Chapter of the Red Cross.

Arts council grant received

The Pennsylvania Council of Arts recently gave a grant of $4,000 to Bloomsburg University to be used in its artist-lecturer series.

The grant will be matched by the university to bring lecturers to Bloomsburg. Programs sponsored by the Community Arts Council are open to the public.

Beamer's work exhibited

Karl Beamer, associate professor of art, was one of 12 teaching sculptors honored in the 18th exhibition of Gov. Dick Thornburgh's continuing "Salute to Pennsylvania's Artistic Heritage" series.

The exhibition, called "Sculptors Who Teach," was located in the gardens of the governor's home in Harrisburg. The artists are all teachers in accredited arts schools, colleges and universities in the state.

Beamer's piece, done in steel, was entitled "Summer Solstice." The Harrisburg native has been a member of the art faculty since 1972. He earned his bachelor of arts degree in art education at Kutztown State College (now Kutztown University) in 1966 and his master's in ceramic design and glassblowing at Penn State in 1970.

BU staff members to wed

Dale Darlene Taylor and Fredrick Victor Savadge Sr., both of Bloomsburg, plan to be married on April 14.

Both are graduates of the Pennsylvania State Police Academy and are members of the Safety and Law Enforcement staff at the university.

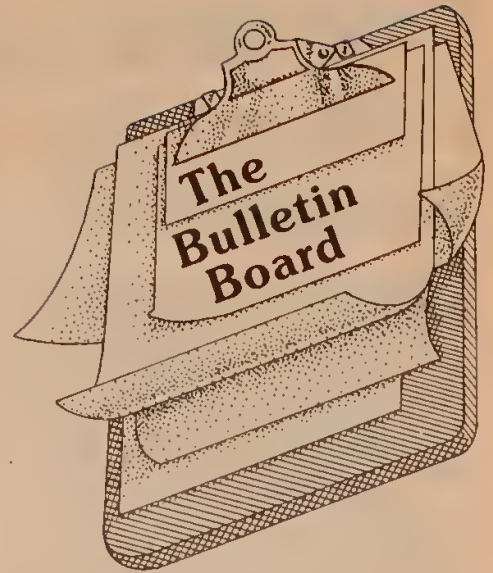

Paper selected for film talk

A paper, "Stanley Kubrick's The Shining: A Study in the Terror of Abstractionism," written by Charles T. Walters, department of art, has been selected for use in a panel discussion on film and modernism to be presented at the Northeast Modern Language Association Convention in Philadelphia this month.

Olivo earns doctorate

Dr. John Olivo, head of the Department of Business Education and Office Administration, received his doctorate at Michigan State University.

The title of his dissertation was "The Identification, Validation and Determination of Competencies Needed by Michigan Vocationally Certified Business Education Teachers in Information Processing." He joined the Bloomsburg University faculty in August 1982.

$33.1 million budget this year

During the current fiscal year, Bloomsburg University has an operating budget of $33.1 million, including $958,159 in federal grants.

The university will receive $17.8 million from the Commonwealth budget for the State System of Higher Education, along with about $13.85 million from fees and other local income.

Babineau appointed

Dr. Raymond E. Babineau, director of the school of education, has been appointed to the curriculum committee of the National Council for the Social Studies. The council represents social studies teachers in grades kindergarten through graduate school throughout the United States.

Adam Ant in concert

The Romantics and Adam Ant performed at BU on Feb. 24 under the auspices of the BU Student Concert Committee. Held in Nelson Fieldhouse, the concert was sold out.

Dance event raises $4,000

More than $4,000 was raised for the Central Pennsylvania Easter Seal Society during the annual 50-hour Dance Marathon at BU on Feb. 10-12. Kehr Union Program Board sponsored the event.

Chemical chapter honored

The BU student affiliate chapter of the American Chemical Society has been selected for special commendation as an "Outstanding Chapter" by the Committee on Chemical Education of the ACS for the 1982-1983 academic year.

It was one of 30 chapters selected from more than 800 chapters in the United States.

Selection is based on the annual reports of the chapters which give details of the year's programs and activities, such as meetings, speakers, tours and field trips, social events, and community service projects.

BU 'good idea' featured

Bloomsburg University was one of 69 universities and colleges featuring good ideas in a recent publication of the American Association of State Colleges and Universities entitled, "69 Good Ideas."

BU was featured with 16 other institutions in the section, "Teaching and Learning/Improvement of Curriculum."

The idea was described as follows: "Planning for Change in Teacher Education — A comprehensive program review aimed at determining how different groups with vested interests in teacher education can work together for improvement of preparation programs."

"Outcomes have included a systems model for planning and change; roles and generic role competencies; partnership grants with school districts; and reorganization of teacher education governance."

"Where there's a will, there's a way . . . but not always!"
This may not necessarily be to your advantage. The will provided by the state may not reflect the way you want your assets distributed.

On 100th anniversary of his birth,

By DR. ROBERT LAUBACH

Where in the world is Benton? I have heard that question many times. Certainly, anyone who has attended Bloomsburg University knows that it's just sixteen miles up Fishing Creek valley from Bloom.

From that little town of 800, early in this century, two Bentonians went forth ultimately to the ends of the earth to serve people through literacy in the Lord's name.

The two were Effa Seely, who married Frank Charles Laubach—my parents.

Benton a hundred years ago was a secure town in which to nurture youngsters in the Puritan ethic: live clean, work hard, spend little, save much, love God. Most young people growing up in Fishing Creek valley married one another and settled down in the valley to farming or some business serving farmers.

I have read that at the turn of the century only about two in a thousand young people would leave the community of their upbringing to travel far away. What forces were working on my father, to raise his eyes beyond the hills surrounding the valley with a vision of service far away? And how did my mother also happen to develop the vision to go with him to far-away lands?

My grandfather, Charles Fritz Seely was a storekeeper, in partnership with his cousin. The Pennington & Seely store was the town's department store for decades. A girl was born to Charles and Phebe Pennington Seely on Christmas Day, 1882. She was my mother, Effa.

When mother finished high school she began teaching school, as young people sometimes did in those days. She was a sturdy young woman, and could keep discipline among a class of students almost as old as she.

One woman in Benton liked to tell me, "I went to school to your mother. One day the class rowdy tried to get out of hand. But your mother caught him and shook him till the buttons popped off."

Mother then went to Dickinson Seminary in Williamsport, now Lycoming College. After teaching a couple more years she entered nurses' training at Presbyterian Hospital in Philadelphia. After graduation she rose to night superintendent. Not far away was Frank Laubach, a student at Princeton University.

My Dad was born September 2, 1884. This year, of course, the centennial of his birth, is a great event for the people of Benton. A week-long celebration is planned. A highlight will be the issuing by the U.S. Postal Service of a 30-cent stamp honoring Frank C. Laubach in its Great American series. That event will be at 2 P.M. on Sunday,

Dr. Laubach holds high the globe as he tells America about the countries (covered with black stripes) that are in need of better nutrition, better health, better economic development and literacy.

Taken in 1960, this photo shows Dr. Laubach sitting atop Signal Hill, the place where he felt God speak to him early in his mission.

September 2, in Benton High School, and is open to the public.

Grandfather John Brittain Laubach was a dentist, and my grandmother, Harriet Derr was a saintly woman, my dad always said, though she died before I was old enough to remember her. Sure enough, years later, she was included in a book on great American mothers.

Grandfather J.B. was an institution in the little town, and practiced dentistry until he was in his eighties. Though he died in 1935, I would bump into Bentonians thirty years later who'd tell me, "I'm still wearing a set of your grandfather's teeth."

J.B. and Harriet encouraged good reading by their son. While still in his teens, Dad had read most of the Harvard five-foot shelf of great books, and started reading the Bible regularly. His Sunday school teacher, and the principal of the high school, were influences helping him raise his sights to the needs of the whole world.

Dad also taught school right out of high school. Then he went down to the Normal School in Bloomsburg, which we know now as the University. To prepare for college he went to Perkiomen School in Pennsburg, Pa., and then entered the 1909 class of Princeton University.

Mother liked to tell me that, while she and Dad of course knew each other growing up in Benton, "We didn't pay much attention to one another then."

Now, with Princeton and Philadelphia only a short train ride apart, they began to pay attention to one another.

My Dad had been feeling for some time that God was calling him to the ministry and perhaps the mission field. God's messenger came in the form of my mother's cousin, Harry Edwards.

Harry Edwards had gone to the Philippines soon after it became a U.S. territory following the Spanish-American War of 1898. He was one of thousands of school teachers sent to begin educating the Filipinos on their long road to independence, which they eventually won after World War II.

On a return trip to Benton, Harry talked about the Philippines in glowing terms. And he mentioned the Muslims on the southern island of Mindanao, a group called the Maranaos. My dad took this as the Lord calling him to prepare to serve these Muslim peoples, in one of the most difficult and strategic mission fields on earth.

Mother had heard her cousin, too, and during the years of courting in Princeton and Philadelphia she also felt the Lord's call.

Frank Laubach and Effa Seely were married May 15, 1912, in the Methodist Church in Benton. Three more years of preparation lay ahead of them in New York City, with study at Columbia University, Union Theological Seminary, and Biblical Seminary.

There was no Congregational Church in Benton—there still isn't—but they joined the Congregational mission board for a practical reason. When the Protestants went into the Philippines after the Spanish American War they agreed that each denomination would work in a different area to avoid competition. The Congregational mission board had the area where the Maranaos lived.

My folks' choice was a wise one. The Congregational church (now the United Church of Christ) provided Dad with great freedom, turning him loose on the world as a missionary at large for the last thirty years of his career, after the literacy work began on a big scale.

On January 1, 1915, my folks boarded the Phoebe Snow in Scranton for the Backawanna train trip to Chicago, and across to the west coast, followed by the long ocean voyage to Manila, capital of the Philippines, in the South China Sea.

In 1915, Dad's anticipation at working with the Maranaos was "dashed to smithereens," as he would say. The U.S. authorities wouldn't allow mission work in the Muslim areas. A quick history lesson will show why.

Magellan discovered the Philippines in 1521, and the islands were named for King Philip II of Spain. Soon after that, Spanish soldiers encountered Muslims on the southern island of Mindanao.

The last Moor had been expelled from Spain only a few years before, in 1492, the same year Columbus discovered America. When the Spanish Christians found Muslims on these Pacific isles, they misnamed them moros, their word for the dreaded Moors.

Unfortunately, the Christian-Muslim conflict continued for Spain's 375 years in the islands. There is today great unrest, and a militant movement for a completely autonomous Muslim state).

In 1915, American soldiers were needed among the Maranaos to keep the peace. The American governor told my Dad to wait—Dad didn't know how long the wait would be. It turned out to be fifteen years!

My father and mother settled in Cagayan, in the Christian area on the north shore of Mindanao. There Dad started a church which today is among the largest congregations of the United Church of Christ in the Philippines.

The latter part of the first fifteen years my folks lived in Manila, where Dad taught at Union Theological Seminary. I was born in Manila in 1918 and lived there through fourth grade. Thanks to Harry Edwards and the thousands of other American school teachers, the public schools were fine. I picked up some Filipino accent, but learned the Three R's and a lot more in public school in the Philippines right through high school.

My folks had lost three little boys in Cagayan, as health and sanitary conditions were dreadful in those days. They never talked about their loss in front of me, I think, so that I wouldn't grow up with the worry of being the only one to carry on. I found out about it many years later from letters and photos from an old trunk in Grandmother Seely's attic in Benton.

Dad was extremely busy during the first fifteen years

Dr. Frank Laubach's work lives in the Philippines. He had developed the habit of writing while still in Benton, and in Normal School and in college. He wrote a scholarly book, THE PEOPLE OF THE PHILIPPINES, still used as a reference. He wrote several popular books on the islands and the gentle and intelligent Filipinos. His many articles in mission periodicals made him well known in mission circles.

But Dad's eyes were constantly turning southward, where the Maranaos lived. Finally, in 1929, following our furlough in Benton (where I attended fifth grade), conditions were peaceful enough among the Maranaos that he got the go-ahead to begin work.

But there still was inadequate housing there, so my mother and I stayed in the north for the first eighteen months of Dad's pioneer work among the Muslim Maranaos.

We refer to these months as the Signal Hill period. During his first fifteen years, Dad had a growing feeling that his mission career wasn't what God had expected of him. He had felt unled.

Now he was among the Maranaos, to whom the Lord had called him years before. But frustration was all he encountered the first few weeks.

Dad had been trained as a sociologist and educator. He thought he would start, as missionary pioneers usually did, with a school for children, followed by a teachers' training school, a clinic and a church.

But the Maranaos would have none of these. They had a long record of burning down school houses and chasing the teacher out of town, if indeed he survived with his life. The centuries of strife had made the Muslims suspicious of anything smacking of superiority. Though Dad was filled with the best of intentions, their suspicion focused on him. They greeted his initial attempts to help them with rebuff.

Signal Hill was just that—a hill about a hundred feet high fifteen minutes' walk from town, where soldiers had wigwagged messages to other outposts. Dad found God on Signal Hill, night after night, beneath the glorious tropical sunsets.

"What's the matter, Lord?" he would pray. "I've come with such good training and with such good intentions. But they won't listen."

He wrote many letters home to Grandpa J.B., which were printed in the Benton Argus. A collection of these was put into a little booklet years later, "Letters of a Modern Mystic."

One evening on Signal Hill, as he wrote home, his lips began to move and it seemed to him that God was speaking to him:

"My child, you have failed because you do not really love these Maranaos. You feel superior to them because you are white. If you can forget you are an American and think only how I love them, they will respond."

Then my father answered, "God, I don't know whether you spoke to me through my lips, but if you did, it was the truth. I hate myself. My plans have all gone to pieces. Drive me out of myself, come and take possession of me and think thy thoughts in my mind."

In his book, THE SILENT BILLION SPEAK, Dad later wrote, "In that terrible, wonderful hour on Signal Hill I became color-blind. Every missionary goes through some such experience as that—or comes home defeated."

Signal Hill was the turning point. He kept going back up that hill night after night, as God helped him and the Maranaos learn to love one another.

Hadjji Pambaya had started teaching Dad the Maranao language. This hadji (one who has been to Mecca) and several panditas (Muslim priests) began an odd seminar with Dad. They began reading the Koran together. Dad had one in English, and theirs was in Arabic. They found that the two religions had much in common, including the prophets, from Abraham to Nabl Isa (Prophet Jesus).

When Dad asked where their Koran in the Maranao language was, the answer was they had none—because their language had never been written. The next natural step was to see how our ABCs might fit into the Marano language. To their delight, they found that anything in Marano could be spelled with only twelve consonants and four vowels. That language has no bothersome "th" or "ch" or other sounds in English. In fact, there is no "f" in the Philippines languages, so they say Pilipino instead of Filipino.

Dad made real sure that they spelled the language perfectly regular. When they learned that o was long o as in gold it was never anything else (in English o is pronounced at least ten ways, depending on what word you find it in).

With such a good spelling system, Dad found that men and women could learn to read in just one day! Of course, they weren't fast readers until they had more practice, but they could learn the spelling system in a day—brighter ones in half a day.

Dad began teaching people, and then employing new literates to teach others. His teachers were paid from $2 to $10 a month! When mother and I joined Dad a few months later I learned how to set type and run our foot treadle press. Our mission press was the only publisher in the Maranao language! But by 1931 our printers were setting a thousand pages each year by hand, and printing more than a million sheets.

The Maranao people loved their new literacy. Women learned how to take better care of their babies; men read of new farming techniques. The news of the world came to them for the first time in their own language. Now they could stay out of jail because they could read the laws of the land in their own language.

The other parts of the Philippines heard about the ferment to learn to read. A national magazine called it the Maranao Miracle.

But the miracle almost came to a halt. The depression of the 1930s caused people in the churches back home to curtail their giving to missions. Dad's mission board had to cut his budget in half. He had almost 75 teachers on the payroll, of $2 to $10, a sizeable total each month. Sadly, he called them in, one by one, to give them the bad news. They understood, but it looked as if the whole literacy program would have to be closed down.

Frank and Effa Laubach on their 55th wedding anniversary in May 1967

One powerful datu (chief) would not let it stop! In a meeting of the datu he said, "I have been observing the men and women in my village. This literacy is a very good thing. I will not let it stop. Anyone who has learned to read must teach some else—or else!" He pulled a curved dagger from his belt and drew it across his throat. The others knew what he meant.

That was Datu Kakai Dagalangit, a one-eyed chief with thirteen wives (an indication of his power!). Datu Kakai invented "Each One Teach One." And we never heard of anyone dying because he didn't teach!

This was a new Maranao Miracle. Previously, although hundreds were learning to read, the program was limited by the number of teachers—and the budget. Now every new literate was a potential teacher. Literacy took off like a prairie fire. One could soon walk around the villages and see signs on many homes, 100% LITERATE.

This must be where we stop with the details of the Miracle of Literacy. What started among the Maranaos spread around the world during the next forty years. Dad visited 105 countries, often with mother and me, and helped start Each One Teach One programs in 315 languages. A complete chronicle of his visits is found in his FORTY YEARS WITH THE SILENT BILLION.

He worked with missions through the World Council of Churches, and with governments in every continent. Today, I can go to see the minister of education in any one of fifty nations, mention Each One Teach One and get instant recognition.

Through Each One Teach One an estimated 60 million people have learned to read. I didn't count them, but years ago Life magazine estimated that number. It may have doubled since then.

The United States honors my father with the stamp in its Great American series. People know him as the founder of the world-wide literacy movement, that continued to bring the light of literacy to millions.

Most people don't know about his inner life, which began as a young man back in Benton, and was honed on Signal Hill. His inner life, which he practiced until the day he died, resulted in two dozen books on prayer and living close to God.

And little credit has been given to my mother. She was an exceptional woman, and without a wife like Effa Seely, Dad would not have been able to accomplish the wonders he did.

My life-long friend, the late Martin Appleman of Benton, has put it best:

"If ever a man's success was based on the dedication of his wife, she was one of the greatest examples."

Effa Seely and Frank Charles Laubach are two persons Benton and Bloomsburg can be proud of. I know I am.

About the author

Dr. Bob, as he likes to be called, was born in Manila, Philippines on October 25, 1918, where his parents were missionaries.

Bob Laubach's parents, Frank Charles and Effa Seely Laubach, were both Benton natives. Frank in his early years felt the call to the mission field, especially to serve the Muslims in the Philippines.

When his father began literacy work among the Maranao peoples of the Philippines, young Bob was in high school. He learned to set type and run the foot-treadle printing press in their mission publishing house. It was the only publisher in the Maranao language for the people that Frank Laubach's new "Each One Teach One" literacy program was servng.

"Each One Teach One" became known around the world. Following college and World War II, Bob joined his father's work, traveling with him to some 75 countries. Everywhere, Bob saw the need for writers and printers of literature for newly literate peoples. The printer's ink he had got under his nails as a teenager in the Philippines prompted him to go into the field of literacy journalism.

Bob went to Syracuse University for an M.A. in journalism. He began teaching literacy communications in the Newhouse Communications School of that university, where he taught for 31 years until 1981. Now, he can visit former students in 50 different countries.

Bob married the former Frances Brown of North Carolina in 1953. They have four children: Charles, 27, Laura, 25, Ann, 23, and Emily, 20.

Bob became Dr. Bob in 1963 when he earned his Ph.D. in reading education from Syracuse University. He had started a publishing house, New Readers Press, and a weekly newspaper, News for You, that today is the largest newspaper in the nation for adults with limited reading abilities.

Bob's parents retired from the mission board in 1955 and soon afterwards started Laubach Literacy International, with present headquarters in Syracuse. Frank Laubach died in 1970 and Effa in 1973, both are buried in Benton, Pa.

Laubach Literacy has 40,000 volunteers tutoring throughout the United States and maintains work overseas in six countries. New Readers Press, which it acquired from Dr. Bob, is a leading U.S. publisher for new literates. Dr. Bob's co-author of the Laubach Way to Reading, used by tutors in the United States, and is chairman of the board of Laubach Literacy International.

Dr. Bob's hobbies are photography (he has slide shows from Afghanistan to Zululand), and stamp and model railroad collecting. His wife, Fran, is a teacher of English as a second language, and an accomplished rug hooker. For both of them now that the children have left home, travel is a hobby, especially when literacy calls them to countries on every continent.

Dr. Bob Laubach speaks at dedication of library while Barbara Bush, wife of Vice President George Bush, looks on.

Five professors from the College of Arts and Sciences have been designated as outstanding faculty in their college by the Arts and Sciences Student Council.

Nominations of faculty members by students were reviewed and the qualifications of each nominee were discussed at a meeting early in the semester before the voting took place. Criteria included teaching ability, advisement ability, involvement with students, extracurricular activities and community service.

This year's outstanding faculty are Robert Koslosky, art; Mary Kenny Badami, communication studies; Charles Laudermilch, sociology-social welfare; Ervene Guiley, English; and Paul Cochrane, mathematics and computer science.

Koslosky is known for his courses in Introduction to Art, Art History, Art for the Exceptional Child and Art Therapy. The council felt that he played an important role in making art meaningful to students who have had only his introduction class and served as an inspiration to those who chose art as their major. Students commented on his good rapport with students as well as his concern with the exceptional child.

Badami was chosen for her dynamic lecture style and her great deal of personalized attention to challenge her students. She was praised not only for her advisement skills but for her extracurricular work with the Mass Communication Club and the Women's Coalition. She is chairperson of the communication studies department's program evaluation committee and the curriculum committee. She also serves as a member of the department's graduate committee. She recently developed two courses to be added to the department and is involved in various community activities.

As a member of the sociology department, Laudermilch is willing to spend time in advisement with students and helping them outside the classroom, according to council members. He was cited for his quality lectures and his use of examples and projects during his classes. He was also praised for his many activities, including his role in the development of interdisciplinary career concentration, his service to the community via the Columbia County Mental Health Association, and the Head Start, Church Youth and youth sports programs.

Guiley is advisor to Sigma Tau Delta, the English Honor Society, and is chairperson of the humanities subcommittee. She was chosen for recognition on the basis of her lively classes, personalized attention to the work of students and her caring attitude. Students in the council appreciated her advisement on personal as well as academic matters and her willingness to adapt her programs to the needs of students. She has made her home available to the English honor society on numerous occasions.

According to both upper and lower math students, Cochrane has the ability to express concepts in intuitive terms so that material students thought they might never master became clearly understood. He has been praised for his high level of organization and his great concern for students. Like the other four nominees, Cochrane was selected for his deep commitment to quality instruction.

This is the third year that outstanding faculty have been recognized by the student council. Dean Alfred Forsyth, advisor to the council, stated, "I am delighted that our Arts and Sciences Student Council recognizes outstanding faculty in this manner. Because our College of Arts and Sciences has many outstanding faculty, it was difficult to limit this recognition to five faculty members for 1983-1984."

The student council includes representatives from each of the majors in the College of Arts and Sciences. The members are chosen on the basis of enthusiasm for their major, responsibility, and academic suitability for the position.

Ghosh acting provost, veeep

Dr. Kalyan Ghosh, associate vice president for academic affairs at Bloomsburg University, has been appointed acting provost and vice president for academic affairs of the university for the period of July 1, 1984 to December 31, 1984.

Dr. Ghosh replaces Dr. JoAnne Growney, who has been acting in this capacity since July 1, 1983 and will be on sabbatical leave for the 1984-85 school year.

Dr. Ghosh came to the university in August, 1982, from Shaw College, Detroit, Michigan, where he had been executive vice president and vice president for academic affairs over a four-year period.

He previously was a professor of chemistry and vice president for academic affairs at Shaw University, Raleigh, North Carolina, from which he was associated 11 years. During his tenure at Shaw College, Dr. Ghosh also worked for National Institutes of Health, Bethesda, Maryland, immediately prior to joining Bloomsburg University.

Ghosh earned his bachelor of science degree in chemistry and his master of science degree in chemical technology and Ph.D. degree in applied chemistry at the University of Calcutta. Dr. Ghosh came to the United States as a Fulbright scholar.

He has attended a number of management and educational institutes at Harvard, Duke and Akron Universities, along with participating in American Management Association courses.

Other administrative changes announced by Acting President Larry Jones include the following:

Dr. Daniel Pantaleo, dean of the college of graduate studies and extended programs, will be acting associate vice president for the July through December time period.

Dr. Charles Carlson, assistant vice president for academic affairs, will serve as dean of the College of Graduate Studies and Extended Programs.

These appointments are intended to coincide with the search for the permanent president of the university, which is expected to be completed by the end of the year.

Faculty, staff members retire

Retirements

The retirements of five faculty members and seven non-instructional employees have been announced by Acting President Larry W. Jones.

J. Weston Baker, associate professor of accounting, retired July 6. He came to BU in January 1969, and completed 15 years of service.

Baker was faculty advisor to the Bloomsburg Christian Association and served on the membership committee of APSCUF and as a member of his department's evaluation and accounting committees.

Dr. Glenn Good, associate professor of curriculum and foundations, came to BU in September 1969 from the Shikellamy School District of Sunbury where he was a supervising principal. His retirement was effective at the end of the 1983-84 academic year. He completed 33 years in education, 15 of which were at BU.

At Bloomsburg, Good was a supervisor of seniors doing their student teaching in Central Pennsylvania. He served as a member of the university's Representative Assembly.

Dr. Ray Rost, professor of curriculum and foundations, retired at the end of June after 28 years in education, 15 of which were at BU.

For a period of nine years starting in 1971, Rost served as chairman of the educational studies department, and from 1969 to 1983 he was advisor and coordinator of the ROTC program. He recently served as acting director of the Curriculum Materials Center for a year.

Mrs. Virginia Duck, assistant professor of English, retired in December at the end of 31 years of teaching, 25 of which were at BU.

In 1977, she was the only Pennsylvanian of twenty college English professors from across the nation to participate in a Goodwill People-to-People inspection program to improve relations and understanding between Americans and people of Western Europe and the Soviet Union. She was active in a number of campus committees and holds membership in several state and national professional organizations.

Milton Levin, associate professor of curriculum and foundations, joined the faculty in August, 1967, and his retirement was effective on February 18 of this year. Levin spent the majority of the time he was associated with the university in Montgomery County teaching graduate and undergraduate classes and supervising student teachers in that area.

Recent non-instructional retirements included Thomas Harder, labor foreman II, Philip Pealer, custodian worker; Robert Fausey, painter foreman, Stella Kalbach, data recording machine operator; Donald Keller, painter, and Catherine Richie, housemother.

Dean retires

Dr. Emory W. Rarig Jr., dean of the College of Business since 1970, is retiring from that post in December to return to the classroom as a teacher.

Rarig, 58, a native of Catawissa, explained that the decision to return to teaching after 16 years was simply a personal one, allowing more time for research, travel and publishing.

"Besides, I would also like to see my wife for a while," he joked, referring to the heavy demands on his time as an administrator. His wife, Elizabeth, is an assistant professor of nursing at the university.

Rarig said he also misses the daily teacher-student interaction of the classroom. He last taught at Columbia University in 1968.

"The many new and exciting teaching methods has created in me a strong desire to return to the classroom," Rarig said.

"When I came here, the department of business education was 425 students; the College of Business now has 2,000," he said. "There were 15 faculty, now there are 46. There was only one division, now there are five departments.

"I felt I had a mission to accomplish, and I have completed that. The main idea is to give the College of Business a respect and thrust which will carry it through accreditation by the American Association of Collegiate Schools of Business.

"Perhaps a 16-year tenure was far too long, and my effectiveness was diminished. A fresher voice with new ideas and refreshing strength will be a real asset."

Acting President Larry W. Jones thanked Rarig for his 16 years of faithful service to the university. Rarig will be on sabbatical leave during the spring 1985 semester to prepare for his return to the classroom in the department of marketing and management.

A 1951 graduate of Bloomsburg University, he received the Husky Award that year. He received master's and doctoral degrees in business education and administration from Columbia University in 1963 and 1968, respectively.

He has served as advisor to the Business Honor Society and the largest chapter in the nation of Phi Beta Lambda, a national business organization.

Rarig was an original member of the university planning commission and its past secretary. He was included in the 1981 Cambridge list of International Who's Who Among Intellectuals. He has also been honored as an outstanding trustee of Lackawanna Junior College.

Advisory unit meets

The annual meeting of the Business Advisory Board of the College of Business was held in June with Dr. Emory W. Rarig Jr., dean of the College of Business, in charge of arrangements.

The advisory board was established in 1980 to provide a direct mode of communication to and from prominent business leaders and industries in the community in order to help evaluate and update business programs for currency and relevance. The agenda included a special report from Dr. Tom Cooper, dean of admissions and records.

Senior members of the board include E. H. Alkire, chairman of the board, Air Products and Chemicals, Allentown; Richard A. Benefield, vice president and managing director, Hotel Magee, Bloomsburg; Robert W. Ellis, Quality Inns, Lancaster; Gary W. Hammer, CPA with Stanley Vidmar, Allentown; Harriet Kocher, Quality Inns International, Scottsdale, Arizona; Richard F. Laux, chief executive officer, United Penn Bank, Wilkes-Barre; Carl Nurick, AT&T, Philadelphia; Janet Sherman, Geisinger Medical Center, Danville; and Nelson A. Swarts, I.B.M., New Jersey.

Recently installed members of the board include Steven J. Bright, CPA with Ernst and Whinney, Reading; Stephen M. Cicak, Atlantic Insurance, Wilkes-Barre; Robert J. Gible, Beard and Company, Reading; Aaron Johnson, McNeil Pharmaceuticals, Springhouse, Pa.; Joseph R. Lesko, PP&L, Allentown; R. Randolph May, Pinebrook Homes, Inc., Danville; Marshall Mehring, Ralston Purina Company, Mechanicsburg; Robert Moyer, Shawnee Development, Inc., Shawnee-on-Delaware; Kenneth E. Nadel, Magee Enterprises, Inc., Bloomsburg; and Denise Tobolla, PP&L, Allentown.

Study in Italy planned

By JULIE A. FENSTERMACHER

Student Feature Writer

Bloomsburg University students will have the opportunity to go to Italy next summer. The trip is to be a study/tour arranged by Anthony Sylvester, associate professor of history, through the University's International Education Program. This is one of the few times that an international exchange program has included Italy, Sylvester says.

Students who participate on the study/tour will attend the University of Pavia, where Sylvester will conduct a course entitled "The Social and Intellectual History of Europe." Those students who go will earn three credits and have the choice of taking a course in either history or painting. A minimum number of students will be required to conduct the study/tour, but as of yet that number has not been determined. The study/tour is not limited to students and faculty; alumni of Bloomsburg University may also participate in the study/tour.

Sylvester visited Italy in 1983, while on sabbatical. During the six weeks he spent there, he studied the Italian Nationalist movement, the Risorgimento.

"The information I gathered," says Sylvester, "will be useful in my class, 'The History and Theory of Socialism,' as well as 'The Modern World.'"

Sylvester also made preparations for the study/tour. To do this he traveled throughout Europe by train, noting that "trains are a very efficient and inexpensive way to travel. You also have the opportunity to meet the people of the country, which you don't get if you travel on buses with only your group."

Students will have time to travel to other countries on the weekends and around the countryside during the week — by train of course.

Sylvester has taken students on trips, such as this one to Italy, many times. However, his first trip overseas was with the Army after he was drafted in 1954, and sent to England and France. Since then he has been to the Soviet Union many times and to Italy four times. Sylvester has a master's and a bachelor's degree from Rutgers in New Jersey, as well as having done some additional study at the University of Chicago. His involvement with students is not limited to history, for Sylvester is also the advisor to several clubs, including the bike club and CAS, in addition to his trips abroad.

While in Italy, Sylvester not only made plans for American students to go there, but he also arranged for an Italian student to come here. Beginning January, 1985, an Italian student will come to Bloomsburg to study and learn about America.

Sylvester hopes that this can be the beginning of future exchange programs coordinated with the BU International Education office.

Presidential search

The Presidential Search Committee invites nominations and applications for President of Bloomsburg University of Pennsylvania. The position is one of high visibility and dictates that the successful candidate have superior interpersonal skills as well as a distinguished academic background and experience in an administrative capacity. An earned doctorate is preferred.

Bloomsburg University, one of fourteen institutions in the State System of Higher Education, is located in the Susquehanna Valley of east-central Pennsylvania.

Through its Colleges of Arts and Sciences, Business, and Professional Studies, the University offers 65 degree programs for its nearly 5,000 undergraduate students. The College of Graduate Studies and Extended Programs serves an additional 1,300 graduate and non-degree students. The University maintains a diversified student body competitively selected.

Starting date is at a time convenient to the University and the successful candidate, but no later than July 1, 1985. Letter of applications and resume postmarked by September 15, 1984 and three letters of recommendation should be submitted to:

Quest: 'Dealing with decision'

BU Graduate Student

Eleven people are standing on a windy mountain top in New Hampshire. For three days they have trekked through the White Mountains hoping to complete a circuitous route of about thirty miles. Each person carries about forty pounds of equipment on their back. Until this point they have covered about nine miles.

The worst March blizzard to hit the White Mountains in 100 years began on the second day of the trip, dumping over two feet of snow on top of the four feet of snow already on the ground. The deep snow has slowed the group's progress to a crawling pace; the hikers have worn snowshoes for the past two days. Many of the hikers are inexperienced in this type of terrain, and the combination of the snowshoes and the heavy packs is causing fatigue.

Now, on the fourth day out, the three women and eight men are huddled on Mt. Bond (elev. 4700 ft.) in a bitter wind, weighing their options. They are trying to decide whether they should try to complete their original course, attempt a modified, shorter course, or turn around and go back.

About half want to go back, half want to go on. The wind gathers force, and teeth begin to chatter, but the consensus that the group seeks cannot be reached. Members of the group, most of whom did not know each other before the trip began, have been polite and friendly toward each other so far, but now tensions are beginning to surface.

One group member suggests that the group turn back because they may become stranded in the mountains if another storm hits while they are further out. Another reasons that no one can predict the weather, and that is where the challenge of the trip lies. The group divides along the lines of these two arguments, and it begins to look to some as if spring will come and settle the issue for them before they can agree on a solution.

Finally the group decides to vote; the choice of the majority will determine what course of action will be taken. By one vote, the group decides to turn back. No one seems truly satisfied.

More debate ensues as the wind gains momentum. Another vote is taken, and by a more decisive measure, the group decides to go on. As if on cue, the wind subsides and sun breaks through.

Everyone seems genuinely satisfied with this choice, and a new enthusiasm spreads through the group. They opt for a modified route, and complete 13 miles in the next two days, for a total of 22 miles over the six days of the trip.

The group members who completed the New Hampshire expedition were not members of a professional hiking organization, and many had never experienced winter camping before this trip. Most of the hikers were Bloomsburg University students participating in the university's Quest program, an experiential learning program run by Bill Proudman.

After the journey is completed, the hikers will look back on that windy afternoon, and realize how many lessons for life were presented by a seemingly immediate, isolated incident. For Proudman, that realization is the focus of the Quest philosophy. The valuable part of a trip is how you apply what you learn during six days of snowshoeing to the routine of your life. Quest is more than an 'outing program' for Proudman, who pointed out that on Mt. Bond, "whether we went forward or back wasn't the issue, the issue was dealing with the consequences of that decision."

Dave Murphy, a junior chemistry major who made the New Hampshire trip, just wanted to go further than that one point. Murphy felt insignificant when looking 70 miles to the northeast and seeing snow covered mountains rising about a layer of clouds....only a person who has been there can feel the value of that. Murphy voted to go on both times "because I knew we could do it, the group was made up of dynamic individuals. Once we made the decision to go on, the weather changed and the sun seemed to warm everything up."

Sara Hesse, a Quest intern from Minnesota, felt that "if we couldn't get a consensus there would be a real split in the group." Hesse was impressed that everyone wanted to unite and go for the same goal... there was no bitterness about the decision. The New Hampshire wilderness also impressed Hesse. For her, the payoff is an isolated beauty, you don't see anyone else out there.

The New Hampshire winter back-packing expedition is one of many programs sponsored and supervised by Quest throughout the year. Quest seeks to present opportunities for personal growth to students, faculty, staff, and community. The program is in its tenth year and serves 1600 students per year.

For Dave Murphy the value of the Quest trip went beyond the beautiful scenery of the White Mountains and the group lessons learned. "It was the perfect chance to get away and re-orient myself; I came back feeling eight miles high."

Faculty promoted, tenured

Eleven faculty members at BU have been granted promotions by the Council of Trustees, while ten others have been approved for tenure.

Those promoted to higher positions within the teaching ranks were among 35 considered for promotions, according to JoAnne Growney, acting provost and vice president for academic affairs.

Acting President Larry Jones explained that faculty ranking begins with instructor status, and progresses to assistant, associate and full professorships.

Promoted from associate professor to full professor:
Wayne P. Anderson, chemistry;
Duane D. Braun, geography and earth science;
Judith P. Downing, biology;
Mary Lou John, languages and cultures;
J. Edward Kerlin Jr., mathematics and computer science; and Woo Bong Lee, economics.

Promoted from assistant to associate professor:
M. Christine Alichnie, nursing;
James H. Dallan Jr., psychology; and Harry C. Strine III, communications studies.

Promoted from instructor to assistant professor:

Shell E. Lundahl, counseling; and Barbara B. Synowiez, nursing.

Approved for tenure:

M. Christine Alichnie, nursing;

Donald M. Baird, chemistry;

Vincent W. Jenkins, counseling;

Janice C. Keil, business education and office management;

Ann L. Lee, communication disorders and special education.

Shell E. Lundahl, counseling;

Lynne C. Miller, biological and allied health sciences;

Howard N. Schreier, communications studies;

Dale L. Sultzbaugh, sociology and social welfare; and James E. Tomlinson, communications studies.

Minority alumni return to BU for special program

By ANDREW HEINTZELMAN
Student Feature Writer

In an attempt to give minority students a more realistic career outlook, several administrative offices at Bloomsburg University coordinated and conducted the first Minority Alumni Weekend, bringing 18 minority alumni and guests to campus and involving nearly 60 BU minority students.

"It was a very worthwhile, productive day," according to Tom Davies, director of the Career Development Center, who helped organize the program. "The (minority) students liked the fact that alumni, faculty, and President Jones listened to them."

Davies said it was the minority students, in fact, who requested that minority alumni come to BU.

According to Penelope Broach, admissions counselor, the alumni shared coping strategies and skills, and the students had a chance to touch base with history.

Held in April, Minority Alumni Weekend was a new version of the Minority Career Program which has been conducted at BU for many years, Davies said.

"The Minority Alumni Weekend was designed to give minority students a more realistic career outlook than the Minority Career Program offered," he said.

One beneficial aspect of Minority Alumni Weekend was that minority students had a chance to talk about problems, both social and academic, which they face at Bloomsburg.

BU art professor John Cook said the weekend was the beginning of trying to improve things.

Cook says he was impressed and inspired by the alumni and how they responded to student requests for advice.

"Some of the alumni are very successful; and they had their problems while here," Cook said. "But they got a good education, and they encouraged students to stick it out, get their educations, and prepare for the outside world."

With the success of this year's Minority Alumni Weekend, the students and administrators involved think it would be worthwhile to have minority alumni come to BU at least twice a year, providing more time for alumni to talk with students one-on-one.

Other recommendations made during and following Minority Alumni Weekend would better utilize minority alumni. Working in areas where they live, the alumni would assist with minority student recruitment, job placement and interviewing, according to Davies. Overall, the minority alumni may help provide a needed support network to deal with non-academic minority concerns.

The minority alumni's involvement with their alma mater doesn't end there. Because at least seven alumni present at Minority Alumni Weekend were interested in employment at BU, the university will be mailing job openings during future searches, according to Dr. Adrienne Leinwand-Jones, BU's director of affirmative action, who was also involved with the program.

The job vacancy notices will give minority alumni a chance to inform other appropriate people of openings as well, Dr. Leinwand-Jones said.

A recommendation has also been made for the BU Alumni Association to incorporate formal programming for minority alumni into the larger alumni organization.

According to Broach, "We've made history with Minority Alumni Weekend and the recommendations made since. A more diverse, ethnic environment will provide a richness on the Bloomsburg campus."

Following Minority Alumni Weekend, Professor Cook continues to work on his proposal for a multi-cultural center, which he says would enrich the BU campus. Cook believes the multi-cultural center would also help with the problem of retaining minority students at BU by providing a better social environment for minority students.

Other individuals who assisted in Minority Alumni Weekend were Dr. Jerrold Griffis, vice president for student life; John Walker, vice president for institutional advancement; Dr. Tom Cooper, dean of admissions; Carol Barnett, assistant director, Career Development and Placement; Doug Hippenstiel, director, Alumni Affairs; Irvin Wright, assistant director, Center for Academic Development; and Acting President Larry W. Jones.

Alumni who returned to BU for Minority Alumni Weekend were Aaron Johnson '79, North Brunswick, N.J.; John James '74 and his wife, Karen, Somerset, N.J.; James Weatherly '77, Chester, Pa.; Carolyn Poilard McGinnis '81, Levittown, Pa.; Augustus Tibbs '58, Norristown, Pa.; Wayne Whitaker '79 and his wife Debbie '81, Wilkes-Barre, Pa.; Jerlesha Hoover Gilbert '74 and her husband, Jon, York, Pa.; Dr. Eizar Camper '70, Norristown, Pa.; Marian Wilson '82, Williamsport, Pa.; Rolland Taylor '79, Warminster, Pa.; Rebekah Ward Mitchell '69 and her husband, Wesley, Harrisburg, Pa.; Pameia Morse '80, Philadelphia, Pa.

Minority Alumni Weekend was jointly sponsored by the Office of Career Development and Placement, the Admissions Office, the Alumni Office, the Affirmative Action office, and the Campus-Wide Committee on Human Relations.

Eight elected to Alumni Board

Eight Bloomsburg University graduates were elected to the Board of Directors of the Alumni Association during Alumni Weekend in June.

Joining the board for the first time, to serve a three-year term, are Dale A. Krothe, Berwick, Class of 1960, and Mary Anne Majikas Klemosky, Orwigsburg, Class of 1959.

Re-elected to three-year terms were Lois Lawson, Bloomsburg, Class of 1933; Douglas McClintock, Berwick, Class of 1973; Stephen A. Andrejack, Mechanicsburg, Class of 1974; Carolyn L. Carr, Alexandria, Va., Class of 1974; Joan Havard Kilroy, Morrisville, Class of 1954.

Elected to an unexpired one-year term was Lucinda Black, Philadelphia, Class of 1983. Black, serving for the first time, is filling a vacancy on the board resulting from the resignation of Dr. Robert Boose, Class of 1968, who has moved to Maine to become that state's commissioner of education.

Retiring from the board were Alfred Cyganowski, Class of 1953, and Eva Mekeel Mack, Class of 1977.

Ten students get alumni grants

Ten BU students have been awarded research grants totalling $2,800 by the BU Alumni Association. The grants were provided by alumni who contributed to the Deans' Fund for Excellence (part of the Annual Fund).

The recipients included E. Lynn Brobyn, Bloomsburg, early childhood education;

Tammy Clewell, Bethlehem, sociology-social welfare; Sberri Levin, Philadelphia, sociology-social welfare; Diane Blyler, Bloomsburg, English; Jane Stuehling, Malvern, sociology-social welfare; Maria DeMatteo, Doylestown, sociology-social welfare;

Peter Mehr, Oreland, business economics;

Jane Miller, Bloomsburg, biology;

Aaron Porter, Philadelphia, history and economics;

Bruce Carl, Herndon, biology.

In addition, David Fenstermacher of Sunbury was recipient of a grant from the Donald Rabb Biology Research Fund, which is administered by the Alumni Office.

The Alumni Association will continue to support student research during the fall semester.

Search committee membership listed

The search for a new president of Bloomsburg University is underway in the wake of Dr. James H. McCormick's appointment as chancellor of the State System of Higher Education.

Dr. Larry W. Jones has been serving as acting president since July 1, 1983. He had been provost and vice president for academic affairs prior to the appointment.

Representing the various constituencies on the presidential search committee are the following:

Council of Trustees—Robert W. Buehner Jr., Ramona H. Alley, LaRoy G. Davis, Stanley G. Rakowsky.

Students—Christopher J. Hardinger.

Non-instructional Staff—Rosemary T. McGrady. Alumni—Dr. C. Stuart Edwards.

Dorin to chair BU trustees

Montoursville Mayor John Dorin has been elected chairman of the BU Council of Trustees for the 1984-1985 fiscal year.

"This year will be the most critical in the school's history, with the ongoing search for a president and our many structural projects underway," Dorin commented. "I see us moving forward and not at a standstill. It's very important that we continue to advance as an institution of learning."

Dorin, 47, is senior buyer for the electronic component division of the GTE Corporation. He has served on the Council of Trustees since last December.

Outgoing chairman Robert W. Buehner Jr., an attorney for Geisinger System Services, will serve as vice chairman. Stanley G. Rakowsky, acting superintendent of the Clearfield Area School District, was elected secretary.

$$ earmarked for Old Science

By JULIE A. FENSTERMACHER
Student Feature Writer

The Fall of 1906 marked the opening of the newly-constructed Science Hall on the campus of Bloomsburg State Normal School. Today, Old Science, the oldest building on campus other than Carver Hall, is badly in need of repair.

Dr. James H. McCormick, former president of Bloomsburg University stated that as long as he was president, Old Science would not be torn down. McCormick is no longer president, but the present administration maintains that Old Science should not be discarded.

The Legislature recently approved a bill for $3.335 million to renovate Old Science. Many people in the University's administration believe that the money won't be seen for at least five to six years. Dr. Robert Parish, vice president for administration, is campaigning to get the money sooner, but says the process is a long one, full of bureaucratic red tape.

A meeting was recently held to plan a scope, a brief summary of what the University wants to do. Some of the changes mentioned were new plumbing, new windows, new wiring, roof, restrooms on each floor, and re-pointing of the bricks. But this is not all that must be done.

Dr. Raymond Babineau, director of institutional planning, noted that, "Unexpected problems arise; they always do with old buildings. Possible problems might be a poor foundation or the rotting of support timbers."

There is a tentative plan of who will occupy the building once the renovation is complete. According to Babineau, first floor will include the community activities department, second floor will house the history department, and third floor will include the art department, with other offices yet to be scheduled.

Babineau estimates it would cost between $6-7 million to build another building; Old Science originally cost $75,000.

Old Science is part of Bloomsburg University's heritage. In 1910, professor Joseph Dennis constructed a wireless telegraph in Old Science. At that time, Cornell and Princeton were the only other colleges in the east to have installed such a device. In 1946 Science Hall received the Foucault Pendulum as a teaching aid that proved the rotation of the Earth. Only five other colleges and universities in the United States had such a pendulum, at that time, (the pendulum is presently stored in the Alumni Room in Carver Hall).

Parish believes the building will have to be gutted, and a new building built inside the shell of the old. While the inside will be new, the outside will retain its historical look.

John Walker, vice-president for institutional advancement, is concerned with the historical preservation of Bloomsburg's campus, and considers himself the resident preservationist. While he would like to see Old Science restored to its original state as much as possible, he doesn't believe that it is likely to happen. There are some architects who would rather say that restoring such a building is impossible than try to figure out how to do it.

The fact that other colleges have successfully restored old buildings makes it evident that it can be done. Edinboro University is presently restoring two buildings built in 1906 and 1908, Indiana University recently restored a building constructed before 1876, and Shippensburg University is beginning a project to restore its Old Main.

Old Science has been a part of Bloomsburg for 78 years. It is a reminder of the University's past and if restored may continue to be part of Bloomsburg University's future.

80% find positions

About 80 percent of graduates in the December 1982, May and August 1983 classes at BU found employment in "meaningful" and/or professional positions, according to Tom Davies, director of the Career Development Center.

Of 1,183 graduates, 1,168 were available for employment and 15 were not. If the 26 graduates were included for whom no information was available, the percentage would rise to 82.4 percent.

One hundred percent placement was experienced in the following areas: communication disorders, dental hygienist, medical technology, nursing, public school nursing, and radiologic technology. The lowest percentage, 70.83, was in early childhood education.

Bill and Mary Decker with friend in French park

Decker studies music in France

By PATRICIA A. CARA
Student Feature Writer

The American professor and his wife waited eagerly for the curtain to rise at the Vienna State Opera. The performance of Puccini's "Turandot" that they were about to see was to become one of their most exciting memories of their stay in Europe.

Yet, this performance, along with many others that they saw, was literally all in a day's work for Dr. William Decker and his wife, Mary, during his sabbatical last year.

Dr. Decker, professor of voice and of organ at Bloomsburg University for over 20 years, began his seven-month sabbatical to France in January, 1983. Decker studied French organ music and the French art song during this trip.

"The French art song is a general category of classical songs," says Decker. "They are songs set to very fine poems. These songs are mostly from the mid-19th century to the present time."

This musical form was of special interest to Mrs. Decker, an opera singer, who was coached in the French art song during their stay.

To further study this type of music, the Deckers saw a number of performances, particularly opera, at most major opera houses of Europe.

Decker also studied French organ music under two organists. The first was Daniel Roth, the titular (head) organist at the Sacre Coeur cathedral. The Sacre Coeur cathedral is the second best-known cathedral of France, after Notre Dame.

Because it was sometimes difficult to arrange lesson times with the busy Roth, Decker also studied under American Fred Gramman, at the American Church in Paris.

"I gained a better understanding of the style of French organ music," says Decker.

Decker received his Bachelor of Music degree from the Eastman School of Music in 1957. In 1975, while teaching at Bloomsburg, Decker commuted to Temple University in Philadelphia to earn his Doctor of Musical Arts degree.

Since the sabbatical, Decker has had one performance of French organ music, in January, 1984, at St. Matthew Lutheran church in downtown Bloomsburg, where he has been director of music for ten years. Decker also performed once in France at the American Church, although the performance was something of a letdown.

"There wasn't much to it," says Decker, "the organ was in terrible shape."

In addition to learning about French music, the Deckers learned much about France itself. They had an apartment in Paris for the entire seven months.

"Our primary interest," says Decker, "was to stay in one place and get a feeling for the area while learning the language."

Decker described parts of Paris as pretty much the way people think it's going to be, with numerous open-air cafes, a view of the Eiffel Tower from nearly every location, and wonderful, inexpensive wine and cheese. However, the attitude of the French people came as something of a surprise.

"In Paris," says Decker, "people keep very much to themselves. In fact, your first impression is that they're being extremely rude." He added, "Parisians, even among themselves are very cool; you never see them laughing."

However, Decker believes the coolness displayed by many Parisians was a result of their constantly dealing with foreigners.

"Paris is the most international city in the world," says Decker, "only about half of the people are actually French."

Decker also added that the Parisians are probably not different from people in other large cities where there are lots of strangers, like New York.

"However," he added, "this cold and businesslike attitude can make you very uncomfortable as a foreigner. Everybody should have the experience of being a foreigner. It's great for the humility."

Another unpleasant surprise was the social unrest the Deckers observed in France.

"The economics are very bad," explained Decker. And this unrest was often displayed in what Decker described as big demonstrations that sometimes grew to frightening proportions. The police would come in vans that held 20 or 30 soldiers with gas masks and rifles. There was a big show of force by the police and the military, he added. In fact, right down the street from the Deckers apartment, armed police camped in front of the Turkish embassy 24-hours-a-day for several months.

"It was much more of a police state than I thought it would be."

Despite these unexpected problems, Decker found much to admire in the French, especially their respect for enduring values.

"The people revere the past in Europe, and they revere older people as well," he says.

One highlight of their stay in Paris was their proximity to other famous cities, as well as countries. In fact, on one occasion, Dr. Decker and his wife, along with their visiting children, started from the white wine region of Colmar, France, and traveled to Freiburg, Germany, and Basil, Switzerland, in one day. Other favorite places of the Deckers were Milan, Vienna, and London.

Decker says these exciting forays, along with an apartment in Paris, combined to make the sabbatical very enjoyable. But most of all, France was a valuable learning experience, from which he believes his students will benefit.

"Studying the French art song will help in voice classes simply by knowing how to sing French," he says.

And he believes his organ studies will prove just as valuable. "I learned much about playing in general," says Decker. "The more you know, the more wisely you can choose the right pieces for people to study."

Departmental News

Each of the University's academic departments was invited to submit items of interest for inclusion in this section of THE QUARTERLY.

Art

Dr. Percival R. Roberts III, professor of art, has been honored by his alma mater, the University of Delaware. He was among 54 prominent alumni selected for a photographic exhibition featuring outstanding graduates since the founding of the school in 1743 by the noted scholar, the Rev. Francis Alison.

The alumni room and exhibition were the culmination of over a year of planning and research. It was established by the board of trustees in 1983 as part of the university's 150th anniversary celebrations to recognize the significant contributions of Delaware alumni throughout the history of the institution.

The 1983 Alumni Association Awards Committee and staff of the Office of Alumni Relations were charged with the difficult task of compiling a list of prominent alumni from diverse fields. Dr. Roberts was present at the dedication ceremonies.

The BU professor's selection was based on his distinguished career as an artist, poet and arts administrator. A third generation graduate of the University of Delaware, he served as ninth poet laureate for the State of Delaware and president of the Delaware Art Education Association before completing his doctorate in art at Illinois State University. The author of seven books of poetry and numerous articles in the field of aesthetics and art education, Dr. Roberts also was cited for his diversified one-person exhibitions. His biography appears in current editions of Who's Who in the East, Who's Who in American Art, and Contemporary Authors.

Dr. Roberts has also been notified that his wood assemblages, "Sarcophagus of the Spirit," have been selected by Barbara Haskell, curator of painting and sculpture at the Whitney Museum of American Art in New York City, for inclusion in the statewide juried exhibition, "The Pennsylvania Artist/Educator '84."

The exhibition opened at the William Penn Museum in Harrisburg on June 10 and will continue through November 4, 1984. Another of his assemblages in wood, plexiglass and acrylic, entitled "Homage to Miro," was exhibited recently in the regional juried exhibition held at the Hazleton Art League.

An article by Roberts, "Myths and Realities: A Case for Full Time Art Instruction," appeared in the winter issue of the Pennsylvania Art Education Association Newsletter.

Biology/Allied Health

Students at Bloomsburg University now have an opportunity to gain a background in microbiology even if they are not biology majors. This emphasis includes 20 credits—some required, others elective—sponsored by the department. It is designed to enhance the vocational opportunities for graduates in areas where employment is relatively high; especially in health, industry and pharmaceutical settings.

Two pathways are available for pursuing this microbiology program. For students not majoring in the biology, the pathway is the biology minor (microbiology track); for the biology major, the microbiology option within the major should be selected. Drs. Downing, Herbert and Parsons serve as resource people for this emphasis.

Dr. Phillip A. Farber, professor of biological and allied health sciences, presented a paper, "Cytogenetics of Acute Leukemia," at the annual meetings of the Pennsylvania Association of Clinical Pathologists in Philadelphia. He presented another paper, "Chromosomal Studies in the Diagnosis of Childhood Leukemia," at the annual meetings of the Great Lakes Chromosome Conference held at the Toronto General Hospital and the Toronto Institute of Medical Technology. Both papers resulted from clinical-laboratory studies performed in the Department of Laboratory Medicine at Geisinger Medical Center.

The North American Gladiolus Council, the largest gladiolus organization in the world with international membership, awarded its highest award, The Achievement Award, to Thomas R. Manley, BU faculty emeritus. The award is presented annually to a person who has made major contributions to the gladiolus industry and the improvement of the gladiolus as a cut flower.

Growers in Canada, England, Australia, Holland, New Zealand, Germany and the United States have been recipients of the award since its initial presentation to E. A. Kundred, America's first gladiolus hybridizer in 1945.

Manley was one of the founders of the council in 1943 and served as its secretary from 1943 to 1948. He was the first recipient of its Gold Medal for Distinguished Service to NAGC in 1949.

The Department is part of the honors program in the natural sciences and mathematics. The honors program is designed to bring together academically gifted students and to provide a structure for advanced intellectual pursuits of an interdisciplinary nature.

The program is designed for the latter part of the student's college career and includes two components: departmental independent study and participation in an honors seminar which is interdepartmental. Honors independent study (biological research) is comprised of a field or laboratory investigation under the direct supervision of a biology faculty member having expertise in the student's proposed research effort. Student projects developed through these advanced independent research efforts will culminate in a scholarly paper and will relate to the subjects addressed in the interdepartmental honors seminar.

Dr. Miller from the Department of Biological and Allied Health Sciences coordinates this division of the honors program. Other committee members and their sponsoring departments include Dr. Paul Cochrane (mathematics), Dr. Brian Johnson (geography and earth science), Dr. Larry Mack (chemistry) and Dr. Jim Moser (physics).

Two pre-professional students from the biology department have been selected by the Honors Committee in Natural Sciences and Mathematics for admission to the honors program in arts and sciences. John Pyne and William Schlorff will be the department's first students to enroll in honors independent study (biological research) this fall. They will join two students from the chemistry department previously admitted to the honors program. Both Pyne and Schlorff will pursue preliminary research efforts in parasitology.

Since its inception in 1969, the Annual Biology Workshop sponsored by students majoring in the Department of Biological and Allied Health Sciences has offered high school students the opportunity to perform laboratory experiments at the collegiate level. During a brief orientation, at which refreshments are served, each student receives a program which outlines the day's activities and describes the objectives of laboratories which range from botany to vertebrate physiology.

Designed to acquaint perspective students with our campus, the collegiate environment, and our department's facilities and programs, the workshop has enjoyed continued success as judged by attendance and student reactions.

The most recent workshop, which attracted over 100 students from high schools within a 150-mile radius of the campus, was held in April.

Through the dedication of our biology and allied health majors, we hope to keep the public aware of the high quality of education at Bloomsburg University. The workshops are sponsored by the Biology Club, advised by Drs. Melnychuk and Miller.

The Department of Biological and Allied Health Sciences includes 584 majors and 16 faculty in six undergraduate and two graduate programs. James E. Cole, Ph.D., is chairperson.

Business Ed./Office Adm.

Dr. Ellen Clemens, Dr. Nancy Dittman, Janice Keil, Dr. Margaret Long, Dr. John Olivo, and Bruce Sneiderman attended the April National Business Education Convention. They were pleased to discover that Bloomsburg University has one of the largest business teacher education programs in the country, with approximately 200 majors and over 30 student teachers this year.

Bloomsburg University has joined forces with the federal government to help fight unemployment in the greater Bloomsburg area.

Through a $51,000 grant from the federal government-backed Central Region Training Services, Inc. (CRTS), the business education and office administration department at BU has strengthened its forces with a new weapon called TOTO, Training for Office and Technology Occupations.

The TOTO program falls under the objectives of the Job Training Partnership Act (JTPA), which was created by CRTS and its associate, the Private Industry Council (PIC), last October.

The TOTO project is currently the only one of its kind, according to Anne Shelhamer, assistant to the county coordinator of JTPA at the Columbia County Commissioner's Office.

"There is no duplication of the effort," she says. "We're working in conjunction with vo-tech in training programs, hoping that everything meshes together into one effort."

JTPA replaces the Comprehensive Employment Training Act (CETA), implemented from 1973 to last September. CETA employees were employed, trained, and paid by employers through federal funds.

In addition to programs like TOTO, JTPA offers on-the-job training, retraining for displaced employees, summer youth, and other programs, mainly geared toward making the unemployable more employable.

Directed by Dr. John Olivo, chairman of the business education and office administration department, TOTO completed its first six-month session in June and will run again in the fall. The program teaches individuals basic skills in English, mathematics, office automation, business communication, resume writing and interviewing. According to Olivo, there were 12 TOTO students in the first group who came from varied backgrounds, ranging in age from mid-20s to late 40s and in occupation from a military serviceman to a coalminer.

The objective of JTPA, says Olivo, is to provide individuals with skills to put them back into the work force, giving priority to limited welfare recipients, displaced homemakers, single parents, dislocated workers, and the physically or mentally handicapped.

TOTO students were selected on the basis of a letter of application and a basis inventory test, which scored them on grammar, spelling, capitalization, punctuation, and math. Applicants' incomes were also considered for selection.

Grant money covers such costs as books, supplies, equipment, and instructors.

Olivo has plans for two similar programs next year, which he hopes will specialize in executive, legal, and medical secretarial skills. He also hopes to increase enrollments to 20 students per program.

Other grants the business education department received this year include: $4,000 from the Penn State Center for Vocational Development to run a three-day, inservice workshop for business teaching and information processing; another $6,700 from the Penn State Center for Vocational Development to run a three-day workshop, focusing on micro-computers; and $1,000 from the Center for Vocational Personnel Development at a one-day office automation workshop in May at Temple University.

The curriculum for prospective business teachers has been modified to permit more flexibility. As before, all business education students will be certified to teach typewriting, and at least one other area. Students may select data processing, marketing or secretarial certification. Also, students may add additional certifications if they wish. Of course, students will be automatically certified in business English, business law, introduction to data processing, office practice, and other basic business subjects as they have in the past.

The Department has had an active year of revising curriculum, recruiting students, and planning strategies to serve new students.

The department has been training adults for occupations in automated offices under the Job Training Partnership Act. Hopefully this pilot project will result in continued funding for electronic equipment which will be available for use by the regular students as well. Currently, CPT word processors are an important component of this program.

Spring semester Business Communications was offered for undergraduate credit at Berwick Hospital. The department is interested in serving other groups of adults who wish to earn graduate or undergraduate credit at off-campus locations. Help us spread the word.

Business Ed./Office Adm.

The Office Administration curriculum has been revised to add increased emphasis to office automation. Besides the required preparation in office administration, students must select a business concentration (such as accounting, shorthand, management, data processing, marketing, or finance) based on their career goals.

On May 16, local businesspeople and educators were invited to campus to hear presentations on "Automation in the Office." Topics included telecommunications, office productivity, and office systems. Janice Keil coordinated the conference.

Business teachers received hands-on experience with business and instruction microcomputer software at the conference, "Microcomputers in Action, in June at the Hilton in Lackawanna. The conference included applications in accounting, basic business, computer literacy, keyboarding, and word processing on Apple, CPT, Franklin, IBM, and Radio Shack computers.

Chemistry

Student Affiliate Chapters of the American Chemical Society from BU and three other universities in the State System of Higher Education have been selected for special commendation as "Outstanding Chapters" by the Committee on Chemical Education of the American Chemical Society for the academic year 1982-1983.

Bloomsburg, Clarion, Millersville and West Chester were among the 30 chapters selected out of over 800 chapters in the United States. Selection is based on the annual reports of the chapters which give details of the year's program and activities such as meetings, speakers, tours and field trips, social events, and community-service projects.

Faculty advisor at BU is Dr. John L. Plude.

Communication Studies

A majority of the department faculty spent much of this academic year working on a self-study, the purpose being to analyze the strengths and weaknesses of the department and create a set of plans for curriculum development, faculty assignments, and departmental decision-making for the next two to five years.

As part of that process, two-day visits to the department were arranged for two professors, one from the University of Delaware and one from the University of Western Kentucky.

Undergraduate students in one class were surveyed concerning their opinions of the department, and students had the opportunity to meet each consultant during the visits.

The Career Development Center has recently shared with all departments the results of their regular surveys of alumni; those materials will be discussed by the department when the planning process resumes in September.

At the Pi Kappa Delta Province of the Colonies Speech Tournament held at Wildwood Crest, N.J., in April, Professor Harry C. Strine, III, was elected to serve as the Province's new secretary/treasurer for two years. He had previously served the Province as lieutenant governor and governor. Pi Kappa Delta is the national honorary Forensic fraternity.

Professor Strine will be a member of a panel presenting a program at the Speech Communication Association's National Convention in Chicago, Nov. 1-4.

Eleven students and one faculty member from the Bloomsburg Players will travel with the BU Madrigals to Japan for a two-week educational tour, July 31 to August 14. A special event of the tour will feature an exchange of letters of goodwill between Acting President Larry Jones and the president of Tenri University in Japan.

The cast of the play, "Step on a Crack," will perform for approximately 200,000 children at a children's festival sponsored by Tenri University and Nora, the ancient capital of Japan.

On the return trip, four of the Bloomsburg Players will attend the National American Theatre Association Convention in San Francisco.

International and Intercultural Communication were the topics in several classes in speech communication during the spring semester. Assistant professor Janice Youse taught a course in Intercultural Communication. One member of that class was Woo Chang, an undergraduate student from Korea, who described his background and culture, offered information on nonverbal communication patterns of Koreans and Americans, and compared his culture with the culture of Japan.

In the Organizational Communication course taught by assistant professor James Tomlinson, graduate student Chaya Kaewsonthi from Thailand offered information about different styles of organizing, delegating, and discussing issues.

A highlight of the semester was a guest lecture by Methodist Minister Moravia from the African Country of Sierra Leone, who was on an extended trip to the United States. He spoke about the differences in sex roles between his country and ours, the contrasts between the emerging nations and industrialized nations of the world, the difficulties of establishing a mass communication system in his country, and the role of the mass media in building a sense of nation and of community.

Numerous black students visited the Interpersonal Communication course taught by associate professor Mary Kenny Badami. Sociology major and counseling center intern Richard Traylor coordinated the discussions which included consideration of differences in eye contact behavior between blacks and whites, how it feels to be the only one of your kind, and what specific steps undergraduates could take to improve interracial understanding on campus. More than ten student guests took part in the four-hour discussion, including Kenny Roberts, president of the Third World Cultural Society, and Lucinda Black, communication program graduate assistant.

Badami's co-authored article, "Interracial Communication in School Social Work," was published in the January/February issue of the journal, "Social Work."

Among the term projects presented by Badami's graduate students in a seminar on Communication and the Sexes was an analysis of Alice Walker's novel, THE COLOR PURPLE, by Lucinda Black, and an exploration of attitudes toward equal employment opportunity and affirmative action by graduate student Larry Kroggel, human relations supervisor for the TRW, Inc., Vaive Division, Danville.

The Mass Communication division experienced growth in several areas during the 1983-84 academic year that should make the program more responsive to student needs. With the construction of the McCormick Human Services Building, the division will have three new studios for television, complete radio facilities, and improved motion picture production area, and specialized classroom for instruction. The largest television studio will be outfitted with new television equipment.

During the year, the division joined the rest of the department in a comprehensive review of the curricula. The review culminated in an outside evaluator's report which provided suggestions on the faculty's work. During the coming academic year, faculty committees will consider the best suggestions for adoption. The purpose of all this work had been to make the program more in tune with student needs.

At present, the division has four faculty members teaching in the mass communication area, but students have access to courses of faculty members who teach mass communication related courses in English and Sociology. Other faculty members in the Department of Communication Studies teach courses necessary to a comprehensive mass communication education.

The mass communication program enjoys continued popularity with nearly 200 majors and about 100 pre-majors declaring their interest in the field.

The BU Forensic Society, which is the university's competitive speech team, was extremely active during the 1983-84 academic year. The Huskies competed at twelve regular tournaments, placing in the top four as a team in most of them. BU placed first at the Collegiate Forensic Association Tournament held at Fitchburg State College, Fitchburg, Mass.

Twenty BU competitors qualified for the national competition in Georgia. Collectively, the Huskies won approximately 100 trophies, awards, and honors in their competitive speech and debate activities during this past collegiate year.

The graduate program, Master of Arts in Communication, now in its fourth year, has shown great success. There are currently 35 full-time and part-time students in the program. The program is co-sponsored by the Communication Studies and English departments, and directed by Dr. Howard Schreier.

Dr. George P. Boss, professor emeritus of the Communication Studies Department, attended a conference of the Eastern Communication Association in Philadelphia in March. He presented a reading of his poetry in a demonstration of Original Poetry as a Forensic Event.

Curriculum/Foundations

The Department of Curriculum and Foundations is one of the newest departments at the University. It originated in the summer of 1983 as a result of organizational changes in the College of Professional Studies. The department is composed of the former departments of Elementary and Early Childhood Education, Secondary Education, Educational Studies and Services, and Reading Clinic. Dr. William S. O'Bruba, former chair of the Department of Elementary and Early Childhood Education, was elected chairperson of the new department.

Three faculty have retired recently: Milton Levin, Ray Rost and Glenn Good. Levin and Good worked with the secondary education program, and Rost worked in the education foundations area. All three have given many years of dedicated service to the university.

The department has received approval to launch a new graduate certificate program. The supervisory certificate in curriculum and instruction is designed to prepare educators as supervisory school personnel who will be able to improve curriculum and instruction effectively, and to work competently with both professionals in directing activities on a district-wide basis.

Dr. O'Bruba published a book review in the April 1984 issue of the Curriculum Review. He reviewed the "Random House Library of Knowledge," a series of science books for elementary children.

Dr. Donald A. Camplese (psychology), Mary D. Sanford (teacher of learning disabled children) and Dr. O'Bruba have co-authored an article entitled "The Use of Teletherapy in the Mainstreaming Era."

The article was published in the spring 1984 issue of Reading Horizons, a publication of the College of Education at Western Michigan University.

The article deals with techniques in which a teacher attempts to solve a child's problem by bringing the child a similar experience vicariously through stories retold from appropriate books.

Warren I. Johnson, faculty emeritus, is back on the road with a new flag show, "The Stars and Stripes," which is a spin-off of his 1975-1976 "Bicentennial Flags" shown to over 20,000 children and adults in Pennsylvania, New Jersey, Maryland and California.

He has scheduled several local shows and will travel to New Jersey and North Carolina in the fall. Designed primarily for elementary school children, the show is adaptable for adult audiences.

Economics

Dr. Peter Bohling and Ms. Rosemary McGrady recently presented workshops to a group of community women interested in returning to college. Dr. Bohling's presentation was entitled "Financial Planning and Money Management." Ms. McGrady's presentation, "The Non-Traditional Student Experience," concentrated on facilitating discussion and sharing experiences of non-traditional students at BU.

Dr. Ujagar S. Bawa participated in the Fifth Annual East Coast Asian Education Conference held in Washington, D.C., in April. The conference theme was "Entering the Mainstream." Dr. Bawa served on a panel presentation on the subject of Asian Pacific American Intra Cultural Awareness.

Robert Meeker spent his spring break on a honeymoon "of sorts." He married Beverly Smith on St. Patrick's Day in Forty Fort, although neither claims any Irish links. Bob's three sons—David '74, Bob '75, and John '78—participated by tying a noisy string of tin cans to the bride's get-away car.

Susan Rusinko continued her long-standing practice of arranging theatre trips for students in Modern Drama in early April. Twenty-five accompanied her to New York, where nearly half saw the revival of Arthur Miller's "Death of a Salesman" while the rest saw other plays on Broadway.

Lawrence B. Fuller has been accepted as a participant in a summer seminar at Princeton University on History of Children's Literature 1840-1920. Sponsored by the National Endowment for the Humanities, the seminar will bring together a dozen scholars from around the nation who will work on individual and collective research under the direction of U. C. Knoepfelmacher of the Princeton faculty.

William Baillie was a panelist on "Computer Research" at the annual meeting of the Shakespeare Association of America held in Cambridge, Mass., in April. He reported on his studies of authorship and of editing with the aid of mainframe and micro computers.

The Center for Medieval and Early Renaissance Studies at the State University of New York at Binghamton has published Dr. Baillie's A CHOICE TERNARY OF ENGLISH PLAYS, a critical edition of three 17th century plays first published in 1662. Dr. Baillie collected all extant copies and provided textual notes and glosses. Besides addressing questions of authorship, dating, text, sources and their use, his introductions provide a basis for appreciating these works as representatives of their respective dramatic periods.

Dale Anderson presented a paper on "The Folklore of the Wyoming Valley and Northern Pennsylvania" at the March meeting of the Pennsylvania Folklore Society in Harrisburg. He reported on the folklore of three ethnic groups: Welsh legends, Greek fairy tales and Ukrainian Easter traditions. Professor Anderson also attended the Pennsylvania College English Association meeting in Lancaster in April and was convener of the session on Feminist Literature.

BLACK ENGLISH AND THE MASS MEDIA by Walter Brasch, originally published by the University of Massachusetts Press in 1981, is now available in paperback from University Press of America. The book, which has received strong reviews, has been adopted at 32 colleges.

William D. Eisenberg in May gave his latest in a series of annual lectures on "War and Poetry" for Mrs. Dorthy Davis' advanced placement seniors at Southern Columbia High School.

Margaret R. Lauer was the guest of honor at a surprise dinner marking her retirement in early May. Organized by Dr. Ervne Gulley and Dr. Nancy Gill and held at the Pine Barn Inn in Danville, the dinner was attended by Professor Lauer's colleagues and friends. Besides receiving season tickets to the Bloomsburg Theatre Ensemble, a biography of John Keats, and a book of poems written in her honor, Professor Lauer learned that a gift in her name has been given toward a sculpture garden to be located near Bakeless Center for the Humanities.

The novel, the essay, the poem and the teaching of writing were featured topics at "The Written Word: A Festival" in April at BU. Sponsored by the English Department with support from the Pennsylvania Council for the Humanities and the Endowed Lecture Fund, the festival brought together secondary and college students and faculty, writers and readers of contemporary literature. Sanford Pinsker, Edwin Moses and David Hellerstein were guest writers.

Dr. Brasch recently presented a professional paper at the 23rd Annual American Names Institute at Fairleigh Dickinson University in Madison, N.J. The paper was also accepted for inclusion in a text-reader to be published jointly by the Names Institute and Fairleigh Dickinson University Press. Brasch recently received the Ivy Ledbetter Lee Award for Public Relations. The award was given for the best design of the outstanding public relations program for 1983. The announcement was made in Los Angeles.

The second issue of CARVER contains the imprint of several department members. Dr. Gerald Strauss served as editor for the second year, while Dr. Gill contributed two photographs, Professor Richard O'Keefe a poem, and Dr. Fuller two poems.

Finance/Business Law

Dr. Barbara Behr and Dr. Andrew Emerson attended the Mid-Atlantic Regional Business Law Association meeting in March in Baltimore.

Dr. Behr presented a paper, "Writing: A Tool for Improving Student Performance on Business Law Examinations" (a statistical study), and Dr. Emerson presented one dealing with "Directors' Derivative Liability for Corporate Pollution Violations."

They also participated in a round table discussion of the present status of affirmative action programs.

Dr. Behr was elected president-elect of the organization. It was also decided at the meeting that Professors Behr and Emerson will assume the editorship of the Selected Papers of the American Business Law Association: District I Proceedings in 1985.

Geography/Earth Science

The department of Geography and Earth Science has recently received approval to offer the B.A. degree in Geography with an option in environmental planning. The program has been designed to prepare students to secure planning and planning-related jobs that deal with the effective management of our land and water resources. It is also designed to enable them to continue their education at the graduate level.

Dr. Duane Braun is the recipient of a research grant from the American Chemical Society and the Petroleum Research Fund. His research activities will include the field mapping of glacial deposits in Tioga County, Pa. Dr. Braun will be assisted in his field work by two undergraduate geology students.

History

Ted Shanoski, associate professor of history, presented a paper at the Fifteenth Annual Northeast Regional conference of Social Studies Educators at the Sheraton Boston Hotel. The topic of the paper, "Population in the Global Arena: India," was researched by Shanoski while on sabbatical. The purpose of the session was to provide a model for social studies educators in dealing with the issue of population. Shanoski was recently notified that he was named to the Research Committee of the National Council for the Social Studies by its president, Jean Craven, for a three year term.

Ted Shanoski was a delegate to the recently concluded biennial convocation of Kappa Delta Pi in Montreal. The Gamma Beta chapter of this international education honor society has been active on campus since 1931. Shanoski, a member of the Resolution Committee for the convocation, commented that the honor society resolved to commit its efforts to support the cause of international peace through programs at the international, regional and local levels. Shanoski has been advisor to Kappa Delta Pi since 1965.

Languages/Cultures

Dr. Gilbert Darbouze, formerly of Lafayette College, has been appointed assistant professor of French and Spanish.

Born in Haiti, Dr. Darbouze moved to the United States when he was in high school. He earned degrees at the City University of New York, including a Ph.D. in French with specialization in Spanish. He spent eight months in Paris on a French government fellowship, doing research for his doctoral dissertation, a comparative study of the novels of Emile Zola and Manuel Zeno Gandia.

Serving as a teacher and research assistant at CCNY and the Graduate School and University Center of CUNY, he subsequently taught at Brandeis High School and the Bronx High School of Science. He also taught at Queen's College and Memphis State University before becoming an assistant professor of languages at Lafayette College.

Nineteen students and faculty toured Quebec province between the spring and summer semesters as the culmination of a course, "Quebec: Fascinating and French."

Sponsored by the French Club, the Department of Languages and Cultures, and the Community Government Association, the group had planned all year for the project. By raising money through candy sales and a booth at the student fair, and with help from CGA, the students were able to keep their costs at a reasonable level.

Staying in a small family-run hotel within the walls of the old city, members of the group were able to practice their French in all the little shops and restaurants of the area. They also found themselves in the midst of some of the most historic spots in the city and Canada itself.

It was here, at this narrower spot in the Saint Lawrence, that Samuel de Champlain established the first European settlement in 1608, first down by the river in the area now known as the restored Place Royale and soon afterward on the bluffs where the Chateau Frontenac now stands. ("Quebec" comes from an Indian word meaning "strait," just as "Detroit" is a French word meaning the same thing.)

Trying to understand the Quebec dialect is a challenge for the best of French students, but they soon found that "standard" French was useful in most situations. They were able to collect some interesting expressions used by the Quebecois, such as "patates" for potatoes instead of "pommes de terre" (as used in France).

They were able to sample both French and French-Canadian cuisine in the many restaurants and sidewalk cafes in and near the old city. One evening, the group had dinner in the oldest building in the city, spending several hours tasting the regional dishes and conversing and socializing in the manner of the French.

Since this is the year celebrating the 450th anniversary of Jacques Cartier's discovery of Canada in 1534, the group visited Cartier-Brebeuf park, where the story of his expeditions is portrayed. A replica of one of his ships is anchored in approximately the same spot that it was during one of his trips.

A day trip in the countryside to see some of the typical homes built by early and later settlers included seeing the cathedral of Sainte-Anne-de-Beaupre, stopping along the roadside for home-made bread and maple sugar, and viewing the Montmorency Falls, higher than Niagara and an important site in the French and Indian Wars.

Spending a day in Montreal on the trip back, the group was able to visit Place Jacques Cartier, an old restored section much smaller than the one found in Quebec city, but perhaps more impressive in this "Paris of the North" were the modern sections of the city, such as the safe, clean and spacious metro and the miles of underground shops.

Included in the group were Dr. Mary Lou John, chairperson of the department; Beth Grochowski, French Club president and organizer; Scott Bendinsky, treasurer; Nancy Chapman, Melinda Coates, Arlene Daily, Lisa Hackett, Alana Gallo, Charles Dorfman, Chris Potash, Shaun Creighton, Franklin Sellers, Dan Teiteibaum, Leslie Grochowski, Arlette Vanden Berghe, Ann Lau-Begue, Sylvie Biscarra, Elaine McCubbin and Ann Grundstrom.

Dr. Allen Murphy and a number of BU students with at least two semesters of Spanish will be in Mexico for 21 days this summer. Staying near Mexico City, the students will have the opportunity to learn Spanish through firsthand experience and to develop an understanding of another lifestyle.

Two directors of the Commercial Institute of the University of Nancy in France recently visited Bloomsburg University. The two universities have a student exchange program.

Marketing/Management

Dr. Peter B. Venuto, professor of marketing and management, presented a paper at Boise State University, Idaho, in May.

His paper was entitled, "Creative Conflict Resolution - Resolving dysfunctional interpersonal conflicts: A demonstration of how five analytical factors, a simple case and dual audio cassette technology can produce deeper behavioral understanding."

Music

The Department of Music announces the following concert-recital calendar for fall 1984:

Homecoming Pops Concert at 2:30 p.m. on Sunday, October 28, featuring the Women's Choral Ensemble, the Husky Singers and the Concert Choir. Haas Center.

Trombone recital by Wesley Kreitz, senior music major, at 8 p.m. on Thursday, November 8, Carver Hall.

University-Community Orchestra, featuring American music, at 2:30 p.m. on Sunday, November 11, John Couch, faculty pianist, will perform Gershwin's "Rhapsody in Blue." Haas Center. General admission. Tickets, 717-389-4284.

Student recital at 8 p.m. on Tuesday, November 20, Carver Hall.

"Joy of Christmas" by Concert Choir at 8 p.m. on Friday, November 30, and at 2:30 p.m. on Sunday, December 2, Carver Hall.

"Christmas in France: Louis XVI" by Madrigal Singers at 7:30 p.m., Tuesday through Saturday, December 4-8.

Ticket sales begin October 15; call 717-389-4284, Scranton Commons, Dining Room D.

Concerts and recitals scheduled by the Department of Music are financially supported wholly or in part by the Community Government Association.

Two chamber operas, "Dido and Aeneas" and "The Mahogony Songspiel" were presented at Carver Hall in April. Gerald Teijelo was the director, and Dr. William Decker was the musical director.

Dr. Stephen C. Wallace, chairperson of the Department of Music and director of the studio band, has been initiated into the Nu Chapter of Phi Beta Mu National Bandmaster's Fraternity. The fraternity is dedicated to the building of better bands and better musicians in American schools, as well as to encouraging deeper appreciation of and more widespread interest in good music.

Political Science

The Political Science Department is the most stable, by far of the 25 academic departments at the University. Since it was established in January of 1969, there have been no additions, resignations, nor retirements. Even though the "six-man team" has stayed intact, the political science program has undergone constant change.

The number of approved courses has gone from 12 in 1969 to 46 at present. The department tries to strike a balance between basic mainstream courses and less traditional courses built on contemporary topics.

Some examples of the latter are Black Politics, Female Politics, Political Violence, Criminal Justice and Middle-East Politics. The department was a pioneer in establishing a student advisory council, a student operated student evaluation system, a computer applications course, and credits for field experience.

Every four years the department has sponsored a mock presidential nominating convention, each one involving the participation of over a thousand students. The list of speakers brought to campus for these events reads like a Who's Who in American politics—Gerald Ford, Frank Church, William Proxmire, Thomas Eagleton, Shirley Chisholm, Eugene McCarthy, Lowell Weicker, Joseph Biden and John Anderson. The latter two spoke at this year's mock convention. The 1,200 delegates from BU and other neighboring schools nominated Gary Hart for president and Jesse Jackson for vice president.

More and more political science majors are using their free electives to complete a Public Administration Career Concentration. The concentration is not a disciplinary specialization but rather one that cuts across several disciplines including most of the social sciences. Students are expected to develop skills in communications, statistics and computer, to establish a theoretical foundation in organization behavior and public policy, and to survey the applied areas of planning, budgeting and personnel. The concentration is intended to help increase the employability of students with a baccalaureate degree, or to serve as a foundation for an MPA (Master of Public Administration) degree.

Psychology

Six members of the Department of Psychology presented research at the 55th meeting of the Eastern Psychological Association in Baltimore.

Eileen Astor-Stetson presented posters on "Age and Gender Differences in Children's Perception of the Mueller-Lyer Illusion" and "A Catastrophe Model of Ambiguity in Color Classification."

John S. Baird presented a poster on "College Student Reactions to Certain Stylistic Teaching Practices."

Steve Cohen presented a paper on "The Effects of Vasopressin on Multiple Fixed-Ratio, Fixed-Interval Schedules of Reinforcement."

James Dalton showed a poster on the subject of "The 'Community Connection': A Newsletter and Resource Exchange Network for Teachers of Undergraduate Courses and Internships in Applied/Community Psychology."

Alex Poplawsky displayed posters on "Septal Lesions Increase Food Spillage in the Rat" and "Septal Lesions Facilitate the Acquisition of an Autoshaped-Lever Press."

Connie Schick posted research on "The Effects of Self-Efficacy and Sex of Experimenter on Concept Attainment and Attributions by Traditional and Non-Traditional Type A and Type B Females" and "A Technique for Assessing Changes in Student Beliefs About Personality and Implicit Theoretical Orientation During a Theories of Personality Course."

Sociology/Social Welfare

Dr. David Greenwald gave a presentation entitled "Directions of the Sociology/Social Welfare Program at Bloomsburg University" at the April meeting of the Allegheny Valley Sociological Association held at Slippery Rock University.

Special Education/Comm. Dis.

The Department of Special Education and Communication Disorders has added a new program for interpreter training under the director of Gary Mowl. BU becomes the ninth Bachelor of Science program in interpreting in the country. It will also be possible to earn an Associate of Arts and Sciences degree or a Certificate of Completion.

Although the profession is old, recognition and acceptance of interpreting is still relatively new and growing. Statistics show that education and vocational rehabilitation agencies are the leading employers of interpreters, and they are also employed in medical, legal and entertainment settings. The Registry of Interpreters for the Deaf, established in 1964, is the largest interpreting organization in the world.

Interpreters facilitate communication between hearing consumers/public agencies and deaf/hearing impaired consumers. To facilitate communication effectively, many skills are required. For example, interpreters must be fluent in two languages, English and American Sign Language. Interpreters must be able to make decisions in a variety of situations with respect to the Code of Ethics set forth by the Registry.

The curriculum was designed with an important goal in mind: to prepare the student for certification by the Registry. Students will receive combined classroom and laboratory instruction in many of the major courses along with a practicum to gain actual interpreting experience. fMAGE, a sign language performance group, and the Bloomsburg Association of the Hearing Impaired are two extracurricular organizations students can join.

Mowl was formerly at Mount Aloysius Junior College, where he served as a director of the interpreter training program, and at Maryville College, where he was an administrative assistant/instructor. He is certified by the Registry as a sign to voice interpreter. He is one of 25 deaf/hearing impaired members in his family.

Over 100 clinicians, faculty, supervisors and students from the northeastern United States attended the Seventh Annual Consortium at Danville in February. The needs assessment workshop and conference was sponsored by the department and the university using funds from the Office of Special Education of the U.S. Department of Education.

The focus of the consortium this year was on topics of interest in audiology, speech-language pathology, education of the hearing impaired, and interpreting.

The department recently sponsored a Preservice Teacher Perceiver Academy, a program designed to identify prospective teachers and clinicians who should be successful in their field.

The workshop was organized by Dr. Bill Jones and Dr. Jerry Powers. The former is currently involved in a research project in the area of teacher perceivers.

One purpose of Dr. Kenneth Hunt's sabbatical leave was to upgrade his skills and knowledge in the area of severe behavior disorders, a relatively new and fast-growing field within special education. To that end, he worked for a month in the Suffolk Child Development Center in Smithtown, N.Y. which deals exclusively with severe behavior disorders, typically autistic or schizophrenic children functioning at a severely handicapped level.

Dr. Hunt also visited special education personnel and/or centers in the U.S. Office of Education, the University of North Carolina and the South Atlantic Regional Resource Center. In addition, he reviewed professional materials, prepared a draft of a manuscript in special education for publication, and developed a special course component on the severely handicapped for his undergraduate and graduate classes.

Judie Hirshfeld, Sam Slike and Dr. Jerry Powers presented papers at the national convention of the American College Educators of the Hearing Impaired at the Palo Verde Holiday in Tucson, Arizona.

Dr. Powers described the communicational and educational needs of hard of hearing children. Ms. Hirshfeld discussed educational and communicational programs for the hard of hearing. Mr. Slike discussed training teachers for the hard of hearing.

Dr. Bryan honored

Dr. Jesse A. Bryan, director of the Center for Academic Development at BU, was recently honored for outstanding service to the Educational Opportunity Centers of Northeastern Pennsylvania.

He received a framed certificate at an awards luncheon in his honor.

The EOC project, funded by the U.S. Department of Education, is a career guidance and educational resource center for adults who want to return to college or technical school. EOC operates offices in several locations.

Bryan was instrumental in developing the original project concept for EOC and assisted in writing the initial proposal for federal funding. He has served as president of the EOC steering committee and continues to serve as president of the EOC board of directors—a position he has filled since the project was first funded in 1979.

An active participant on the Danville/Bloomsburg EOC Advisory Council, he was influential in changing the structure of EOC to an incorporated agency.

Mrs. Kuster dies

Gladys T. Kuster, 89, of Cincinnati, Ohio, died December 31.

Mrs. Kuster was one of the first women teachers hired at the Bloomsburg Normal School, after graduating from Mount Holyoke College in Massachusetts in 1916.

She lived in Ohio for the past three years, earlier residing in Bloomsburg for 64 years. Mrs. Kuster was preceded in death by her husband, Dr. Kimber C. Kuster, a former Bloomsburg professor, on Aug. 22, 1971.

Reading conference success

BU's 20th Annual Reading Conference, one of the best in Pennsylvania, was held on April 13 and 14. Speaking at the first general session on Friday in Haas Center was Dr. Carol Chomsky, education lecturer from Harvard University. Her topic was "Language Awareness and Reading."

Dr. M. Jerry Weiss, distinguished service professor of communications at Jersey City State College, spoke on "The Joy of Reading" at Friday evening's banquet in Scranton Commons.

Saturday's general session took place in Haas Center with Dr. Lyn Searfoss, associate chairperson, department of elementary education at Arizona State University, speaking on "Helping 'Outsiders' Become 'Insiders': What's the Key to Reading and Writing?"

Bloomsburg University was represented in sessions by James Mullen, Carol Venuto, John Hranitz, Samuel Slike and Charlotte Hess.

BU Acting President Larry Jones gave brief remarks at Friday's general sessions and at the evening banquet. Boyd F. Buckingham, vice president emeritus, gave the invocation at the latter. Dean Howard Macauley, College of Professional Studies, offered remarks at Saturday's general session.

Conference director was BU Reading Clinic Director Edward Poostay.

K. Smith) Walls '66 and her husband.

Representing BU were John Walker, vice president for institutional advancement; Tony Ianiero, director of development; Bret Hoffmaster, president of CGA; and Doug Hippenstiel, director of alumni affairs.

Alumni from the Montgomery and Bucks County area met on June 27 at Bentley's Restaurant in North Wales.

Attending were Nan Gross '79, Anne Molchan '78, Ronald Brown '80, Peggy Burns '67, Mike Connell '82, Jane Constable '83, Jon E. Deininger '83, William Todd Gerstemeier '83, Barry Grimm '80 and his wife Christine, Sandra Hemmig '77, Sharon Hildebrand '83, Sharon Kauffman '71, Ann Medeiros '80, Karrie Myers '82, Carol Landes '82, Tom Castrilli '69, Marilyn K. Robinson '77, Karen Rogosky '78, Beth Rubincam '80, Tony Varano '82 and Jonathon Riesberg '83.

Representing the university were Tom Davies, director of the Career Development Center; Anne Connell '77, assistant dean of admissions; Linda Zyla, assistant dean of student life; Dr. John Olivo, chairman of Business Education and Office Administration; and Doug Hippenstiel.

The fifth annual alumni luncheon at Boca Raton, Florida, was held in March with F. A. (Red) Garrity '28 making all the arrangements.

Attending were Anne J. (Fawcett) Campbell '38, Isabel (Chelosky) Hester '29, Dorothy (Chelosky) Janowski '35, Gladys (Richards) Kleckner '25, Arthur J. Kneer '34, Joseph Curillo '50, James Williams '28, Jennie Williams, Stuart J. Marvln '78, Diane (Pletcher) Marvln '79, Donald A. Watts '37, Gladys Watts, Victor and Alma Pastucek, Frederic McCutchen '43, Michael Devereux '73, Ella Mae Jackson (retired dean of women), and Helen J. Demance.

Britt named to post

Students at BU now have the option of enrolling in a new cooperative education program in which they spend a portion of their time at off-campus jobs, usually related to their major course of study.

Students majoring in accounting, for example, would usually be employed in the accounting departments of companies or banks.

Cooperative education at the college level was initiated in 1906 at the University of Cincinnati. Today, over 200,000 students are enrolled in co-op programs in the U.S., and that number is expected to expand to a million by the end of this decade. About 30,000 companies find it beneficial to hire co-op students.

Coordinating BU's program is Ruben Britt, a native of Boston, Massachusetts, who had been doing research on cooperative education at Northeastern University for the past 18 months.

Britt received a Bachelor of Science degree in physical education at Southern University in Baton Rouge, Louisiana, and received certification in broadcasting from North Eastern School of Broadcasting in Massachusetts.

He taught health and physical education in the Boston Public School System for seven years and coached track and basketball for five years. He was also involved in counseling socially deprived youth for one year and served as liaison between Brighton High School and Northeastern University.

Alumni interested in the cooperative education program should contact Britt at 717-389-4070.

Hundreds return for Alumni Weekend

By ANDREW HEINTZELMAN

Student Feature Writer

Bloomsburg, Bloomsburg, Alma Mater
Up on College Hill.
Years to come shall find us ever
True to Bloomsburg still.

With loyalty in their hearts and smiles on their faces, nearly 400 alumni showed they are true to Bloomsburg still as they returned to their hilltop alma mater, June 15-16, for the annual Alumni Weekend.

From as far back as the Class of '05, to as recent as the Class of '84, from as far away as Colorado, to as near as College Hill, alumni returned to see changes, greet old friends, and embrace their fondest memories of Bloomsburg University.

The past graduates were honored at the annual Alumni Banquet, with the evening's special guests being the members of the Class of '34, as they celebrated the 50th reunion of their graduation.

Honored with Distinguished Service Awards at this year's Alumni Banquet were Charles F. Hensley '33, his wife, Elizabeth Krumanocker Hensley '34, and Dr. James H. McCormick, former president of BU, and now the first chancellor of the new State System of Higher Education.

As alumni arrived on campus for the weekend, members of the classes of '24 and '34 gathered in the Presidents' Lounge of Kehr Union for their "Early Bird" receptions. Many alumni were impressed by the great turn-out for alumni weekend, with approximately 25 graduates from the Class of '24, and nearly 50 from the Class of '34 attending.

Three of the four class officers from the Class of '34 returned after 50 years, Katherine Yale Graham, vice president; Jean Phillips Plowright, secretary; and Rachel Beck Malick, treasurer. The president, Howard Kretzler, is deceased.

Before the banquet, alumni, administrators and friends socialized on the lawn behind Lycoming Hall, entertained by BU's IMAGE, a group from the Department of Communications Studies, which sings and dances using sign language.

As spacious as the lawn seems to students now, older alumni could not forget the days when they were on the hill. Members of the Class of '34, for example, had only three buildings, Carver Hall, old Waller Hall, old Science Hall, and just 800 other students to compete with for space on campus.

"It's beautiful," one alumna remarked, "but it's so built up."

The 1934 graduates had a chance to truly reminisce, however, at the banquet that night. To the tune of 1934's top ten hits, alumni and guests watched a film with sports and graduation highlights from the '33-'34 school year. It was a chance to remember the first appearance of Roongo, the Husky mascot, and to see Waller Hall's long porch and the fountain in front of Carver Hall.

Reminiscing in a different way at the alumni banquet was Dr. McCormick. Receiving his Distinguished Service Award, McCormick paid tribute to alumni and the alumni board for their support in getting BU moving in the mid 70s. McCormick was presented with the award for the dynamic leadership he provided during his ten-year term (1973-'83) as BU president.

Charles Hensley '33 and Elizabeth Krumanocker Hensley '34 received DSAs for their life-time of community service. They are active in scouting, church activities and other community organizations in the Wyoming Valley, and are also members of several honor and professional societies.

Past recipients of the DSA who attended the '84 Alumni Banquet were Dr. James V. Derosé '39, Eda Bessie and Stuart Edwards '41, Capt. Curt English '56, Earl A. Gehrig '37, Frank J. Golder '31, Clayton Hinkel '40, Vera Housenick '05, Verna Jones '36, Hon. John E. Lavelle '41, Millard Ludwig '48, Dr. Emory Rarig '51, Edward F. Schuyler '24, Esther Dagnell Via '34, and Donald Watts '37.

Also recognized at this year's banquet were several retiring faculty: Robert L. Bunge '47, after 19 years of service at BU; Kenneth C. Hoffman, after 14 years; Dr. Donald D. Rabb '46, after 27 years, and; Dr. Robert Warren, after 19 years.

In addition to recognizing these retiring faculty, several other faculty were honored for their present accomplishments. Seven of 15 outstanding faculty from RU, picked during the past three years, were recognized

Bloomsburg University of Pennsylvania
Bloomsburg, PA 17815

Dear John:

During my ten-year tenure at Bloomsburg University, the trustees and university community permitted me to enjoy the best of several worlds. Among the faculty and staff, who saw to the care and nurturing of our students, I endeavored to support their efforts and applauded their achievements. It was a time for mutual understanding.

Among the students, who regaled in the inevitable maturation of their intellectual prowess and progress, I welcomed their inquiries and encouraged their exploration. It was a time for mutual growth.

Among the alumni, who knew the Bloomsburg universe for all that a university can and should be, I took great comfort and experienced unprecedented support. It was a time for mutual vision.

And now, as grateful as I have been to the alumni of Bloomsburg University in the past, I must recognize their generosity once again. I take this opportunity, therefore, to thank you for selecting me to receive the 1984 Bloomsburg Alumni Distinguished Service Award. Somehow, it does not seem quite fair that a person would be awarded for doing a job that has offered so much pleasure, touched so many lives, and provided such wonderful friends. Nevertheless, I am deeply honored.

Maryan and I have been blessed at Bloomsburg. Our personal efforts have been supported by loyal alumni, committed faculty, enthusiastic students, dedicated Board members and support staff -- all willing to roll up their sleeves and work together to "make Bloomsburg better." We did, but any success we have experienced has been a joint effort. Our success is your success. We are grateful to have been a part of your lives. Thank you.

Sincerely,

James H. McCormick

Rochester, Lloyd inspire athletes

Seniors recognized during banquet

By ANDREW HEINTZELMAN
Student Feature Writer

Participation in college sports helps student athletes to realize the importance of sacrifice, confidence, and aids in their ability to handle pressure. With the outstanding record of the Bloomsburg University alumnus who offered this advice, and the inspiring words of another special BU athlete, the truth and spirit of sports was exemplified and captured by BU's athletes and coaches at the 10th Annual Day of Champions Banquet.

In an evening of reminiscing and celebration, BU welcomed back athletes Richard (Dick) Lloyd, 1962 graduate and former winner of BU's most outstanding male athlete award, and Vernon Rochester, star running back for BU who was seriously injured in a game last fall.

The Day of Champions Banquet, sponsored by the Husky Club, featured Lloyd, presently director of alumni relations at Rutgers University, as speaker, and Rochester as a special guest. Winners of the outstanding undergraduate male and female athletes awards, and male and female athletes of the year were announced, and the Husky Club's Coach of the Year award was presented.

The evening began with an Italian cuisine dinner, after which Dean of Student Development, Dr. John S. Mulka, introduced Lloyd. The former Rutgers University basketball coach began his lively and informal speech by expressing his gratitude for recently being selected as the ninth member of the BU Athletic Hall of Fame.

Lloyd said that as he had approached the little college on the hill that spring evening, he realized that some things just don't change. For this brief moment in his speech, Lloyd wasn't speaking of sports, but instead of the social life he enjoyed at BU.

"I was surprised when I saw Hess' was still here, but even the Waffle Grill?"

After recognizing several of his former coaches and professors in attendance at the Day of Champions Banquet, Lloyd reflected on how they had taught him to set goals, and plan to reach those goals. Saying that he now realizes how important that advice is, Lloyd offered the same advice to the nearly 400 athletes at the banquet.

"Any sports experience can be helpful later in life," Lloyd said. "You can realize the importance in any profession you choose."

Lloyd also stressed the importance of participation in other areas of college life. While at Bloomsburg, Lloyd was on the basketball team for four years and was captain his last two. He was also president of the junior/senior class, a CGA officer, fraternity member, circulation manager of the student newspaper, and was involved with numerous other activities and associations.

In his closing remarks, Lloyd reminded the athletes that all he had talked about was unimportant, unless the individual players make sacrifices.

"Put yourself in a position to win. Only you can do that."

As Head Football Coach George Landis walked to the stage following Lloyd's speech, he carried a small white box. He introduced the next speaker as an athlete and a person who has all the things Dick mentioned, "and a hell-u-va lot more."

Pulling a maroon and gold football jersey from the box, Landis held it up for Vernon Rochester.

"This is the jersey you wore last; I pray you wear it again."

As Coach Landis adjusted the microphone, Rochester maneuvered his wheelchair toward the head table.

"Life's funny," he said in a solemn voice. "You can't imagine how quickly you can lose so much—but that's life."

In recovering from his injury, Rochester said his main goal is to play football again.

"I want to be with this team when they win that championship. With the help of God, I'll be back. I promise you."

While out of school, Vernon Rochester has been working academically and athletically in preparing for his goal to return to Bloomsburg University.

In his New Jersey hometown, Rochester has been working-out at a local gym three times a week for an hour each time. The exercises he is doing are weight lifting, push-ups, and sit-ups.

At home, Rochester is working with a computer and doing some reading. He also plans to try for his driving evaluation some time this summer.

Rochester's inspiring speech set the mood for honoring the other outstanding athletes of BU. The awards were presented by Athletic Director Roger Sanders, with the first—Outstanding Undergraduate Female Athlete—going to sophomore Jean Millen, a member of BU's basketball and softball teams. In only two years of playing, Millen has broken the school's basketball point and rebound records, and is in the top 10 in scoring and rebounds in NCAA's Division II. She was named to the All Conference teams for both basketball and softball.

This year's Outstanding Undergraduate Male Athlete was Frank Sheptock, sophomore football player and co-captain who led the team in tackles last season from the linebacker position.

BU's female Athlete of the Year honored at the banquet was Deb Long, a senior who has made All American and All Conference in both field hockey and softball. She also played on two national championship teams.

The Male Athlete of the Year was basketball captain Barry Francisco. In his career at BU, Francisco set a record for starting 121 consecutive games and is second on BU's all-time point scoring list.

Francisco also received the Time Markets-McDowell Oil award from a company representative at the Day of Champions Banquet.

This year's Husky Club Coach of the Year is at the helm of two athletic teams which have received both state and national honors. Field hockey/softball coach

Jan Hutchinson accepted the Coach of the Year honor from former Bloomsburg Chief of Police Pat Haggerty, saying that the award is for herself and her players. Hutchinson was also presented with a plaque from the Press-Enterprise Sports Editor, John Michaels. The plaque was presented in honor of the field hockey team's status as NCAA Division II champions.

After the athletes and coaches were honored, Acting President Larry Jones ended the Day of Champions by extending his congratulations to everyone involved in BU athletics, and reminding the student athletes that participation in sports is all part of the learning experience.

Athletic Director

Another successful year in athletics was realized as evidenced by one NCAA Championship (field hockey), three Pennsylvania Conference Championships (field hockey, softball, and wrestling), and three runner-up championships (men's basketball, women's swimming, and men's tennis).

The success that your Alma Mater has enjoyed in recent years certainly suggests that we are being looked at as one of the leaders in the Pennsylvania State Conference.

The Husky Club's Day of Champions Banquet honoring the seniors, captains, and the champions who brought honor and pride to the University was filled with emotion.

The guest speaker, Dick Lloyd, Class of 1962, delivered a sincere and priceless message to the athletes and guests present.

Returning for the first time since his football injury was Vernon Rochester and his parents. Vernon's strength and courage will serve, I am sure, as a great inspiration for all who attended the banquet and especially our young student athletes.

As I listened to Dick and Vernon address those present, I could not help wishing that more faculty, parents, friends and alumni were in attendance.

This year's outstanding athletes were among the best we have ever had. The outstanding underclassmen for 1983-84 were Jean Millen, an All-Conference basketball and softball player, and Frank Sheptock, an All-American football player, both of whom are sophomores.

The Lucy McCammon Award for the outstanding senior female athlete at the University went to All-American Debbie Long, Fleetwood, Pa., who participated both in field hockey and softball.

The Redman Award, which is given to the outstanding senior male athlete, was presented to Barry Francisco, the All-Conference basketball player from Wilkes-Barre, Pa.

Jan Hutchinson, whose field hockey Team won the NCAA Championship and the Pennsylvania Conference Championship and whose softball team won the second straight Pennsylvania Conference Championship, was named the 1983-84 Coach of the Year by the Husky Club.

I am pleased to announce that Dick Lloyd, director of alumni relations at Rutgers University, will be inducted into the Athletic Hall of Fame at Homecoming on Saturday, October 27, 1984. The induction ceremony will become an annual event of all future Homecoming activities. We look forward to your being with us when Dick is honored by his Alma Mater.

Football season is just around the corner. With the young squad of '83 getting a year older, there is reason for great optimism especially since our team finished second in the Eastern Division of the PSAC. Watch us be a title-contender this year!

The Husky Club will be sponsoring Monday luncheons following each football game in the fall and will continue to do so during the winter sports' season. If you are in the Bloomsburg area, plan to join us at the Hotel Magee and hear our coaches discussing the Big Games. An invitation will not be required to attend.

As you know, we are in the middle of our scholarship campaign. In order for us to maintain a leadership edge in the conference, we need your continued support. As of yet, we haven't reached one-quarter of our goal of $60,000.

Please consider joining the Husky Club via the Alumni Association. It entitles you to full membership in both organizations with a contribution of $25.00 or more. You may designate a particular sport, or give directly to the General Scholarship program.

We sincerely need your help to maintain our present commitments as well as attracting new athletes to the University. If you have any questions, please contact me or Dr. Bob Warren, the new executive director of the Husky Club. Please don't forget us!

Jan Hutchinson honored as 'Coach of Year'

Let the record speak for itself...215-70-13!

For Bloomsburg University head softball and field hockey coach Jan Hutchinson, that adds up to a winning percentage of .721 and three national championships in seven seasons.

Hutchinson joined the Huskies' athletic staff in January of 1978 and since that time has built the programs into two of the finest in NCAA Division II. Six fall seasons of field hockey have produced a 74-23-12 mark and the unit currently reigns as national champions. This past year, Bloomsburg University racked up a 16-2-1 record and won the Pennsylvania Conference Championship on the way to its second national title. The Huskies won an AIAW Division III crown in 1981.

In the seven spring seasons, it's been softball, and the coach, who resides in Allentown (PA) with husband Tom, assistant wrestling coach at Lehigh University, has led her teams to a 141-47-1 record and five national tournament appearances, including a 28-4 national championship campaign in 1982.

The reason for such success year after year?

"I think you can attribute it to a lot of things," stated Hutchinson. "But if you had to pick one or two, it would probably be the outstanding players we have been able to attract to Bloomsburg and our style of play in both sports, although it differs somewhat."

In the recently completed softball season, the Huskies posted a 30-4 record using a Hutchinson trademark — aggressiveness. Two of the four losses in 1984 came in the NCAA Eastern Regional at the hands of Sacred Heart, the same team to eliminate Bloomsburg the previous year.

After each team had defeated Mankato State to eliminate the Mavericks from the double elimination affair, they locked up in a 23-inning contest eventually won 1-0 by the Pioneers. The Huskies came back to win the second game 3-0 before dropping the finale 1-0 in eight innings. The 30 victories marked the second consecutive year BU reached that plateau after notching a school-record 33 wins in 1983.

Hutchinson commented, "We try as much as possible to make things happen, especially on the bases. The kids have had a good grasp of the game and have been extremely skilled. To go along with that, our pitching over the past four years has been great."

Hutchinson's mound staff, led by All-American Tina

Souders, Allentown, has been among the Division II leaders in earned run average in each of the last three seasons. Souders alone has accounted for 59 victories during that period.

HUTCHINSON

The senior right hander is one of a group of eight veterans who ended their collegiate careers this year, including other starters shortstop Anne Schmidt, Center Valley; Kathy Behan, Nulley, N.J., third base; catcher Denise Henderson, Center Valley; and center fielder Deb Long, Fleetwood. For the first time in several years, Hutchinson will be faced with a major rebuilding task.

"It's certainly been an outstanding group even if you just look at the numbers. But beyond that, they have just jelled. It's hard to describe the intangibles involved in any situation. They are a very goal-oriented bunch as are several of our returning athletes. The success of a team all depends on where the kids set their sights, and ours have made the top their goal. Even before this group, players like Bert Spezialetti and Carolyn Bartoni, among others, got things started."

Over 20 Huskies have gained some type of post-season individual recognition in the past four years.

Some of the same players in softball have also spent time on Hutchinson's field hockey squad. Deb Long heads that pack as she has gained All-American honors three times and also competed in the U.S. Sports Festival. Joining here are standouts Karen Hertzler, Mechanicsburg, who doubles as the Huskies' second baseman, and goalie Laurie Snyder, Shoemakersville, a reserve first baseman on the softball squad. Snyder has been a four-year fixture in the Huskies' net. This season she allowed just nine goals in 19 games and shut out 12 opponents. She has already gained All-District Academic honors and is on the national ballot for Academic All-American based on her athletic talents and a 3.79 grade point average.

Teamwork is a key to success if you talk to a coach at any level and Hutchinson is no different.

"Our short passing game style in hockey accentuates the need for teamwork," Hutchinson stated. "When you have to play together for 70 minutes with just one break, good team play is essential."

Hutchinson's approach to both sports is basically the same from a philosophy standpoint.

"We talk a lot about the anxieties and stressful situations that arise in athletics. Our kids won't choke very often because we have discussed what it takes to win at our level, and I think when the time comes, simply said, our kids are ready to play."

Art Luptowski '73, a standout cager from the early 1970s, was one of several alumni athletes who returned to campus this summer to help with the various sports camps. Art is head basketball coach at Kutztown High School.

Athletes do well in classroom, too

(Editors Note: The following article by Sarah Hackforth and Carol Cunnon, student writers, appeared in the May 4 issue of THE VOICE, the student newspaper at BU.)

Jocks are not dumb, or so statistics indicate. A common fallacy held among the non-athletic community is that student athletes accepted into the college program are not academically up to college standards.

A recent study done through the combined efforts of the Student Development and Institutional Research offices, yielded statistics that counteracted this fallacy.

When asked their feelings on the subject, a number of students gave their opinions: "So many are recruited just for their athletic abilities and not for their intelligence," commented one co-ed.

"How could they do well, every time I see them they are working out, they don't make time for studies," said a senior marketing major.

"Of course they are dumb, have you ever seen a football player with a book in his hand?" said a freshman from Luzerne.

Little do these and other people on campus realize just how much an athlete must do in order to participate in their respective sport and keep in good academic standing with the University.

A study was conducted comparing the grade point average of athletes to the rest of the student body. The study found that the non-athlete's current G.P.A. was 2.77 while the athlete's G.P.A. was 2.62, a marginal difference of only .15. How then are the dumb athletes in such close contention with the rest of the student body?

"Time management," says field hockey and softball coach Jan Hutchinson, "is the key to an athlete's academic performance. They have to organize and fit in all they can in the few hours afforded them between classes and practices. They can't whittle away hours if they are serious about academics."

The student athlete survey was initiated last fall. Its purpose was to survey the grades of Bloomsburg athletes through the seasons from 1980-1981 through 1983-1984. The sports considered were those in the highlighted category. They were football, wrestling, women's softball, basketball, swimming, and men's basketball.

The study also looked into the athlete's status, recruitment, financial aid, scholarships, and their current and admission status.

Of the 288 athletes in the survey, 266 were admitted as freshmen with 18 others being transfers. 150 of the 266 were recruited and six of the transfers also were recruited.

"Budgeting is one way athletes get their work done," said women's basketball coach Sue Hibbs. "Priorities are another way. They must learn to set priorities and be responsible. It's the same for people who are R.A.'s, in fraternities or sororities or forensics. The student athlete is not alone."

Comments have been made about professors passing unworthy students because they are a member of an athletic team.

"It makes no difference to me what they do in their spare time just as long as they are prepared and hand their work in on time," said a communications studies professor. "I have had a number of football players and wrestlers and I have always found them conscientious. One summer session I had a couple of football players who did poorly, but they were not asked back, the same as any other summer proby."

Commented one varsity athlete, "I'm better organized during the season than I am in the off season. I know I have deadlines to meet and I can't afford to blow-it-off 'til the last minute because that last minute could be taken up with an extra practice or sheer restlessness before a big game — it's impossible to procrastinate!"

Even though Bloomsburg upholds its rigid academic standards, it still boasts a fine number of athletic teams. With a national field hockey team calling Bloomsburg their home and a division I wrestling team, nationally ranked softball and swim teams, and a men's basketball team that has shown its face in PSAC playoffs for four years in a row, Bloomsburg is definitely not lagging in the athletic department.

Remember, most of the athletes at Bloomsburg are here to earn degrees and find jobs. To accomplish their goal they must not only succeed on the playing field, but also in the classroom.

Louise W. Vetterlein '12 is deceased.

Ruth Monahan '12 died in 1981.

Rena M. (Schlotterbeck) Snyder '13 is 90 years old but has never outgrown her flair for fashion. In her dark blue felt hat, with exactly the right curve to the brim, and her matching wool coat setting off her petite, erect figure, she could have just stepped out of the pages of "Vogue."

Rena lives alone and takes care of her own house and more than twenty house plants, though her daughter Gladys Reliford still lives in the Detroit area.

When she was in high school in 1909 the principal advised the students that teaching was the best profession for the girls, so Rena became a teacher and taught until she retired at 65. After graduating from Bloomsburg she took her Bachelor of Science in Education at Wayne State University, then known as City College. Her first job in Michigan was in what is now the city of East Detroit but was then known as Halfway, because that is where the horses were changed half-way on the way to Mt. Clemens.

A member of her church congregation for 53 years, Rena belonged to the Unitarian Church on Woodward Avenue which merged with the Universalist Church on Cass Avenue to form the first Unitarian Universalist Church in the country, long before the national merger of the two denominations. She has always been active in church affairs.

She early joined the Fireside Group which later became the Evening Guild and served as president of it two or three times as well as being president of the Women's Alliance for two years and also on the Board of Trustees.

As a retiree she enrolled at Ford Hospital and took a six week training course to be a nurse's aide, serving in this capacity for two and a half years. She volunteered also at the Council of Social Agencies where she worked with Girl Scout leaders, addressed envelopes and performed any other tasks which needed to be done.

She has five grandchildren and six great-grandchildren, all of whom came for a family reunion in May-June 1982, though one had to travel all the way from Sweden for the event.

Rena is never too busy to talk on the telephone and is the unofficial center of a network which keeps up on how and what congregation members are doing. If you don't know, call Rena. Her phone number is (313) 838-2833. Her address is 13293 Freeland Avenue, Detroit, Mich. 48227.

Renna (Crossley) Masteller '13 and her husband, Kenneth, celebrated their 65th wedding anniversary on June 5. Mrs. Masteller is an Agriculture Graduate of Penn State University and a member of Caldwell Consistory. They are both 92 and formerly farmed in Center Township. Their address is R. D. #1, Buckhorn, Bloomsburg, Pa. 17815.

Frank B. Cotner '13 is deceased.

Leah (Bogart) Lawton '14 and her husband, George W.

Lawton, celebrated their 68th wedding anniversary on May 11. They live at Stone Church Road, R.D. 1, Berwick, Pa. 18603.

Mrs. Lawton is the daughter of the late Mr. and Mrs. D. Clark Bogart, Millville. She taught in area schools. She is a Red Cross volunteer and former member of Berwick Garden Club.

Her husband, son of the late Mr. and Mrs. James T. Lawton, Millville, was a rural mail carrier for more than 30 years. He is interested in growing vegetables and flowers.

The Lawtons lived on a farm in Greenwood for 25 years, later residing in Bloomsburg. They have lived in Berwick area since 1953. They are members of First Presbyterian Church, Berwick, and have been members of the sanctuary choir for over 25 years.

They have two daughters, Mrs. Bryan (Jean) Funk, teacher in Endwell, N.Y., and Mrs. Joseph (Louise) Silmington, a Berwick nurse. There are four grandchildren and one great-grandson.

A daughter, Mrs. Fred (Audrey) Gilmartin, who was on the faculty of Lehigh University, died in 1975. An infant daughter Mary is deceased.

Lillian C. Gleason '14 is deceased.

1915

Elizabeth G. (Gronka) Ravin '15 died on June 29, 1978 at Glen Lyon, Pa. Survivors include Dr. Louis J. Ravin, Plymouth Meeting, Pa.; Peter P. Ravin, D.D.S., Wilkes-Barre, Pa.; Joseph P. Ravin, M.D., Hamburg, N.Y.; and John L. Ravin, D.D.S., Nanticoke, Pa.

1916

Hazel M. (Kreamer) Price '16 has died.

1919

Amy M. Crook '19 died on February 18, 1984. Miss Crook came from Minersville, Pa. While attending Bloomsburg she was active in Callie, Y.W.C.A., G.D.C. and G.A.A. She was known as Midge and was a graduate of Minersville High School.

1921

Mary E. (Dreese) Stricker '21 has died. Born in McClure, March 11, 1902, she was a daughter of the late Palmer and Lizzie Miller Dreese. She was preceded in death in 1969 by her husband, Robert B. Stricker.

She taught in public schools in Snyder County, Harrisburg, Dauphin and Red Lion for 39 years, retiring in 1969. While attending Bloomsburg, Mrs. Stricker was active in Philo. and Y.W.C.A.

She was a member of Trinity Lutheran Church.

Walter P. Benninger '24 died on August 11, 1983. He taught school for two years and then went into the wholesale flower business. Survivors include his wife, son and grandson.

Mr. Benninger came from St. Johns, Pa. and was a graduate of Hazleton High School.

W. Leslie Seely '24 died on May 27.

He was a retired teacher and farmer and had last taught at E.A. Encke Elementary School in West Hazleton for 35 years, retiring in 1967. Mr. Seely was a graduate of Syracuse University in 1928. While attending Bloomsburg he was a member of both the baseball and football teams.

Born in Nescopeck Township, April 13, 1902, he was a son of the late Walter and Catherine Hill Seely. He spent 39 years at Drums R.D. 2, and previously lived in Nescopeck Township. He was a member of St. John's Evangelical Lutheran Church, St. John's, where he was past member of the church council and was a Sunday school teacher. Mr. Seely was past member of 4-H, a 30-year member of the FFA, and a charter member of St. John's Senior Citizens Club.

He was preceded in death by brothers and sisters, Leeland, Carmen Hess, Floyd, Harold, Alberta Seely and Lenore McGinnis.

Surviving are his wife, the former Annie Bronson, with whom he celebrated a 61st wedding anniversary on May 26; children, Mrs. William (Ruth) Webb, Deland, Fla.; Harold Seely, Orangeville; Mrs. Gerald (Alice) Boock, Orums; Joyne Pohl, Livonia, Mich.; Lois Drogan, Orums; Walter Seely, Baltimore, Md.; Charles Seely, Orums; and Wayne Seely of Canton; 32 grandchildren and 10 great-grandchildren; brothers and sisters, Margaret Smith, and Mrs. Oscar (Kathryn) Smith, both of Kingston; Mrs. G. U. Marian Keller, Wilmington, Del.; John Seely, Berwick; and Emery Seely, Mohnton.

Louise (Scherer) Rolland '24 died on April 2. She was born in Tamaqua, a daughter of the late Frederick and Jennie Beddall Scherer.

Mrs. Rolland was a graduate of Tamaqua High School and was known as "Loui" while attending Bloomsburg. Prior to her marriage she was a teacher in Tamaqua and McKeansburg area schools.

Surviving are her husband, Guy F.; a son, Grey, Freehold, N.J.; a daughter, Joan, wife of William Stoudt, Florissant, Mo.; seven grandchildren, a sister, Mary B. Scherer, South Mountain, and a brother, Paul F. Scherer, Tamaqua.

The Class of '24 assembled at least 25 members during Alumni Weekend for their 60th reunion, June 16.

The alumni came from Florida, New York, Virginia, Texas, Delaware, as well as Pennsylvania for a fast-paced weekend at their hilltop alma mater. They opened the weekend with a get-together in the President's Lounge, Kehr Union, and then moved outdoors for a social hour before the annual Alumni Banquet that evening.

Two class members received awards at the banquet. Mary Dowd Deitterick, came from Galena Park, Texas, giving her one of the awards coming the greatest distance; and Grace Auten Baylor, West Milton, for having taught the longest of any in attendance, 47 years.

Twenty class members, which with husbands, wives, children and friends totalled about 40, assembled for an eight o'clock breakfast on Saturday and then many toured the campus. The only buildings still on campus that stood when '24 departed three score ago are Carver Hall and Science Hall. Also standing is the pagoda, once a focal point in a no longer existing grove that was the setting for Ivy Day tradition when Bloomsburg University was Ole Normal. A picnic on campus followed.

The reunion Saturday night was organized by Helen Barrow, Sunbury, a member of the Alumni Board of Directors and the State Library Board. Every detail was taken care of.

Members who attended: Grace Auten Baylor, West Milton; Anna Singleton (Bookend) Barnes, West Pittston; Helen E. Teacher-coach called 'perfect role model'

(The following article by Marion Valanoski appeared in the Shamokin News-Item.)

COAL TOWNSHIP — A young man arrived in Shamokin in September of 1959 at a young school. No one knew it then, but 25 years later at a banquet in his honor, he would be recognized as one of the most respected individuals to walk the halls of Lourdes Regional High School.

Leo Mulhall Jr., vice principal and athletic director, was honored by school officials for his dedicated service to Catholic education and athletics at Lourdes. Teachers, past and present, former principals, coaches, students, parents and politicians all took time to praise Mulhall.

"Leo Mulhall has been an outstanding example of what a member of the teaching profession should be," said Father Philip DeChico, principal at Lourdes. "His faith and dedication to the students makes him a perfect role model for all to follow."

Mulhall, a 1949 graduate of Shenandoah Catholic and 1959 alumnus of Bloomsburg University, where he was a co-captain of the football team his senior year, came to Lourdes on the recommendations of Husky head coach Walter Blair, Martin Hanrahan, one of the coaches he assisted at Shenandoah, and the Right Rev. Monsignor Cornelius O'Brien, who was his parish pastor.

"I had no idea that I'd end up in Shamokin as a teacher or football coach," commented Mulhall. "Father Leech was in Bloomsburg looking for a head coach and somehow ended up at the college. Coach Blair seemed to think that I'd be the man for the job

"After 10 minutes with Father Leech, I had to ask him where he was from, because I didn't know. He explained the entire situation and, having the opportunity to be close to home and interested in the area, I took the position."

Mulhall became the school's first football coach, and 1959 was just the start of a love affair that would include not only coaching athletes, but a successful teaching and administrative career that culminated with his being named vice principal in 1971.

Representatives for both Senator Edward Helfrick and State Representative Robert Belfanti read citations presented in their respective legislative bodies honoring Mulhall's endeavors. James Kelly, chairman of the Northumberland County Commissioners, read the county's resolution honoring Mulhall.

Sylvester Schiccatano, chairman of the Coal Township Commissioners, presented a plaque to Mulhall, and Bernie Romanoski, athletic director at Shamokin Area High School, and Bob Probert, teacher at Shamokin and head basketball coach, made a dual presentation.

The Shamokin contingent presented Mulhall with a plaque for his accomplishments and also the football cleats and shoulder pads he wore while playing at Bloomsburg.

Mementos came from Walt Novey, representing the Shamokin Knights of Columbus; Marcinek's Distributors Inc.; Jim Holland, 25th Anniversary Committee; Phoenix Fire Co. of Shenandoah; Shenandoah Rum-Dums and the Jack Kehoe Division #5, Ancient Order of Hibernians.

Mike Klembara, former head football coach; Dave Maloney, former head basketball coach, and Dan Novey, former assistant basketball coach, all praised Mulhall for the impact he made on their lives not only as coaches, but as a man and father-figure.

Born into a family that was the fourth generation of immigrants from Ireland, Mulhall inherited a deep respect for family, country, the church and its parochial school system.

"I've gotten all the gifts and praise, but it is the people in and out of the school that deserve all the honor," said Mulhall. "All the bishops, superintendents, principals, teachers and coaches should be honored, not me."

"The Sisters of the school, parents and students who made the sacrifices for Lourdes are the ones who deserve all the praise."

Mulhall served his country, also, as a Marine in the Korean Conflict in 1951.

Mulhall is married to the former Mary Chonski and has five daughters, Sharon '83, Patricia, Maureen, Colleen and Eileen, all graduates of Lourdes.

Why stay in one place 25 years? Why not move on? "I really don't know why. The years go by and you enjoy your work and the people you're associated with," commented Mulhall. "I have a job like anyone else and try to give my best, but this day is a humbling experience."

"We often hear about the 'Lourdes family' and today is just a perfect example of what life is really like here at Lourdes."

Professor monitors solar, wind energy and radiation levels

By PATRICK J. MURPHY
Feature Writer

Research and academics are closely related and correlated with hard work and plenty of dedicated hours in the pursuit of knowledge.

"My research is of definite public interest, and I do it because it has both scientific and social value," says Dr. David A. Superdock, a 1954 Bloomsburg graduate and member of the BU physics department.

Superdock, in cooperation with the Pennsylvania Power and Light Co., has been monitoring wind and solar energy levels as well as environmental radiation with equipment at Hartline Science Center.

The primary focus of Superdock's studies is the recording of available solar energy at the site where the research equipment is located.

Using solar panels to collect the sun's energy and wind monitoring equipment, data is collected, charted and logged to determine the amount of energy generated by the environment. The energy is logged daily and calculated in monthly averages.

Monthly energy readings are averaged to show the amounts of wind and solar energy throughout the year. The yearly reports are sent to PP&L and are used for classroom instruction.

"Using the data, I can calculate the economic feasibility of equipping a home with solar energy capability," Superdock says.

"For example, if a person is considering an investment in solar energy equipment, I can calculate how much he would save on his monthly electric bill."

PP&L uses the reports to help make decisions about the development of solar and wind-generated capabilities in the future.

Superdock's data suggests that solar energy in this area may not be too economical for the return of kilowatt hours per dollar.

"There are more cloudy days in Pennsylvania than sunny ones," he says with a chuckle, "although people may think otherwise."

The second part of Superdock's research is monitoring environmental and background radiation, along with periodic monitoring of specific radioactive isotopes associated with light water reactor emissions coming from the nuclear power plant located at Bell Bend near Berwick.

Using air filters on the roof, Superdock tests for iodine 131, a radioactive isotope, in the atmosphere.

After a filter has been exposed to the air, it is placed in a machine that tests for iodine 131, the isotope the scientist keys on for his tests.

Superdock then checks the computer-charted data for "back scatter peaks" which are associated with radioactive isotopes and used to identify particular isotopes.

"By looking the the peak, its width and how it spikes on the graph," he says, "I can determine which isotope is present in the sample."

The university recently purchased a nitrogen-cooled germanium detector that gives greater definition to an isotopic scatter peak by separating them more distinctly on the graph.

"This apparatus will give me valuable information for my research, and the test results will be useful for classroom instruction," Superdock says.

He reports there has been no significant increase in the radiation level since the Susquehanna Steam Electric Station started operating.

A significant change would be 10 percent; until now the only fluctuation has been about one percent. Superdock adds that the earth's atmospheric radiation levels are also influenced by natural occurrences like sunspot activity.

The professor devotes between 10 and 15 hours per week on the two research projects, along with his teaching assignments. He receives no financial compensation from PP&L, although a grant from the utility has made the research possible. The university has also supported the projects.

"I have a personal interest in energy research," he notes, "and that's why I have been doing the work."

Asked if he would continue the research when the five-year agreement ends in 1986, Superdock says he will have to weigh the possibility of continuing the work on his own or asking other faculty members to continue the project.

Superdock lives in Bloomsburg with his wife, Elaine, and their four children — David, Linda, Keith and Tracy David, a 1983 BU graduate, is studying medicine at the Hershey Medical Center. Keith is in the accelerated medical program at Jefferson Medical College in Philadelphia.

New CGA president sets goals for his term

By ANDREW HEINTZELMAN
Student Feature Writer

The new Community Government Association president hopes to decentralize the association and narrow the gap between it and the students at Bloomsburg University.

"Right now, CGA is just a bank for campus organizations," says Bret Hoffmaster, a junior from Mohrsville, Pa., who is beginning work this summer as the new CGA president.

"We have to cure student apathy, get more voters, and more student input."

Hoffmaster plans to work with the Alumni Association during his presidency to help attain these goals.

"What we're doing for the students obviously relates to alumni," he said. "Alumni dollars go to students, so the CGA needs alumni recognition and support."

Hoffmaster says he has always had an interest in business and politics, and eventually he would like to be involved in the political arena. For that reason, he ran for the student senate during his sophomore year at BU.

"Serving on the senate, I wanted to know more," students who constantly work with their books for that 4.0 Hoffmaster said, and so he ran for president.

In high school, Hoffmaster says his focus was sports, being involved in football and track and field. At BU, however, his interest in politics began to emerge. Before being elected to the student senate, Hoffmaster was on the Schuylkill Hall Council for one semester; and he is currently a member of the College Republicans.

"I enjoy being involved in a lot of activities," Hoffmaster says, speaking of college in general. "The are missing out on part of the education. Books and grade are important, but there's more."

Hoffmaster's major at BU is business marketing. After college and on his way to politics, he would like to have a career in wholesaling and corporate sales. Hoffmaster's experience in sales is not new, for his father owns a furniture store, and Bret has worked as a retail salesman at a men's clothing store during the summers.

Along with improving student-CGA relations as president, Hoffmaster would like to make changes in the association's budgetary policies and finance committee. Hoffmaster feels the changes are necessary because too much time and effort is being wasted with the weekly finance committee meetings and reallocations.

Hoffmaster also hopes to get the Campus Voice (the student newspaper) more involved in CGA matters.

"We support them, they should be covering our senate meetings. This could stimulate more involvement from the student population."

One idea he has is to have one Voice reporter or editor assigned to cover CGA affairs.

The new president also plans to use the Voice for surveys. "CGA needs to find out what the students want, so we can do more for them."

To learn his role as CGA president, Hoffmaster says he is anxious to talk with past CGA presidents when they make their annual return to campus this fall.

"The program is a great idea. I want to talk to as many past presidents as possible . . . I'll learn something from each one of them."

Hoffmaster began his one-year term April 29 and is spending most of the summer on campus orienting himself to the new position.

"I'm really glad I was elected. There's a lot of things I'd like to do as CGA president."

Other CGA officials who will be helping Hoffmaster attain his goals are Sean Mullen, vice president; Kelly Lewis, treasurer; Lisa Vitajiano, corresponding secretary; Becky Walker, recording secretary; Kevin Black, parliamentarian; Kelly Klingel, executive assistant; Kris Curtis, project coordinator; Doug Miller, historian; Pam Schupp, CAS coordinator.

V-12 writer seeks info

Author James G. Schneider is writing a book on the Navy V-12 program during World War II. For his book, Schneider is seeking human interest stories, humorous incidents and clear photos showing V-12 trainees on the Bloomsburg campus in 1943-45. Photos of V-12s in proximity to a campus landmark are especially important. Please respond to James G. Schneider, 888 Cobb Boulevard, Kankakee, Illinois 60901.

with Bishop Thomas V. Dolnay presiding.

After teaching in the public schools of East Orange, N.J., he was drafted into the U.S. Army and served for two years.

Following his honorable discharge, he enrolled in SS. Cyril & Methodius Seminary in Pittsburg. While there, he did graduate studies in educational administration at Duquesne University.

He was ordained into the priesthood in 1963 and his first assignment was as assistant pastor of SS. Peter & Paul's parish in Warren, Ohio.

He taught full time in the parochial high school in Warren and, in 1965, was appointed the associate pastor of Holy Ghost parish in Cleveland.

In addition, he was appointed a full-time instructor at the Byzantine Catholic High School in Cleveland.

A year later, Rev. Moran was given the assignment of being the founding pastor of Mary Magdalene parish in Fairview Park, Ohio.

Bishop Stephen J. Kocisko then assigned him to study canon law at the Pontifical Institute for Oriental Studies in Rome in 1968.

On June 15, 1971, Rev. Moran received his doctorate in canon law, graduating cum laude.

He returned to the United States and was appointed the administrator of St. Joseph's parish in Toronto, Ohio, with an additional chancery assignment and was appointed a vice chancellor in 1979.

At St. Joseph's, the Hazleton native was instrumental in the construction of a new rectory and the complete refurbishing of the church's interior.

At the request of Bishop Dolnay, he was later released by Archbishop Kocisko to serve as the chancellor of the newly-formed Diocese of Van Nuys.

In addition, he is the rector of the cathedral, a member of the diocesan board of consultants and Officials of the diocesan Matrimonial Tribunal.

Dr. Roger W. Ellis '60, a member of the teaching staff at Kansas State University, has been granted a sabbatical leave to study in California where he is attending conferences and a workshop at UCLA and other colleges in the area. He and his wife, Barbara, and two small daughters are presently living in Studio City, Calif.

Carol Vance Wary '60 has provided us with the following press release.

"The beautiful Garden Pavilion of the Spring Valley Inn, Center Valley, was the setting for a Silver Anniversary celebration honoring Mr. and Mrs. Wary of Coopersburg. They were surprised by daughter Karen, family and friends at a dinner hosted by their son, Mr. W. Scott Wary and by Mrs. Thomas Ginthner Wary of Mahanoy City.

Mr. Shawn Sakela provided guitar and vocal arrangements as family from Benton, Wilkes-Barre, Bloomsburg, Mahanoy City and Wheaton, Maryland joined Coopersburg friends in wishing the Warys 25 more happy, healthy years."

Teacher circles globe

(The following article by Jack Kliebenstein appeared in the Press-Enterprise, Bloomsburg.)

Frank Sanders has been around the world, and now his students are benefitting.

Sanders, a Central Columbia High School social studies teacher, took half of last year off and jetted, backpacked, boated and hitchhiked around the globe.

Since his return, he has been showing some 1,000 slides of places he visited and telling stories about his travels to students.

To say the least, Sanders' globetrotting was eventful:

He saw NATO war games in Germany, and feared that a real war was under way in South Korea when he was evacuated during what turned out to be only an air raid drill.

After the drill, the wrong banner was raised. They raised the one that said, "Here come the North Koreans!"

He felt the clash of history's ghosts during a visit to the English fields where the battle of Hastings was fought in 1066.

Another kind of invasion — cultural — was felt during a visit to the Abbey Road Studio where the Beatles recorded.

He saw Italy effectively shut down by demonstrations against American cruise missiles being placed in Europe.

He got word of the shooting down of South Korean Flight 007 by the Russians in September. But a month and a half later, he still flew Aeroflot, the Soviet airline.

Aeroflot was the cheapest price air travel there. He experienced natural disasters, photographing monsoon flooding in Thailand. He wanted to photograph volcanoes in Hawaii but, just hours before his visit, earthquakes struck and the area was declared off limits.

During a 32-hour stay in India, he ate and drank nothing because of fears about poor sanitation.

He was besieged by beggars who'll come right up to you and slit your knapsack with a knife to steal something.

Sanders, a Philadelphia native who graduated from Southern Columbia High School and Bloomsburg State College, is in his 11th year of teaching in the Central Columbia school district.

He had been to Europe four times before, but had never been around the world.

Of English heritage, he said, "I wanted to fill in the gaps where I hadn't been before and see places that I teach about, especially 'Down Under' and the New Zealand area."

He said Lindsay Bell, a teacher from Auckland, New Zealand, taught at Central and whetted his appetite to see that part of the world.

Before he left on the three-month journey, Sanders said he studied 2,000 to 3,000 pages of reading material in preparation for the trip.

Alumna enjoys Elderhostel at BU

By ANDREW HEINTZELMAN
Student Feature Writer

Because of an interest in her alma mater and a quest for more education, a '38 Bloomsburg alumna selected the Elderhostel program at Bloomsburg University this summer. For Helen Cassona, the week-long educational program became a look at some very touching memories.

"The feeling of nostalgia was amazing when I looked at the buildings on campus named after familiar professors and administrators," says Cassona, who remembers Dr. Haas, Dean Sutliff, Dr. Andruss, and others from her years at Bloomsburg.

"I'm impressed with the many, many beautiful buildings, and touched by their names."

Cassona and her husband, Nicholas, were in Bloomsburg from June 24-30 for Elderhostel, a program conducted on campuses throughout the world for people 55 and older. Bloomsburg's was the second Elderhostel for the Cassonas, the first being at Mr. Cassona's alma mater, Stroudsburg University.

Cassona says she picked BU for Elderhostel because she has always been interested in the progress of her alma mater; but with all the progress that has taken place, there is one thing Cassona says hasn't changed: "The professors, instructors, and students are as friendly and helpful as ever. And I'm especially happy that Carver Hall is exactly as it was in 1938."

Cassona left Bloomsburg in 1938 as Helen Pesansky. With a degree in secondary education, and social studies and French as her special areas, Cassano began an on and off career as a teacher. Her first teaching job was in Detroit, Mich., in '41, and since then she has taught in her hometown of Sheppton, Pa., Mahanoy City, Hazleton, where she met Nicholas, and Levittown, where she taught her last five years before retiring in '70 with 16 total years of teaching.

During her years in Levittown, Cassona trained numerous BU student teachers. She feels especially grateful to Professor Howard Fenstermaker for her chance to do so.

"I came to Bloomsburg wanting to take French, but I had had only one year of it in high school. Professor Fenstermaker spent the extra time with me so I could catch up and graduate as a French major. And now, I've passed this knowledge on to other Bloomsburg French students."

Cassona has become grateful to another Bloomsburg faculty member during her Elderhostel visit. "George Turner has helped us have a great time with this Elderhostel. He deserves a lot of credit for this program and he has made it very worthwhile."

Turner is a history professor at BU and coordinator of the Elderhostel program on campus.

Included in the Elderhostel program this year were discussions on operas, plays, and nuclear energy, and field trips to Centralia and the Asland coal mines.

The Cassonas say they enjoy the Elderhostel program not only for the educational aspect, but for the chance to become friends with a lot of nice people.

The Cassonas are living in Willingboro, N.J. Both in their second marriages, they have one daughter in common; who is design editor for a magazine.

Class of 1950

Elizabeth Valentino Kob, Ph.D., is a reading consultant, a college instructor, an author, and the mother of a son, Stephen, who was nine months old in June.

Beth Anne, as Dr. Kob is known to family and friends, lives in Malvern, Pa., with husband, Leo, who is vice president of Union Electric Company.

After completing her undergraduate work at Bloomsburg University in 1971, and receiving her M.Ed. here in 1974, Dr. Kob earned her Ph.D. from Penn State in 1979. Her field was curriculum and instruction in the School of Education.

Many of Beth Anne's friends know her mother, Mrs. Fred Valentino, who recently retired from Bloomsburg University after having been employed in the business office for 18 years. Mrs. Valentino resides in Berwick, where she has been a church organist for many years.

During her undergraduate years, Beth Anne Valentino was already popular, and an academic achiever. She was president of Delta Epsilon Beta sorority, and was nominated for inclusion in "Who's Who Among Students in American Colleges and Universities."

In public, Beth Anne appeared confident and happy. Behind closed doors, she was painfully aware that her weight was spiraling upward, and her energy level was spiraling downward. Beth Anne sat and contemplated her problem. Voila!

Sitting and contemplating was part of her problem. Knowledge does not always give birth to action. Lifestyles change grudgingly.

Following a tour of Europe in 1972, Beth Anne felt as though she had hiked around the world. But surprisingly, it felt good. The benefits of good nutrition and regular exercise made a lasting impression.

At age 24, motivation appeared in the form of a handsome male athlete whom Beth Anne wanted to impress. Her mental focus shifted from food to fitness. Her commitment soared. With a grim determination which can only be appreciated by other non-athletes, Beth Anne perfected her skills in swimming, skiing, running, and tennis.

In so doing, she changed her diet, her energy level, her ability to discipline herself, her attitudes, her priorities, and her self image.

Beth Anne became a different person — physically and mentally. A better person. In fact, she was so impressed by the changes in how she felt, and in how she felt about herself, that she wanted to share the whole process with others.

Dr. Kob's book, STOP DIETING, START LIVING . . . CONFESSIONS OF A LATE BLOOMER, is essentially a lifestyle manual. Validated by her own experiences, Dr. Kob's philosophy advocates planning, perseverance, and practice as she cleverly pictures the pitfalls paramount in minding ones P's (minus the Q's). The book is witty as well as wise.

"This book was written primarily for women who feel hopeless and helpless about the way they look and feel," confides Dr. Kob. "They want to change, but either think they cannot, or don't know how to begin. I want to help them."

The author is bothered when other women stand in awe of her athletics abilities and moan, "It's easy for you, you're a 'pro.'" Beth Anne wants to reassure them that she too started at ground zero, and that it can be done.

While motherhood has, of necessity, made some changes in the author's time allocations, she is determined to maintain her personal fitness program, and is equally determined that little Stephen will early be made aware of the health hazards of junk food and spectator sports. All too well, Dr. Kob recalls her early teaching years in public schools. In cafeterias, she watched sandwiches and fruit sail into trashbins, while candy, cookies, and ice cream sailed into eager young mouths.

"Can't we stop this?" she pleads.

Although a devoted wife and mother, as well as an active professional, Beth Anne follows her own advice and makes time in her busy schedule for physical activities.

"It takes planning, but it can be done," she declares. Three weeks after Stephen's birth, Beth Anne resumed jogging. In six weeks, she was playing tennis. Sometimes Stephen accompanies her to the tennis courts where he amuses himself with a nerf ball.

Other times, Beth Anne plans her day so that she is ready to dash out the door for a session of aerobics, running, or tennis as soon as husband Leo arrives to care for Stephen. She tries to do this at least three times a week.

"I could never do all that I do without the affirmation and support of my husband," Beth Anne emphasizes. Again, with Leo's approval and assistance, Beth Anne expects to continue teaching at Immaculata College in the fall where she has been on the School of Education faculty for four years. She also conducts workshops and gives presentations on subjects such as language development for the Ginn Book Company, an educational publisher.

Dr. Kob's enthusiasm has an almost evangelistic fervor as she encourages one and all to reevaluate their priorities, and to become the very best that they are capable of becoming.

"It is a challenge to change," she smiles, "accept that challenge and become all that you can be."
She knows whereof she speaks.

Performance as intern wins job for grad

By STEPHANIE RICHARDSON
Student Feature Writer

In a world with an unstable economy, many college graduates are realizing that it's tough to find a job in the real world.

Many are still sending out resumes, working at fast-food jobs, or returning to graduate school in hopes that more schooling will land them a good job.

Lynn Pezak is not one of them.

Pezak, 24, graduated from Bloomsburg State College in 1981 with a degree in public relations and advertising.

She chose to continue her education and was one of the first students to graduate under the official Bloomsburg University title with a master's degree in communication studies in 1983.

She now works at Geisinger Medical Center in Danville as internal communications coordinator. She is editor of Geisinger's weekly newsletter "Centerpage" and edits the monthly expanded version of the newsletter.

Pezak also writes feature stories for the quarterly magazine "Geisinger" read by 68,000 people across the United States, and is responsible for setting up interviews between reporters and various doctors at the hospital. She is also promoter for the kidney transplant program.

The job — which she says she got through a combination of hard work and being in the right place at the right time — consists of being a liaison with the public and an advocate for the media as well as the hospital.

Pezak had an internship at Geisinger while a senior at Bloomsburg. After graduating with her bachelor of arts, she spent two weeks interviewing at New York City advertising agencies.

"I really thought I'd go into advertising," she says. "But things didn't work out that way."

After a two-week stint in NYC, she returned to be hired by Geisinger.

Why was Geisinger, a hospital with a large staff, so quick to hire her?

"Lynn Pezak is bright, inquisitive and assertive," says Mike Kauffer, vice president for public affairs at Geisinger. "In an organization of more than 300 physicians and more than 3,000 employees, these are qualities which are essential in our office."

Kauffer says that when Pezak was an intern, she performed a case study of the hospital as market research.

She spoke with people on the street, community organizations and people at church meetings, speaking with more than 100 people overall.

"The project had the potential to be very difficult and overwhelming," Kauffer says. "She also has taken some risks and been allowed to fail, but she has also been encouraged to succeed."

Pezak she was hired because of her performance during her internship.

"I had a lot of motivation," she says. "Also, when I had a project to do, and I ran into problems, I would try to figure it out myself before asking for help. But then I wasn't afraid to ask for help. I guess, basically it's because I'm a worker and an achiever."

She feels her four-year undergraduate courses prepared her theoretically for the job, but if it hadn't been for her internship, she would have never known all the things that she learned through experience.

Another factor in her success, she says, aside from her internship and classroom work, is Mike Kauffer.

"If I had to name a role model, it would be my father," she says. "He taught me to set goals and reach for them."

"But Mike has shaped me as a professional."

While working at Geisinger, she began the master's program at Bloomsburg U and took a class in organizational communication, exploring theoretical and practical aspects of how communication patterns develop in organizations.

Pezak says although her job at Geisinger is much harder than she expected, she enjoys the challenge.

"There are so many aspects of this job," she says. "It's a lot of comprehensive planning, she says. We (the PR department) must write about everything from medicine to cuts in programs or budgets, so we have to know all about those things."

"We have to understand what is happening in every department."

One of the goals in her life is to become the director of public relations at a hospital with in two years.

"I have the experience," she says. "The writing, the editing and the planning. It's something that I really want to do."

While nearing the end of her graduate studies, Pezak went to the University of Salzburg in Austria, for her final three-credit course. Geisinger gave her a leave of absence to finish her program.

She elected to take a course about Hitler, and had the opportunity to visit Austria and Germany.

While attending Salzburg, she stayed with an Austrian woman and went to school every day from 8 a.m. until noon. In her spare time, she had the opportunity to visit countries including Czechoslovakia, Hungary and Switzerland, along with other parts of Germany and Austria.

Pezak was to return to Austria and the University of Salzburg on July 1 to take a six-week graduate course titled "Terrorism in Europe."

Madrigal Singers performing at Disneyland in Tokyo

Students tour Japan

By ANDREW HEINTZELMAN
Student Feature Writer

What began last year as a whim has become an "indescribable" two-week experience in Japan for 27 Bloomsburg University students and three faculty members.

The idea began with BU theatre professor Hitoshi Sato. When making plans to return to his homeland, Japan, Sato suggested that BU's Madrigal Singers and students from the "Step On A Crack" theater production should go along. "What began as a whim," Sato said, "has become reality."

Seventeen Madrigals and director Dr. Wendy Miller, 10 Bloomsburg Players and director Dr. Marci Woodruff, music professor Dr. Carol Reifsteck and two chaperones all performed and toured in four Japanese cities. They experienced every aspect of the country's culture, from its newest religion to its most exquisite foods.

And what has made this reality even better is the success attained by the visit.

"It really is indescribable," said Miller, a BU music professor, as he struggled to express the success of the trip. "Everyone involved is just really happy with all that has happened," she said. "I swear they (the Madrigals) could sing through anything."

The success of the trip for Woodruff's group hinged on the premise that "theatre is universal." According to Woodruff, theatre professor at BU, the original idea was to do simultaneous sign language, but she trusted the premise too well. Instead, the students merely spoke in English with no Japanese translation. The result? An audience, 90 percent of which knew no English, giggled, laughed, and even cried until the play was over, Woodruff said.

The road to Japan was a long one for the students, but both directors are proud of the effort their students exerted. Between the Madrigals and the Players, money was raised by selling mugs, candy, and hot dogs, and by performing in competitions and at many other events. They even did housework for people in Bloomsburg, and the year's total reached nearly $16,000.

The CGA was also "very receptive" according to Sato, and the Alumni Association also donated money for the trip.

With the students doing the fundraising, Sato and Reisteck began making connections with various organizations in Japan, drawing largely on previous contacts.

The group finally left New York for Tokyo on July 30. The Japanese capital was home for the first two days, then, after performances at Tenri, the Yakota Air Force Base, and a "taste" of Japanese life (such as raw octopus), they returned to Tokyo for performances at Disneyland and the U.S.-Japan Cultural Center.

It was at Tokyo's airport where the students first came face to face with differences between themselves and the Japanese.

"People just stared at us," said 6-foot 2-inch Madrigal Dwayne Heisler. "They had never seen anyone that tall before."

But Tokyo was only the beginning of the unusual attention for the group, and only their first experience as celebrities.

Founded by a woman, the Tenrikyo religion has an "oyasama," or lord, which Long said relates it to

McCoy joins PR staff

Jessie Haynes McCoy of Greenwood, Mississippi, has joined the management team of Institutional Advancement at Bloomsburg University as director of university relations.

Prior to joining BU on July 9, Ms. McCoy served as director of university relations at Mississippi Valley State University for five years. She replaces Kenneth Hoffman, who retired last December.

At MVSU, McCoy had the responsibility of communicating the university's mission and goals to its various publics. Highlights of her activities included significantly increasing the amount of media coverage of the university and its constituents, launching MVSU's first regular TV and radio shows (the radio show is aired more than 40 times a week across the Delta), editing an award-winning newsletter, and completing the university's documentary film, which played a prominent role in the MVSU receiving National Council for the Accreditation of Teacher Education approval.

In addition, she served as advisor to the student yearbook, which won first place in the Southern Regional Press Institute competition, and launched the university's first economic-impact study. As a member of MVSU's Executive Council, she was the only woman and the youngest administrator of that body.

Prior to her tenure at Mississippi Valley, she served three years as a news reporter at the Delta Democrat-Times newspaper in Greenville, Mississippi, under renowned journalist Hodding Carter III, who was the editor-in-chief.

McCoy was an honor student all through her secondary and higher education years. She was a 1973 graduate of East Side High School in Cleveland, Mississippi, and then earned an Associate of Arts degree at Coahoma Junior College, Clarksdale, Mississippi, in 1975. Her Bachelor of Arts degree in journalism was received from the University of Southern Mississippi at Hattiesburg in August 1976.

Among her honors, she was a Ford Fellow in Education Journalism, a Council for Advancement and Support of Education (CASE) Fellow and a recipient of an Outstanding Young Woman of America award. She also holds a number of other awards for creative contributions in her field.

Her memberships include College Public Relations Association of Mississippi, past president; National Federation of Press Women, Inc.; Mississippi Press Women, Inc.; American Association of University Women; and CASE's Ad Hoc Committee on Small and Developing Institutions.

Reading clinic gets $33,000

A $33,000 grant to BU's Reading Clinic will lead to the establishment of a center where adults will be taught to read, clinic director Ed Poostay announced September 6.

The center is to begin operations in mid-October, he said.

Poostay's announcement was timed to coincide with the Laubach celebration in Benton, which commemorated the 100th anniversary of the birth of Frank C. Laubach, the Bloomsburg alumnus who became the missionary and literacy advocate.

"It's extremely timely that we can announce it during the Laubach celebration and honor a man who made such a great contribution to literacy," said Poostay.

The grant from the Jobs Training Partnership Act will be used to help unemployed people improve their reading skills.

Adults seeking reading help will be asked to put in from four to six hours a week in two sessions, Poostay said. In between, they can also use the center on their own. It will be open evenings until 9 p.m.

Poostay said the grant will allow the hiring of an experienced teacher to work extensively with job-seeking adults, and it will buy machines and materials for their use.

The clinic now works with about ten adults a year, but has not had a structured program to offer them, Poostay said.

Until now, its work was primarily geared to schoolchildren and teenagers' needs, he said. That work will continue. About 75 children began fall reading sessions in early September.

Poostay said there is room at the new Adult Vocational Reading Center for Adult Literacy Cooperative volunteers to work. He said he hoped the good cooperation between the Reading Clinic and the Adult Literacy Cooperative will continue.

Foot bridge soon a reality

Work was scheduled to start by mid-September on installation of a foot bridge over Lightstreet Road, linking a parking lot used by BU with the main campus near Old Science Hall.

The foot bridge is intended to make crossing the busy highway safer for the many students who park their cars or live near the Bloomsburg Hospital.

The $120,000 project was expected to take four to six weeks to complete, according to Don McCulloch, director of physical plant.

The footbridge, which was little used at its former site in Williamsport, was sold at auction to Stopper Construction Co., Williamsport. Stopper, in turn, sold it to the university and is installing it on a new foundation.

Work began with removal of three trees in the hospital parking lot to make way for a switchback ramp leading to the footbridge.

The hospital board recently voted to give the university, which has a long-term lease on the lot, the right-of-way for the bridge installation.

"It's a real asset," said Harry Ward, assistant hospital administrator.

The footbridge, which is enclosed with sidewall panels, will be lighted.

Funding for the project included a $40,000 loan from the Community Government Association.

Alumni represent BU at special events

Alumni continue to represent Bloomsburg University at events in the areas in which they live.

Rebekah Ward Mitchell '69 represented BU at the installation of Ruth Leventhal as provost and dean of the Capitol Campus of The Pennsylvania State University on September 11.

Dr. Grace J. Thomas '42 will represent BU at the University of Georgia Bicentennial Convocation on October 1. She is associate professor of zoology there.

Alumni who are willing to represent the university at similar events in their areas should contact the Alumni Office.

Christianity. Tenrikyo may also have some modern influences, Long believes, because the lord is considered "the Parent" instead of "the Father."

The Children's Festival, where the Madrigals performed, is in honor of the children of Tenrikyo, Long said, and is held to show the high value placed upon them. It is also part of the annual pilgrimage to Tenri by thousands of members of the Tenrikyo religion, according to Long.

Moving on from Tenri, the Madrigals performed at the United States Air Force Base in Yakota, where they had their only English-speaking audience. From there, they performed at Tokyo's Disneyland, located right at the sea, and the U.S.-Japan Cultural Center in Tokyo. They also sang on trains, buses and at airports, Miller said. The Madrigals did half their performance at Disneyland on the "It's a Small World" stage. Heisler said the Madrigals were told at Disneyland that they had kept an audience longer than any other group that had performed there, despite 90-degree heat and 90-percent humidity.

The Madrigals received a Mickey Mouse trophy at the Japanese Disneyland.

The Players' other performance of "Step On A Crack" was at the U.S.-Japan Cultural Center in Tokyo. The performance was, like at Tenri, a challenge, according to Long. Because of the need for stage settings, lights, etc., much communication had to be done between the students and Japanese workers at the theaters, and a language barrier had to be broken by use of translators. As Long said, "time overcame the barriers." But at the cultural center the Players had only one-fourth of the stage space to which they are accustomed; another barrier to overcome.

Now that both performances are over, however, Woodruff and Sato agree that the students handled the complications well. In fact, "both places want us back," Sato said, "especially the cultural center," where they feel that drama is a good way for the Japanese to learn American culture, he added.

The group from Bloomsburg did take time for touring while in Japan, seeing everything from the Big Buddha to Japan's most modern shopping mall.

Heisler and Miller said that, while in the mall, they underwent an everyday occurrence in Japan, but a very new experience for them.

"I could feel the floor moving," Heisler said, "and at first I blamed it on myself, figuring the heat had finally gotten to me. But then I felt it again."

Heisler checked with Miller, and sure enough they had both felt what the Japanese call, when they even notice it, a daily tremor. They never knew until later that night they had been through an earthquake that measured 3.4 on the Richter scale, Heisler said. He also learned that more than 100 tremors a day shake Tokyo.

BU ranks fifth in number of grads prepared to teach

In its 1982-83 report entitled, "The Preparation and Occupational Pursuits of Teachers," PDE lists the state universities with the five largest numbers of teachers prepared with initial certification as follows: West Chester, 492; Indiana, 395; Millersville, 304; Bloomsburg, 293; and East Stroudsburg, 492.

Five classes top '84 goals

The 1984 Annual Fund of the BU Alumni Association stood at $118,000 on September 1, according to John W. Thomas '47, president of the Association.

The goal for the campaign, which ends on December 31, is $185,000.

Five classes have surpassed their goals, while another class is very close.

The pacesetters:

Class of 1933 — 38 alumni have contributed $3,187, topping the goal of $1,285.

Class of 1934 — 66 class members have contributed $1,428, topping the goal of $1,392.

Class of 1936 — 12 members have given $1,925, topping the goal of $513.

Class of 1967 — 66 members have given $3,338, topping the goal of $2,959.

Class of 1972 — 121 members have given $4,736, topping the goal of $4,726.

Only a dollar away from its goal was the Class of 1946. Ten members gave $405 toward the goal of $406.

A progress report on the remaining classes follows:

- 1905 — 1 contributor, $100, toward goal of $174.
 1907 — 2 contributors, $125 toward goal of $487.
 1910 — 1 contributor, $5 toward goal of $270.
 1912 — 6 contributors, $240 toward goal of $351.
 1913 — 4 contributors, $75 toward goal of $102.
 1914 — 4 contributors, $90 toward goal of $200.
 1915 — 6 contributors, $185 toward goal of $608.
 1916 — 4 contributors, $65 toward goal of $384.
 1917 — 5 contributors, $77.36 toward goal of $338.
 1918 — 8 contributors, $125 toward goal of $261.

SCHOLARSHIP RECIPIENT — Michelle A. Frye of Ringtown was the recipient of the third annual Elizabeth H. Hubler Alumni Scholarship in the amount of $1,000. The scholarship is provided each year to a senior at North Schuylkill Area High School by the family of Miss Hubler, a long-time educator in that school district and member of the BU Alumni Board of Directors. Also shown in photo, from left, are Dr. Gerald T. Nesvold, principal, Doug Hippenstiel, BU alumni director; and Anthony Vicic, guidance counselor.

$1,000 bequest by alumna benefits scholarship fund

Helen M. Keller '32, who died on March 8, 1984, left a bequest of $1,000 to the Alumni Scholarship Fund.

Born August 28, 1909, in Snyder County, she was the daughter of the late William I. and Marietta Beaver Keller.

Miss Keller was a graduate of Mifflinburg High School. While attending Bloomsburg, she was active in athletics, "B" Club, Bloomsburg Players, Maroon and Gold newspaper, Nature Study Club and Phi Lambda. She did graduate work at Bucknell University and the University of Chicago, and she received her master's degree in social work from Loyola University of Chicago.

She was employed by the Lutheran Social Services of Illinois. In addition, she was employed as a clinical social worker in the Veterans Administration Hospitals in Tomah, Wisconsin, and Coatesville. She served as a social work consultant for the Lutheran Service Society of Northeastern Ohio for five years. She was also employed in the social department at the Laurelton State School and Hospital before retiring in 1972 due to ill health.

Miss Keller was an active member of the First Lutheran Church, Mifflinburg; Daughters of the American Revolution, Lewisburg; Business and Professional Women's Club, Lewisburg; Women's Club, Lewisburg; West Milton Garden Club; Snyder and Union County Historical Societies; New Berlin Heritage Society; 20th Century Club, Mifflinburg; National Association of Social Workers; and American Association of Mental Deficiencies.

Minority grants given

A scholarship program to attract academically gifted minority students has been created by the Alumni Association.

Administered by the Admissions Office, the $1,600 grant can be awarded to one incoming minority student or it can be divided among two or more.

The first recipients are Sheila L. Graham of Steelton, Pa., and Linette Greer of Reading, Pa., and Kaiserslautern, West Germany. Sheila is a computer information science major, while Linette is a business management major.

The Alumni Association hopes to be able to increase the amount of the grant each year so more academically gifted minority students will be attracted to BU.

Special group

Older alumni will receive special recognition as a result of action taken by the Alumni Board of Directors at its meeting on Alumni Weekend.

Alumni, upon reaching their 50th anniversary of graduation from Bloomsburg, will become part of the Golden Anniversary Society.

Benefits of membership in this group will include:

(1) Receiving all four issues of THE ALUMNI QUARTERLY each year, regardless of contributing status.

(2) A ten-percent discount on the price of the annual banquet, the Alumni Day picnic, and the Homecoming Dinner-Dance for those members of the group who have contributed to the Annual Fund within the preceding 12 months.

(3) A ten-percent discount on any publications offered for sale by the Alumni Association for members of the group who have contributed to the Annual Fund within the preceding 12 months.

All alumni who graduated prior to 1935 automatically become part of the Golden Anniversary Society.

Non-teaching staff named

The following individuals were recently appointed to the non-teaching staff of the University:

Carol A. Courtney, residence director. She received a B.S. in elementary education/education of hearing impaired at BU in 1982. She is currently enrolled in a master's degree program in guidance and counseling and student personnel at Slippery Rock University.

Artemus Flagg, admissions counselor. He received B.S. and M.S. degrees in psychology and guidance and counseling at Tennessee State University, Nashville, in 1973 and 1974. He is enrolled in a doctoral program at Kent State University.

He was counselor at Cuyahoga Community College Metro Campus, Cleveland, Ohio.

Thomas M. Kresch, residence director. He received a B.A. in history at BU in 1981. He is enrolled in a master's degree program at Ohio University, Athens, Ohio. He was a residence director at Ohio University, Athens.

Colin J. Reitmeyer, institutional maintenance superintendent. He received an A.S. degree in architectural technology at Williamsport Area Community College in 1973 and a B.A. in architectural housing at the University of Tennessee, Knoxville, in 1975.

He was part-time instructor at the Williamsport Area Community College and was a self-employed contractor.

Maynard C. Shrewsbury, computer systems analyst. He completed various data-processing training courses and was a computer software specialist for the Social Security Administration in Baltimore, Maryland.

ANDRUSS LIBRARY — Three-story library completed in 1966 and named for Dr. Harvey A. Andrus, president from 1939 to 1969.

BAKELESS CENTER FOR THE HUMANITIES — Academic building completed in 1970. Named for the Bakeless family, including Oscar and Sara Bakeless, Bloomsburg graduates and members of the faculty; their sons, John, a graduate and author; and David, who died young; a daughter, Katherine, a graduate; and a daughter-in-law, Katherine Little Bakeless.

BENJAMIN FRANKLIN HALL — Built in 1930 as a model elementary school, it is now a multipurpose building. Named for Benjamin Franklin.

BUCKALEW PLACE — Residence of the university president. Formerly the home of Charles R. Buckalew, U.S. Senator, 1863-1869. Acquired by the state in 1926.

CARVER HALL — Built in 1867, it was first named Institute Hall. In 1927 it was renamed Carver Hall, in honor of Professor Henry Carver, principal of the Literary Institute and State Normal School, 1866-1870.

CENTENNIAL GYMNASIUM — Recreation/physical education complex built in 1939. Named because 1939 was the centennial of the founding of what became Bloomsburg University.

COLUMBIA HALL — Seven-story residence hall, completed in 1970. Named for the county.

ELWELL HALL — Nine-story residence hall, completed in 1968. Named for three generations of Elwells—Judge William Elwell, a former trustee; George E. Elwell, his son and a former trustee; and G. Edward Elwell, his grandson, a former instructor in French. George and Edward Elwell were graduates of the college.

HAAS CENTER FOR THE ARTS — Academic building and 2,000-seat auditorium, completed in 1967. Named for Dr. Francis B. Haas, college president from 1927 to 1939, and state superintendent of public instruction from 1925 to 1927 and 1939 to 1956.

HARTLINE SCIENCE CENTER — Academic building completed in 1968. Named for Professor Daniel S. Hartline, professor of biology from 1890 to 1935, Mrs. Harriet Keffer Hartline, faculty member from 1894 to 1902, and from 1920 to 1926; and their son, Dr. H. Keffer Hartline, Nobel Laureate in 1967.

KEHR COLLEGE UNION — Student union completed in 1974. Named for Dr. Marguerite W. Kehr, dean of women from 1928 to 1953.

LITWHILER FIELD — Baseball field, completed in 1974. Named for Danny Litwhiler, a graduate, who became a major league baseball player and collegiate baseball coach.

LUZERNE HALL — Four-story residence hall, completed in 1967. Named for Luzerne County.

LYCOMING HALL — Four-story residence hall, completed in 1976. Named for Lycoming County.

MONTOUR HALL — Four-story residence hall, completed in 1964. Named for Montour County.

NAVY HALL — Academic building, completed in 1938.

Although designed as a junior high school, it was never used as such. In 1943, it was named Navy Hall in recognition of the Navy's V-12 officer training program and V-5 aviation officer training programs held at the college, 1942-1945.

NELSON FIELDHOUSE — Gymnasium and athletic complex, completed in 1972, on the upper campus. Named for Dr. E. H. Nelson, alumnus, and former director of athletics.

NORTHUMBERLAND HALL — Two-story residence hall, completed in 1960. Named for Northumberland County.

OLD SCIENCE HALL — Academic building, completed in 1906. Science Hall became Old Science Hall when most of the sciences were moved to a newer building in 1960.

REDMAN STADIUM — Football and track stadium, completed in 1974. Named for Robert B. Redman, assistant dean of men and football and baseball coach, 1947-1952.

SCHUYLKILL HALL — Four-story residence hall, completed in 1964. Named for Schuylkill County.

SCRANTON COMMONS — Dining facility, completed in 1970, to accommodate 2,900 students. Named for William W. Scranton, governor from 1963 to 1967.

SIMON HALL — Former laundry building now used by the art department. Named for Walter A. Simon, former professor of art.

SUTLIFF HALL — Academic building, completed in 1960. Named for William Boyd Sutliff, professor of mathematics and first dean of instruction (1921-1937).

WALLER ADMINISTRATION BUILDING — Administrative office building completed in 1972. Named for the Rev. Dr. David J. Waller Jr., principal of the Normal School for 27 years (1877-1890, 1906-1920) and state superintendent of instruction (1890-1893).

CAS sues state

The Pennsylvania Commonwealth Association of Students has sued state officials for allegedly trying to cut off the group's operating funds. Last year, the Board of Governors of the State System of Higher Education discontinued a procedure that allowed CAS to collect a refundable $2 fee from all students, ruling instead that the students would be informed of their right to make voluntary contributions to CAS. Since that decision, CAS's budget has decreased from $125,000 per semester to $3,800 this past spring. CAS believes the procedure was changed because a CAS political-action committee opposed Governor Thornburgh in the 1982 election.

Alumni writers cite Savage as mentor

HUMES

By ANDREW HEINTZELMAN
Student Feature Writer

The Carver Hall bell strikes 9 a.m. Across campus in Bakeless Center for the Humanities, Professor Richard Savage finishes another journalism seminar class, chats with a few students, and returns to his office.

The students, some confused, some disappointed, begin to question their journalistic ability. Many will eventually choose an alternative major and lean toward a different career.

But some students, those who have confidence in themselves and their professor, will become dedicated to a writing career. Their dreams may be to publish poetry, be a freelance writer, or edit a national magazine. And their dreams may be like those of three former BU writing students-writers who no longer have to dream.

Allan D. Maurer '72, a fulltime freelance writer, has been published regularly in Omni, has had bylined work in Reader's Digest, Playboy, Next, and other national magazines. Harry Humes '64, is an English professor at Kutztown University and the editor of a national poetry journal — Yarrow. He has published two volumes of poetry in the past two years, and he has published poems in numerous national journals. Richard Benyo '68, is vice president/executive editor for Runner's World Magazine Company, the editorial director for Skier's World magazine, and author of numerous books.

All three of these writers were once instructed by Savage, and all three now attribute some of their writing skill and success to him.

In a letter to the Alumni Association, Maurer wrote: "I think I can honestly say that I would not be a writer if it were not for the encouragement, guidance, and still motivating admiration for Richard Savage."

Humes calls Savage his "great mentor at Bloom," and he still asks his opinion on poems.

Benyo says he, too, has recognized the importance of Savage's experienced lectures over his 15 years as a writer.

Savage joined BU's English Department in 1960 after spending three years as assistant editor for The Saturday Evening Post in Philadelphia. Prior to his position at the Post, Savage was an English and journalism instructor at the University of Massachusetts for six years. He has also written for various newspapers and journals throughout the United States.

Savage says that students like Benyo, Maurer, and Humes, in the 1960s and early 1970s, were more concerned with self-development than students are now. They were not as concerned with finding a particular job in a particular field, and, therefore, Savage says they developed themselves in a more "solid, diversified way."

And now? "They've done outstanding," says their former professor and longtime friend. "And they've gone much further than their mentor."

Savage has had contact with Benyo, Maurer and Humes since they left BU, but all three have been traveling across the country pursuing their writing careers.

Benyo received his B.A. in English literature in 1968, then was managing editor of the Times-News in Lehigh, Pa., until 1972. From 1969-72, Benyo was also program director of PTVC-TV in Palmerton, Pa.

Meanwhile, Benyo's interest in auto racing was growing, not only as a writer, but as a driver.

"I raced in the Lehigh area for a while," Benyo said, "but it was a real small track, and it got too expensive."

Expensive or not, the experience did pay off. By 1973-74, Benyo was covering the NASCAR circuit. In 1975 he wrote his first book, The Grand National Stars, and followed it up in 1976 with The Book of Richard Petty, and in 1977 he wrote his third book about NASCAR racing, Superspeedway.

The stock car racing coverage Benyo did in the 1970s also led him to his current position as executive editor of Runner's World magazine. Benyo said another racing writer told him of the position at the magazine, and with his background and interest in the subject, Benyo immediately applied and got the position in 1977.

Benyo said his interest in running began after college when a long work week and no other activity caused him to "put on the pounds." To avoid this, Benyo said he began to run and has continued it since.

Obviously, Benyo's running is far from just a hobby now. He has competed in marathons for several years, and he is training for one October 14.

The marathons Benyo competes in are the typical distance, 26 miles, 385 yards; but he does not compete in the really large races anymore because of a bad experience.

"I ran in the New York Marathon once, but it was so congested at the beginning that a couple of us got knocked down and run over. I never even ran the race," Benyo said.

With this experience, Benyo says he has kept to marathons with about 200 competitors.

First-hand experience at marathons, running and physical fitness have geared Benyo to write four books on the subjects. He wrote Return to Running in 1978, The Indoor Exercise Book in 1980, The Advanced Indoor Exercise Book in 1981, and Sexercise in 1982.

Benyo says he is looking forward to the next few years as Runner's World editor, as he expects the interest in the sport to grow as it normally does in years following the Olympics.

Benyo's successful writing career extends back to his years on the college newspaper at Bloomsburg. And one night while swamped with copy, he was able to begin another BU student on the journalistic path. The student's career began quickly: he became copy editor after two minutes in the office. Benyo still considers this former student a "clever character," but he no longer has to show him what to do.

Allan Maurer has gone far beyond the student newspaper. His work has been published in some of the nation's most popular magazines. His writing career began while he was still at BU, working for what was then The Morning Press as a reporter and later as an editor.

When he left Bloomsburg, Maurer began teaching English, but quit five years later. "I decided I'd rather produce stories, media and magazines than teach," he said.

As a teacher, however, Maurer says he never stopped writing, but "just got better at it. After teaching, he began as a reporter for a newspaper in North Carolina. After one year there, he became editor of a trade journal.

John Haney '85, who was Sir Studley in "Once Upon a Mattress," chats with Rev. and Mrs. James Fetterman during the dinner which alumni enjoyed prior to the show in late July.

Medical students praise undergraduate preparation

Pre-med at Bloomsburg University?

Sure. Over the years, a number of Bloomsburg graduates have entered the medical profession, regardless of their undergraduate preparation.

But with the evolution to a multi-purpose university, more and more BU alumni are being accepted at professional schools of medicine, dentistry, osteopathy, pharmacy, veterinary science, optometry and podiatry.

BU currently sends about a dozen students a year to professional schools. About half of them are enrolled in medical schools.

"Our students enjoy an acceptance rate of approximately 85 percent, while the national average is about 35 percent," commented John Fletcher, professor of biology.

Fletcher chairs BU's pre-professional committee, which screens students who are interested in entering the medical profession.

"We pinpoint the competitiveness of students early," he said. "If a pre-med student, for example, is considered to be lacking in an area of study, he will be forewarned.

"By the time a student reaches junior standing and is still in the program, he has about a 90 percent chance of acceptance to medical school."

Fletcher said the committee, which comprises five professors from the biology and chemistry departments, has standards that are more stringent than some medical schools.

"We're harder on students than some admissions offices at medical schools," agreed Lynne Miller, assistant professor of biological and allied health sciences and a three-year committee member.

"If we don't feel students are prepared to go before the committee, they are provided with personal advisement so they can be given a realistic understanding of their chances. There are no surprises."

Berwick physician David Campbell, who received his master's degree in biology at BU, lauds the university's program.

"The program at Bloomsburg is well balanced," said Campbell. "It certainly helped to prepare me well. I graduated in August and was in Temple University School of Medicine within two weeks."

Bloomsburg native Mark Karpinski, a former undergraduate biology major now in his second year at the Bowman Gray School of Medicine at Wake Forest University, agreed.

"Bloomsburg University provided me with the background education that has enabled me to be highly competitive with my classmates from schools across the nation," he said.

Each of three BU students accepted at Hershey Medical Center in 1983 has indicated that the education at BU provided a good background for success.

One of these, Randy Rhodes from Catawissa, has received honors in most of his first-year courses.

"The committee members went out of their way to help and encourage me," commented Dr. Nancy Ramin, a 1977 BU graduate who attended the Pennsylvania College of Podiatric Medicine.

"I found it very competitive at Bloomsburg. The university doesn't get the credit it deserves. It really produces good students. The chemistry department, for example, is outstanding. Bloomsburg taught me how to study, along with the intensity of it. Some other students may have been smarter, but in many instances couldn't handle the pressure as well."

BU's chemistry department is accredited by the American Chemical Society, an honor accorded to about a third of the institutions in the country, according to Dr. Roy Pointer, department chairperson.

"It puts us right up there in good standing with some outstanding schools in the country," Pointer said.

The pre-professional program began materializing in 1970 when former biology professor Stanley Rhodes became a regular advisor to interested students.

Rhodes, now retired, recalls it was hard work, but very gratifying, particularly when BU students competed well with other students from across the country.

'College Sampler' draws full house

A new program for minority high school students, entitled "College Sampler," was conducted at BU in late July and early August.

The program was designed particularly for black Americans with junior class standing and was offered free through the university's School of Extended Programs.

John Abell, assistant dean of extended programs, said the Sampler was designed to benefit many college-bound Black students who know little about college life.

Nearly 70 students who qualify for college admission participated in the program.

Writers

All along Maurer said he was taking an interest in writing science fiction as a freelancer. During his time on the newspaper and the trade journal, Maurer said he "cranked out science fiction and short science stories."

His first great success with science fiction writing was several years later. "Omni came along in 1979 and we liked each other immediately," Maurer said. "Omni bought the first three stories Maurer sent, and he has been publishing regularly in the magazine ever since."

Maurer's freelancing career has centered mostly around science, especially "technology with a twist," he said. He has, in fact, written two books dealing with science: Lasers, Lightwave of the Future and Omni's Continuum, both in 1982.

His freelancing has involved other subjects, however, and his current position as editor of Carolina Business and Finance reflects his extensive knowledge of the business world.

Early in his freelance writing career, Maurer wrote reports on doing business in China and the Mideast for the Perkinson Co., and he also worked for Interstate Securities making stock recommendations. This experience was instrumental in helping him gain his current position, Maurer said.

Maurer has not stopped producing science fiction, however, and he continues to publish them in Playboy, Next, Future Life, Starlog, Psychic Dimensions, and many other popular magazines.

So for Maurer it's science fiction, and for Benyo it's marathons; but for the third alumni writer, it's back to nature. After years of writing poetry, Harry Humes has realized that his poems seem to be "embedded in nature."

His published volumes of poetry include Winter Weeds and Robbing the Pillars. A third, A Weather of Surprises, is still in manuscript.

Winter Weeds, a volume of 41 poems, won the 1983 Devins Award for Poetry, an annual award presented by the University of Missouri Press.

Humes spent two years in the writing program at the University of North Carolina at Greensboro after leaving Bloomsburg. In 1968, he went to Kutztown and has been at the university since.

Besides working with Yarrow, Humes continues to publish poetry in many national publications. His poems have appeared in journals such as The Virginia Quarterly, Yankee, Missouri Review, and others that, according to Savage, poets look to for acceptance of their work.

Several poems in Humes' Winter Weeds reveal his interest, not just with nature, but with fishing in particular.

Since Humes lives relatively close to Bloomsburg, says Savage, the two of them get together for several angling outings each summer.

"He comes up to fish at least twice a summer," according to Savage, who credits Humes with teaching him a lot about the sport.

But Humes' contacts with Savage aren't always recreational. Humes says he still asks Savage his opinions on poems "about which I feel something is wrong but cannot put my finger on."

For the last several years, Humes says he has been on "rolls" with his poetry writing because he is becoming more familiar with his subject. He has written 15 new poems, one-third of another book, and has had one of these, a 250 line work, already accepted by a magazine, he said.

Humes says that a lack of time sometimes hampers his writing. This summer, however, he was awarded a Fellowship in Literature by the Pennsylvania Council of the Arts, one of several grants given each year to Pennsylvania artists. Humes said the fellowship will mean several months off to write poetry and enjoy the outdoors.

As their careers go on, and Humes continues to write poetry, Benyo continues with his duties at Runner's World, and Maurer keeps busy with his editorial positions and freelancing, these alumni are establishing themselves as well-known professional writers. Their works are being published in magazines, journals and other publications across the nation.

But these three writers have not forgotten the beginnings of their careers and the person who inspired them. In Humes' Winter Weeds, Maurer's Lasers, and Benyo's Superspeedway, the dedication paragraphs sincerely include the name of Richard Savage.

News from the departments

Anthropology/Philosophy

Elise A. Brenner has joined the department as an assistant professor.

She received a B.A. degree in anthropology at Boston University in 1977; a B.H.L. in Hebrew Letters at Hebrew College, Brookline, Mass., in 1977; and an M.A. and Ph.D. in anthropology from the University of Massachusetts in Amherst in 1979 and 1984 respectively.

She was an archaeological consultant at Envirosphere Company in New York City.

Art

An exhibition of recent paintings by Kenneth Wilson can be seen in the Haas Gallery of Art until October 12.

Wilson teaches painting, drawing, and art gallery. He has been represented in several national exhibitions and exhibits regularly in juried shows. He and his wife, Dorothy, who also paints, live in Stillwater.

The department will offer a course in watercolor painting through the Consortium of International Education next summer. Participants will stay at the University of Pavia, and the surrounding area of the Lombard region will serve as subject for painting.

Students will use watercolor as a means of gaining knowledge of the medium as well as understanding the ambiance of Northern Italy. The charm of the villages, the quiet beauty of the landscape, and a rich artistic heritage make this an ideal setting for painters, both beginning and advanced.

Participants may take this three-credit course in either undergraduate or graduate credits. Additional side trips are planned to the Brera Palace in Milan, Center of the Lombard School of Painting, the Municipal Museum in Cremona, and the Palazzo Picture Gallery in Genoa. Optional trips to Siena, Florence, Volterra and Ravenna may be arranged.

The instructor will be Kenneth Wilson, who teaches all levels of painting at BU and uses watercolor extensively in his painting. He has been to Europe several times as co-teacher of the course, "Art and Culture of France." In 1982 he received a released time grant for study of the construction of panel paintings in Siena and Florence.

For more information, contact Professor Wilson.

Bloomsburg University's permanent art collection has acquired a significant new piece of sculpture by Hava Mehutan, noted contemporary Israeli artist.

The sculptural work, which weighs over 100 pounds, is created from carved and polished black basalt together with a hammered lead coverlet. The piece, entitled "Evidence II," was included in a traveling exhibition based on the artist's Impressions of the Lackawanna Valley and its once flourishing coal industry. The exhibition originated in Washington, D.C., under the auspices of the Department of State and then traveled to selected art museums and galleries in the Eastern United States during its two-year tour.

When the exhibition was shown at Bloomsburg University in 1981, it was decided to make this purchase, and funding was received from a variety of sources, including the class of 1915; the Student Art Association; the Community Arts Council (which had also sponsored the month-long exhibition of Ms. Mehutan's work in 1982); the university's Art Gallery Class as part of their focus on the arts of the anthracite region; the university's Office of Administration; the Roberts' Art Foundation; and assistance from the Dean of the College of Arts and Sciences.

Born in Philadelphia, Mehutan has been a resident of Beersheba, Israel, since 1946. Her work has been exhibited internationally in such prestigious exhibitions as the Musée d'Art Moderne, Paris; the VIII Biennial de Sao Paulo, Brazil; the Haifa Museum of Modern Art; and the Museum of Art in Tel-Aviv, to name a few. She has held numerous one-woman shows of her work in both American and Israel and has completed several significant commissions of outdoor work.

At present, examples of her environmental sculpture are on view at the Ben Gurion University of the Negev.

BU's new acquisition will be placed on permanent display, along with other works of art acquired over the years, in specially designed display cabinets located in the art gallery in the Haas Center for the Arts.

NEW AT BU — New appointments for the 1984-1985 academic year include (front, from left) Christine Sperling, art; Michael Kajen, computer and information systems; Gladys Ancrum, nursing; Elise Brenner, philosophy and anthropology; Marilyn Boogaard, nursing; Paul Quick Jr., mathematics and computer science; (second row) Jessie McCoy, director of university relations; Artemus Flagg, admissions counselor; John Riley Jr., mathematics and computer science; Sidney McCully, English; Glenn Sadler, English; Beverly Larson, curriculum materials center coordinator; and Gilbert Darbouze, languages and cultures.

Percival R. Roberts III has three of his recent "Incantations," a poetic form devised specifically to record impressions of his native American ancestry, included in the Spring 1984 issue of "St. Andrews Review," a twice-yearly magazine of the arts and humanities.

In addition, the St. Andrews Press issued Roberts' "Incantation IV" ("Red Ghosts Riding") as a limited edition broadside on the occasion of the Tenth Annual Writers' Award Celebration held at St. Andrews College in Laurinburg, N.C., in April.

These "Incantations," plus a suite included in the Spring 1984 issue of "Carver," "Blackwillow," "Voices International," and "Bitterroot" magazines were all composed as part of a creative arts project grant awarded by BU.

Christine M. Sperling has joined the department as an assistant professor.

She received B.A. and M.A. degrees in art history at the University of Oregon, Eugene, in 1975 and 1977 respectively; and is currently enrolled in a doctoral program in art history at Brown University.

She was teaching assistant of impressionism and post-impressionism in the art department at Brown.

Dr. Barbara Strohmman has been granted a sabbatical leave for the 1985-1986 academic year at half pay.

Bloomsburg University recently received $4,500 from the Pennsylvania Council on the Arts. BU's Community Arts Council received $4,000, and the university's art department received $500.

An affiliate of the American Association for the Advancement of Science, the nationally known society is designed to promote scholarship, to further the dissemination of biological knowledge and to encourage research. The new Rho Chi Chapter will be one of many such chapters in the United States and Puerto Rico.

The installation of Rho Chi Chapter of Beta Beta Beta and the initiation of charter members took place in August. Dr. Robert Fisher, district director, and Linda Schoffstall, former president of the department's Biology Club, presided at the ceremony.

"Much of the credit for the formalization of this chapter should actually go to the department's enthusiastic biology club," notes Dr. Lynne Miller, faculty advisor to both organizations.

"The club members raised the application fee, supervised the on-site evaluation process and did much of the paperwork."

Paul H. Quick Sr. has joined the department as an assistant professor.

He received a B.S. degree in biology education at Bloomsburg University in 1967; an M.S. degree in biology education at Potsdam College of SUNY in 1970; and has earned 48 credits beyond the master's degree at St. Lawrence College and Potsdam College.

He was professor of biology at Canton Agricultural and Technical College of SUNY.

Dr. Joseph Vaughn recently presented a demonstration/workshop at BU on various methods and uses of biofeedback to a community group interested in this method of stress management.

Biology/Allied Health

The department was recently approved for a chapter of Beta Beta Beta Biological Honor Society.

Business communications, office automation, and records management are the topics of three workshops offered this fall by the department and the Penn State Center for Vocational Professional Development. Open to both business people and teachers, these meetings will focus on practical problem solving.

BUSINESS COMMUNICATIONS WORKSHOP, September 26, Dr. Nancy Dittman, coordinator. "What's New in Letters and Memos" and "Improving Your Writing Skills" are two of the topics included in the morning session of this workshop, which will focus on the needs of business writers. The problems involved in training office staff and teaching solutions will be topics in the afternoon session.

Participants may sign up for one or both sessions. One graduate credit hour may be earned by those attending both sessions.

OFFICE AUTOMATION WORKSHOP, October 25, Dr. Margaret Long, coordinator. This seminar, conducted by a group of professionals in the field of office automation, addresses the concepts of office automation through determining the needs of the organization, the integrated office, information management and finally the key factor in automation — motivation.

Topics such as work measurement, training methods and evaluation procedures will be covered. Participants will have an opportunity to view some of the latest features in office technology and participate in round-table discussions on various topics of office automation.

RECORDS MANAGEMENT, November 14, Dr. Ellen Clemens, coordinator. Records management is the planning and controlling of records from the time of their creation until their final disposition. This workshop is designed to provide in-service and pre-service business teachers and general office personnel with information on the planning and controlling of records from the time of their creation until their final disposition.

Topics will include the role and tasks of record managers, records systems, maintenance, trends and technologies, and professional opportunities.

For more information, contact Dr. John Olivo or the workshop coordinator.

"Microcomputers in Action was the name of a workshop sponsored by the Business Education and Office Administration Department on June 14-16 at the Hilton/Lackawanna Station in Scranton. Since the workshop featured hands-on experience on several types of microcomputers, participants were able to try out many software packages appropriate for use in teaching business courses in high schools and post-secondary institutions. Approximately 60 teachers who participated also heard presentations on the management of microcomputer classrooms, selection of equipment and new directions for business education programs.

Dr. Nancy Dittman recently published a book review of "Leadership Communication," by Ernest L. Stech, in "The Journal of Business Communication," Volume 21, Number 2, Spring 1984.

In April, four business educators were initiated into the Gamma Xi Chapter of Delta Pi Epsilon, the national honorary professional graduate society in business education. The new members are Bruce E. Boncal, Jersey Shore, a teacher at Jersey Shore Area Senior High School; Valerie J. Haydock, Williamsport, an instructor at Williamsport Area Community College; Angelica G Sacco, Pottstown, a teacher at Owen J. Roberts High School; and Carmelita Truitt, Hazleton, a graduate assistant in the Business Education and Office Administration Department at BU.

The speaker for the spring meeting was Bettie Hampton Ellis, chairperson and assistant professor, Office Administration Department, Brandywine College of Widener University, Wilmington, Delaware. Her presentation was entitled, "Word Processing Methodology—Word Processing in the Electronic Office—Instructional Impact."

At the National Business Education Convention held in Chicago in April, the Gamma Xi Chapter was recognized for 100 percent membership renewal and received a special recognition certificate for 1983.

New membership eligibility requirements were modified by the DPE National Council Representatives: Option 1 — a bachelor's degree, completion of eight semester hours of graduate work in business education with a B or better average; Option 2 — a master's degree and three years of successful experience in the teaching, supervision, or administration of business-related subjects; Option 3 — a bachelor's degree in business education, completion of eight semester hours of graduate work in any related business discipline, and/or three years of successful teaching, supervision or administration of business-related subjects or three years of successful business work experience.

Dr. Ellen M. Clemens '62, advisor, invites interested business educators and other professionals working in education and business to apply for membership in Gamma Xi Chapter. Chartered in October 1981, the chapter has 46 members.

Dr. Emory Rarig Jr., dean of the College of Business, has been granted a sabbatical leave for the spring semester of the 1984-1985 academic year.

The Alpha Delta Chapter, Pi Omega Pi, the National Business Teacher Education Honor Society, will observe its 50th anniversary in May 1985. Dr. Emory W. Rarig Jr., advisor, asks past members and officers to complete the attached form so that invitations will be received for the anniversary activities, which are tentatively planned for the Alumni Weekend in June 1985.

Pi Omega Pi was organized on June 13, 1933, when Alpha Chapter held the first initiation service at Northeast Missouri State Teachers College for teachers of business subjects. There are currently 151 chapters of Pi Omega Pi. BU's Alpha Delta Chapter was chartered on May 13, 1935, and is the oldest honorary society on campus. Its membership totals 865 throughout its 50-year history.

The Alpha Delta Chapter officers for Fall 1984 are Ruth Davis, president; Donna Malloy, vice president; Kim Kuronya, secretary; and Janet Cole, treasurer. Dr. Rarig has served for 17 years as advisor, along with Dr. Ellen Lensing, who retired from the Department of Business Education and Office Administration in May 1982.

Please return the following form to Dr. Emory W. Rarig Jr., Dean, College of Business, 105 Waller Administration Building, Bloomsburg University, Bloomsburg, Pa. 17815, as soon as possible, since planning will be done during the Fall 1984 semester.

Communication Studies

Dr. Ralph Smiley has been granted a sabbatical leave for the spring semester of the 1985-1986 academic year.

The Bloomsburg Players presented "Little Foxes" in June and "Once Upon a Mattress" in July. A number of alumni enjoyed both productions.

Computer Info Science

Dr. Charles Hoppel was among engineers, managers, and educators who recently completed a three-day workshop at Lehigh University, Bethlehem, on computer-integrated manufacturing.

Michael J. Kagen has joined the department as an assistant professor.

He received a B.S. degree in physics at Worcester Polytechnic Institute in Worcester, Mass., in 1972, and an M.S. degree in computer and information science at the University of Massachusetts, Amherst, in 1981.

He was a database analyst at the University of Massachusetts, Amherst.

Curriculum Materials

Beverly H. Larson has joined the faculty as an assistant professor serving as coordinator of the Curriculum Materials Center.

She received a B.S. degree in biology at Central Michigan University, Mt. Pleasant, in 1954; and an M.S. Ed. in curriculum and supervision at Northern Illinois University, DeKalb, in 1968.

She was curriculum materials specialist at Keystone Area Education Agency, Elkader, Iowa.

Economics

George B.N. Ayithey has joined the department as an assistant professor.

He received a B.S. in economics from University of Ghana, Legon, Ghana in 1969; an M.A. in economics from University of Western Ontario, London, Ontario, in 1970; and a Ph.D. in economics from University of Manitoba, Winnipeg, Manitoba, Canada, in 1981.

He was assistant professor of economics at Wayne State College in Nebraska.

Dr. Robert MacMurray has been granted a sabbatical leave for the 1985-1986 academic year at half pay.

English

Glenn E. Sadler has joined the department as an assistant professor.

He received an A.B. degree in English at Wheaton College in 1958; an M.A. in English at University of California at Los Angeles in 1960; and a Ph.D. in English at the University of Aberdeen, Scotland, in 1967.

He was visiting lecturer at the University of California, San Diego.

Sidney M. McCully has joined the faculty as an assistant professor.

He received a B.A. degree in English at Hendrix College, Conway, Arizona, in 1971; an M.A. degree in English at Western Illinois University, Macomb, in 1973; and a Ph.D. in English at the University of Iowa, Iowa City, in 1978.

He was assistant professor of English at North Carolina Wesleyan College, Rocky Mount, N.C.

A Kenneth Davis has joined the department as a part-time instructor.

He received a B.A. degree in English at Elizabethtown College in 1973 and an M.Ed. in English at Millersville State College in 1978.

He was instructor of English (adjunct faculty) at Harrisburg Area Community College.

Dr. Lawrence Fuller has been granted a sabbatical leave for the 1985-1986 academic year at half pay.

Geography/Earth Science

Dr. Lee Hopple has been granted sabbatical leaves for the summers of 1985 and 1986.

Mark Hornberger has been granted a sabbatical leave for the spring semester of the 1985-1986 academic year.

Health Ed./Phys. Ed.

Stephen C. Goodwin has been named instructor of physical education and head soccer coach. He will also be the assistant women's basketball coach.

A 1979 graduate of East Stroudsburg University, he was a varsity letter-winner in soccer for three years. He was also active in intramural sports, Phi Epsilon Kappa (Honorary Physical Education Fraternity), Kappa Delta Pi (Honorary Educational Fraternity) and the Varsity "S" Club. The West Chester native graduated cum laude with a B.S. degree in health and physical education. He earned his master's degree at Ohio University.

He most recently was a teacher and coach at The Swarthmore School.

Dr. Howard Macauley, dean of the College of Professional Studies, talks with Dr. Gladys Ancrum, the coordinator of the new master of nursing degree program at BU, and Nancy Onuschak, chairperson of the nursing department, about the progress and potential of the MSN program.

History

Dr. Hans Gunther has been granted a sabbatical leave for the 1985-1986 academic year at half pay.

Languages/Cultures

Gilbert Darbouze has joined the department as an assistant professor.

He received a B.A. and M.A. in French and Spanish at City College of New York in 1974 and 1975 respectively; and a Ph.D. in French and Spanish at Graduate School and University Center, CUNY, in 1980.

He was assistant professor of languages at Lafayette College in Easton.

Marketing/Management

The BU affiliate of the American Society for Personnel Administration, an organization for personnel managers, has been designated a Merit Award Student Chapter.

The chapter was one of 23 chosen from more than 200 student chapters on the basis of growth, meetings and programs, and for its participation in seminars, workshops, clinics and ASPA district and regional activities.

Math/Computer Science

Antionette Carroll has joined the department as an instructor.

She received a B.S. degree in mathematics at Aquinas College, Grand Rapids, Michigan, in 1964, and an M.A.T.M. in the teaching of mathematics at University of Detroit in 1970.

She was instructor of mathematics at Olive-Harvey College, Chicago, Illinois.

Timothy B. Carroll has joined the department as an associate professor.

He received a B.S. degree in mathematics at the University of Michigan, Ann Arbor, in 1966; an M.A. and Ph.D. in mathematics at Western Michigan University, Kalamazoo, in 1969 and 1973 respectively.

He was associate professor of mathematics at Chicago State University.

Dr. Charles Brennan has been granted a sabbatical leave for the spring semester of the 1985-1986 academic year.

Dr. Paul Cochrane has been granted a sabbatical leave for the spring semester of the 1985-1986 academic year.

Dr. June Trudnak has been granted a sabbatical leave for the spring semester of the 1985-1986 academic year.

John H. Riley Jr. has joined the department as an associate professor.

He received a B.A. degree in mathematics at Lehigh University in 1973; an M.S. and Ph.D. in mathematics at the University of Connecticut, Storrs, in 1975 and 1980 respectively.

He was associate professor of mathematics at Ohio Northern University, Ada, Ohio.

Professor Pat Boyne and her sister, Alice, were among the 3,652 tap dancers who made Guinness Book of World Records history in August. It was the largest crowd of tap dancers ever to perform in the same place at the same time. The happening was in front of Macy's in New York City. Both sisters received red and white souvenir T-shirts.

Dr. JoAnne Growney, who postponed her sabbatical leave for the 1983-1984 academic year to accept the appointment as acting provost and vice president for academic affairs, is on sabbatical leave during the 1984-1985 academic year at half pay.

Music

Terry Oxley, the new director of bands at BU, is native of Wisconsin, where he taught high school instrumental music for the past 12 years. He has a B.M.E. degree from the University of Wisconsin-Eau Claire and an M.M.E. degree from the University of Wisconsin-Stevens Point.

He is currently a candidate for the Doctor of Arts degree in wind conducting at the University of Northern Colorado. In addition to his band duties this fall, he will teach woodwind applied and sight-singing. He is looking forward to active alumni support in building the band tradition at BU.

Nursing

Marilyn A. Boogaard has joined the department as an instructor.

She received a diploma from the Hospital School of Nursing at the University of Pennsylvania in 1972; a B.S. in nursing from Syracuse University in 1975; and an M.S.N. in community health nursing from the University of Rochester School of Nursing in 1982.

She was director of community health at Indian Health Service, United States Public Health Service, in Browning, Montana.

Gloria Jean Schechterly has joined the department as an instructor.

She received a diploma from the Geisinger Medical Center School of Nursing in 1962; a B.S.N. in nursing education at Wilkes College in 1970; and an M.S. in nursing at Penn State University in 1983.

She was instructor of medical-surgical nursing at Geisinger Medical Center.

Lucille Gambardella is on leave without pay during the 1984-1985 academic year.

Gladys Ancrum has been appointed coordinator of the master's program in nursing, which was instituted recently at BU.

Before coming to Bloomsburg, Dr. Ancrum served as an associate professor of Community Health Nursing at the University of Michigan.

She earned her bachelor of science degree in nursing and her master of arts degree in public health nursing at Columbia University. She also holds a master's degree and doctorate in public health from the University of California.

The MSN program at the university has two areas of study: psychiatric/mental health nursing and community health nursing. Both will prepare graduates to be clinical specialists in the advanced practice of professional nursing.

The psychiatric/mental health nursing program will prepare graduates to assume quality leadership roles as clinical nurse specialists in the promotion and improvement of mental health and the treatment of mental illness in a variety of mental health care.

The community health nursing program focuses on specialized experience in working with a variety of health-related issues. The program addresses problems common to rural populations and specific populations at risk, and it studies ways to maximize their health and use of health-care resources.

Psychology

Dr. Steven L. Cohen co-authored a paper recently presented at the First International Conference on Neuronal Cholecystokinin in Brussels, Belgium. The paper, "CCK in the Pathophysiology and Treatment of Neuropsychiatric Disease," deals with the possible relationship between cholecystokinin and Parkinson's disease, Huntington's chorea, Alzheimer's disease, and schizophrenia.

An abstract of a paper co-authored by Dr. Cohen at the 14th Colloquium Internationale, Neuropsychopharmacologicum Congress in Florence, Italy, has been published in "Clinical Neuropharmacology" (Volume 7, Raven Press).

Sociology/Soc. Welfare

Dr. Christopher Armstrong is on leave without pay during the 1984-1985 academic year.

Word has been received that Jane J. Plumpis, former faculty member and chairperson of the Department of Sociology/Social Welfare, died recently at age 62.

Miss Plumpis was a member of the faculty from 1967 to 1979, when she retired for health-related reasons.

Members of the department who knew her have made a contribution to the American Diabetes Association in her memory.

Dr. James Huber has been granted a sabbatical leave for the spring semester of the 1985-1986 academic year.

Special Education

Catherine Constable is on leave without pay during the 1984-1985 academic year.

Dr. Ann Lee has been granted sabbatical leaves for the summers of 1985 and 1986.

The third annual meeting of the Pennsylvania Association of College Educators of the Hearing Impaired was held on campus recently.

Attending were faculty from all teacher education programs in hearing impairment in Pennsylvania: Indiana University, The Pennsylvania State University, and the University of Pittsburgh. BU was represented by Professors Gerald W. Powers, Samuel B. Slike, and Judith M. Hirshfeld, who chaired the meeting.

The agenda consisted of issues such as proposed changes in state teacher-certification requirements, proposed changes in national certification by the Council on Education of the Deaf, and impending Pennsylvania licensure of teachers of the hearing impaired.

Julia Weitz has been granted a sabbatical leave for the 1985-1986 academic year at half pay.

Dr. John McLaughlin has been granted a sabbatical leave for the fall semester of the 1985-1986 academic year.

Dr. Joseph Youshock has been granted a sabbatical leave for the fall semester of the 1985-1986 academic year.

BU's teacher program for the preparation and certification on education of the deaf has been reviewed by a committee of the National Council on Education of the Deaf, and it has been granted approval status for a five-year period ending July 31, 1989.

Ralph Hoag, committee chairman from the University of Arizona, noted, "We are very pleased to recognize and acknowledge the continuing operation of an outstanding program for the preparation of teachers in our field at Bloomsburg University."

The program includes the preparation of teachers of hearing impaired children and early childhood, elementary, secondary and multi-handicapped levels. Recognition of the approval will be included in the publication of CED-approved programs distributed from the national office of the council.

Dr. Andrew Karpinski serves as chairperson of the Department of Communication Disorders and Special Education. Dr. Gerald Powers, assistant chairperson, has been directly associated with BU's program since 1971.

Dr. John M. McLaughlin and his wife, Mary Anne, participated in the senior games held at Shippensburg University in August. Professor McLaughlin finished first in racquetball, and Mrs. McLaughlin took first in the 2400 meter walk. Both received gold medals. Mrs. McLaughlin also won two silver medals in the five kilometer run and the 100 meter dash. The games were sponsored by the Departments of Aging, Health and Community Affairs.

Dr. Mary Hill has been granted a sabbatical leave for the 1985-1986 academic year at half pay.

System okays tuition waivers

In response to the court order which requires Pennsylvania to increase enrollment of minority students in the 14 state-owned universities by 39.4% in the next four years, the State System of Higher Education's Board of Governors has authorized each institution to waive tuition payments for 1% of its full-time undergraduates.

Students learn to decipher codes

By KATHLEEN PARKER
Student Feature Writer

During World War II, secret plans and machinery were kept in code so that if the enemy obtained them, they wouldn't understand them.

However, a group of cryptologists during the war gathered in England, the United States and Germany to decipher all the codes and ciphers.

Today, information such as this is kept in computers, but that does not guarantee its safety. Secret codes can be broken, and one aspect of "Coding and Signal Processing," a new math course at Bloomsburg University, is to teach students how to break and decipher codes.

The course, designed by math professor Dr. Paul Hartung, looks at codes and ciphers with a mathematical point-of-view.

Two tools used in learning techniques of breaking and deciphering codes are elementary number theory, and the Fourier Transform. Digital processing of signals and digital filters using the Fortran computer language are used in Signal Processing. Required work for the class includes two computer programs and a project in the coding field.

For the past five years, "Coding and Signal Processing" has been taught as a special topic in mathematics.

"Most new courses start out as special topics, so that professors have a chance to finalize course objectives and take care of necessary paperwork," says Hartung. "It then takes two years before it can become a course, having to go through all the necessary channels."

The course is divided up into two parts. During the first half of the course, Hartung gives students background in the Fourier Transform and general coding methods in preparation for the students' research projects.

"Once this presentation is complete, I take the class to the Bucknell University library to examine various articles in electrical engineering journals, and we discuss coding and signal processing books," says Hartung.

During this time Hartung also discusses tentative research projects with the students individually.

"By the time the class leaves the library, most students will have several ideas for research projects."

To make sure students are heading in a definite direction in their research, Hartung requires them to give a preliminary talk on their topic, and meets with them often to discuss their progress.

"I hold these meetings to make sure that the students maintain a clear-cut purpose in their project, and caution them against topics which might prove too trivial or too difficult," Hartung says.

"Occasionally these meetings provide the opportunity to suggest variations on the chosen topic which might lead to more interesting lines of investigation."

"This project is worth one-third of their grade and I base their grade upon the difficulty of the subject, the originality of the topic, and the professionalism of their presentation."

Projects of the past have included an alphabet scrambling machine made from pinball parts, Mersenne Primes and the Cray Computer, double error correcting codes, and a representation of large primes.

"Three of these past projects have been National Math Society winners, two winning first place, and one winning second place," Hartung says. "Another student presented a paper at the Conference on Combinations and Computers in 1976."

"Coding and Signal Processing" is offered fall semesters to junior and senior math majors who have taken Analysis II and Algorithmic Processes. This past semester, 11 students took the course, an average from past years.

"I don't want the class really large," says Hartung. "With the individual presentations and the projects, I wouldn't have enough time that is needed to devote to each student."

"The type of work done in class is typical of what is done in Bell Labs, Jet Propulsion, and IBM," he says.

"With the rapidly growing technology of computers, 'Coding and Signal Processing' is one way students can better prepare themselves for the real world," says Hartung.

Hartung has been teaching at Bloomsburg since 1968. He earned his bachelor of arts degree from Montclair (New Jersey) State College and his master's from the University of Colorado. In 1971, he was awarded his doctorate in mathematics from Penn State.

Brain stem machine a big plus

By CHRISTINA B. MANNION
Student Feature Writer

Eight Bloomsburg University students who are pursuing their master's degrees in audiology now have an advantage over many students — they have access to a $32,000 brain stem machine.

"Using that equipment to train these students is a hot item in the field of audiology today," says Dr. G. Donald Miller Jr., associate professor of audiology. "Potential employers want employees to know how to test with the machine and that makes our students more employable; they do well in the marketplace."

This piece of equipment is actually known as an auditory brain stem evoke response test unit, and is used to evaluate hearing impairments through threshold testing.

It also detects potential acoustic tumors by using the site of lesion test. Some symptoms of this disorder are unilateral hearing loss, dizziness, headaches, sensations or numbness in different sides of the body, or ringing in the ears, Miller says.

The patients who are tested are sometimes students from the college who do not have any problems.

They are used to help the audiology students learn the techniques of operating the machine effectively, which is the main purpose of the clinic.

"We don't provide a tremendous amount of service to patients because we are mainly a training service,"

Miller says. "We won't turn anyone away, and local physicians have referred patients to us here. We simply test them free of charge and give them the information needed."

The tester is in an adjacent room, separated by a glass window, so they can watch the patient respond and, at the same time, monitor the responses of the machine.

What actually happens when they are tested is first, the patient relaxes in a chair, wearing five tiny electrodes and earphones. Then, clicks are delivered through the earphones which normally cause certain kinds of electrical activity.

That activity is computer-averaged and should give a typical wave form. The students are taught how to administer these tests and how to interpret the results.

Miller also does brain stem evaluations at Wilkes-Barre General Hospital, two or three Fridays out of each month.

"I bring a graduate student with me and when they are capable," Miller says, "I let them administer the tests and I watch, but it is closely supervised."

The $32,000 for the machine came from the capital budget. Requests came from all over campus and the committee put them in order of priority.

"Luckily, we received the machine in January 1983, eight months after we requested it," Miller says.

Miller got the idea for the machine after hosting a workshop on brain stem testing last April.

"Dr. Richard Angelo, clinic director and faculty member, and I got interested in the whole idea right away and looked into it and found a way to budget it," Miller explained.

Miller came to Bloomsburg in 1970. He received his undergraduate degree from I.U.P. in speech and hearing, and his master's and doctorate degrees from Temple University.

He lives in Bloomsburg with his wife and two children. His daughter, Krista, is a freshman at B.U. Miller has been the advisor, director and producer of the Image group for seven years.

Puhl resumes coaching post

Former men's track and field and cross country coach Ron Puhl resumes those duties this fall at BU in addition to taking charge of the same sports in the women's program.

Puhl's assignments were announced by athletic director Roger Sanders.

A member of the BU athletic staff since 1966, Puhl built a record of 119-27 during his ten years (1966-76) as track and field coach.

He worked with numerous Pennsylvania Conference champions and coached several All-Americans. His team finished second in the conference in 1972 and third in both 1971 and 1975. The last two seasons he served as head coach, Puhl's charges racked up records of 16-1 and 13-1 respectively.

The Pottstown native also was BU's men's cross country coach in 1975 and led the Huskies to an 8-3 mark. From 1976-79, Puhl was Bloomsburg's head football coach, posting a record of 14-24. During that stint, All-American Mike Morucci, who became the school's all-time leading rusher (3,536 yards) played for him.

"When I got out of coaching several years ago, I thought I was done forever, but it was refreshing and encouraging to have Roger and others show enough faith in me to ask if I would rejoin the staff," Puhl says. "I'm hyped up about this chance. The school has made a commitment to having a solid athletic program, and I want our programs to be as good as they can be."

Puhl replaces Carl Hinkle, who has been in charge of Bloomsburg's men's programs, and Dick Daymont, the women's coach in both sports. Hinkle will remain as a member of the physical education staff while Daymont has left school to accept a position at Macalester (Minn.) College.

"We're still in the process of finalizing my staff and looking forward to getting at least three more people involved in the program," Puhl comments.

"We're going to try to get people in different areas of expertise to help all aspects of the programs. All four areas have always had some outstanding individuals, but we want a good standing in the conference and solid team performance. Those are our goals."

The new coach plans some official indoor involvement in the spring to help all the athletes maintain their conditioning and says he feels the programs can help other sports on the campus.

"Running is the base for all sports, and I'm hoping for crossover so our programs can help the others and vice-versa."

The Huskies opened their men's and women's cross country campaigns on September 8.

Hess award goes to 'Shep'

Frank Sheptock, a junior inside linebacker from Kulpmont, is the first recipient of the William J. Hess Sr. Memorial Scholarship.

The $500 football scholarship was provided by William J.

Hess Jr. as a memorial to his father, who had a life-long interest in youth and athletics. Mr. Hess also provided an additional $1,000 for the wrestling and basketball programs.

Sheptock has been named to the All-Pennsylvania Conference Eastern Division First Team in both seasons and he led the team in tackles both years. In 1983 he was named to the Associated Press Little All-American First Team, the ECAC All-Star Team, and the ECAC Weekly Honor Roll five times.

He was named the BU Underclass Athlete of the Year for the 1983-1984 season and was also named Pennsylvania Conference Eastern Division Player of the Week.

This is Sheptock's second year as team captain.

GRID LUNCHEON — A new event during football season this year is the Husky Club luncheon on each Monday after a game. Guests are the first lunch were (seated) Scott Bennett, from the Bloomsburg High School football team; Frank Sheptock and Mike Jupina, BU players; (standing) Tom Lynn, head coach at BHS; Jim Hollister, BU sports information director, and George Landis, BU head coach.

The A.D.'s Corner

As I sit down to write the column for this issue of The Quarterly, I am predicting a banner year for the Huskies. Realizing the difficult challenge of even matching last year's results, I am confident that you—the Alumni and boosters—will continue to rise to the occasion, just as I know the coaches and athletes will do. It has only been through your donations to the scholarship program that we have been able to attract many athletes who were also recruited by other scholarship schools.

There have been some very positive changes in the department. Ron Puhl has been appointed head coach of men and women's cross country and track and field.

Steve Goodwin is the new head soccer coach, replacing Dennis Grace, who accepted a coaching position at Notre Dame. Steve will also serve as the assistant women's basketball coach.

SANDERS

BU to host LHU

Bloomsburg University will host Kutztown University in the Homecoming Football game on Saturday, October 27.

It was incorrectly stated in the Homecoming brochure that the game would be with Lock Haven University. BU beat Lock Haven, 23-0, on September 15, after narrowly losing to Shippensburg, 17-11, in its opener on September 8.

Babb to coach baseball team

John Babb, head baseball coach at Bloomsburg High School since 1956, has been selected to take over the program at BU. He replaces Dr. Stephen Bresett, who relinquished the helm after four seasons in which he compiled a 38-50 record.

Steve Parlante, a graduate student, will serve as the Huskies' new assistant coach for the upcoming year.

Carl Hinkle assumes the duties of men's intramural director of one of the most successful and active programs in the university system.

After serving as assistant baseball coach last year, John Babb will take over as head coach.

I am confident these changes will prove to have a positive effect on the total athletic program.

In the last edition of The Quarterly, I indicated the Husky Club will sponsor Monday luncheons following each football game. The first luncheon proved to be a tremendous success with nearly 70 people in attendance.

I encourage you to visit campus to see one of our teams in action, or catch them on the road. I'm sure your will not be disappointed.

In November we are planning a phonathon and will be contacting former athletes who are not members of the Husky Club.

If you are not a member of the club, I encourage you to become an active member so that we may continue to attract such fine quality student-athletes.

National honors for publications

Three publications produced by the Office of Sports Information at BU have been cited for excellence by the College Sports Information Directors of America (CoSIDA).

The school's men's tennis media guide was chosen as the nation's second best among Division "B" schools, which includes all NCAA Division II and NAIA Division I institutions. Hampton (Va.) Institute won the top award in the category.

BU was also honored for its 1983-84 wrestling brochure which placed third in the country among Division "A" schools, a category that included all NCAA Division I entrants. Northern Iowa grabbed top honors while Iowa State was second.

Sports Information Director Jim Hollister '78, who produced the guides, was presented the Citations for Excellence by Bob Bradley of Clemson University at the annual CoSIDA Convention held in June at the Marriott Pavilion in St. Louis, Missouri.

The office also received an award for its work on the Pennsylvania State Athletic Conference (PSAC) basketball media guide for the past season. The booklet was judged as best in the nation among NCAA Division II and NAIA conferences. Jim serves as basketball information director for the PSAC.

Among the fathers and sons who participated in the popular summer wrestling camp were alumni Dr. Kurt Grabfelder and his son Derek (left) and Richard Miller and sons Jim and Daniel. The Grabfelders live in Plymouth Meeting, and the Millers live in Bradford, Pa.

Where are they now?

(Editor's Note: Alumni often ask about retired faculty or administrators. To bring everyone up to date, we contacted the retired members of the BU family to find out where they are and what they are doing. We will try to make this an annual feature.)

Dr. Bruce E. Adams, 5 West 11th Street, Bloomsburg, PA 17815. I have maintained an ongoing interest in the current. Continued on page 13

Prof lists advantages of teaching by computer

By CAROL J. ROGASCH
Student Feature Writer

The student sits down in a statistics classroom that is quiet except for the clicking keys of terminals, and slips in a floppy disk to begin the weekly exercises. The computer screen flashes instructions for the first problem.

With every right answer, the screen replies with a praising "correct." As the session progresses, "correct" is replaced with "Would you like to see the list of numbers again?" — indicating a wrong answer.

Step by step, the student works through the problems with the computer. When the class is over, the disk is given to the instructor and the class leaves for the day.

This type of classroom at Bloomsburg University within a couple of years is predicted by Dr. Michael Gaynor, professor of psychology.

The statistics course will use seven of these modules, explains Dr. Gaynor, noting that students will use the computers one out of three classes a week.

Dr. Gaynor has been working on these module programs since September 1983. They are written in the language of Pascal, with which he worked during his sabbatical at the Navy Center for Applied Research in Artificial Intelligence.

Six months of preparation in computer languages helped Gaynor help his colleagues with their research. Seven publications were a result of these combined efforts in computers.

Computers have been a major interest for Gaynor, starting as far back as 1964, when he was studying for his doctorate at Colorado State University.

He designed a device for computer storage in an engineering course and worked with artificial intelligence — how it could exist and could it be. Artificial Intelligence is a programmed computer's ability to respond as closely to unique situations as would a human brain.

In studying artificial intelligence, he developed the idea of a program that would enable a computer to write problems in statistics for students.

"No two questions are alike," says Gaynor. "Unlike workbooks, each student will have to learn to do the problems with the computer. With workbooks, you can go up to someone and say, 'Did you do the problems?' and copy the answers. No one is going to sit down at the terminal and do someone else's problems for them," notes Dr. Gaynor.

Dr. Gaynor plans on three or so problems per session with the computer. This should take 30 to 40 minutes, he estimates, depending on the number of wrong answers which loops back to the question.

The use of the computer in the classroom benefits both the student and the instructor. The student is able to pinpoint mistakes in a problem and the computer will help. It will offer to go back to the problem, list information, and tell the student why the answer is wrong.

Dr. Gaynor explains that during the class, "I'll be free to walk around and help individuals with questions they have. I think I work better on a one-to-one basis and will be able to give more help than to stand up in front of the class and go through the problems."

The workbooks presently used will not be replaced by the computer, but will be used in addition to assignments in the workbooks.

Gaynor explains, "The computer gives the student the opportunity to ask questions on what he is doing wrong immediately, instead of waiting until the workbook problems are corrected and given back the next week when we have already moved on to new material."

Gaynor has also incorporated his work with artificial intelligence into his plans for other courses.

This past Spring semester he held a seminar on artificial intelligence. The objectives were to share his knowledge on the subject, to expose students to views of professionals in the field, and give his students the opportunity to design and write programs using artificial intelligence.

As more people become aware of the importance of computers and artificial intelligence in education, Dr. Gaynor hopes that additional courses in all areas of study will incorporate this valuable tool.

trends of elementary education and teacher education as well as the changes that are taking place on the campus of BU.

A "Stars and Stripes" show, entertaining, educational and patriotic, is in place for the 1984-1985 school year. The 30-minute show is designed for both children and adults. It is a spinoff of the "Bicentennial Flags" show of 1975-1976 which was seen by over 20,000 children in five states. Featuring 27 flags, the Liberty Bell and the Statue of Liberty, the show spans the history of the USA from the tall ships of 1492 to the present 50-star flag. Expecting to devote about one day a week to the show, schools in Pa., N.J. and N.C. have been scheduled for the fall months.

Travel has been most rewarding, the latest trip being taken to Quebec, Canada, to seek the tall ships of Quebec '84. And visiting the shrine at Sainte Anne de Beaupre was most impressive. During a five-day period northeast of Quebec City, and with the newspapers in French and the motel's TV offerings minimal, I took the opportunity to read the Gospel According to St. Matthew.

Good relationship benefits

By ANDREW HEINTZELMAN
Student Feature Writer

Seven administrators and one student from BU visited Perdue Incorporated in Salisbury, Md., this summer, improving an already well-established relationship and developing many educational benefits for current and future BU students.

Eleven BU alumni (and one summer intern) are employed at the Salisbury facilities, and they met and talked with the administrators during the visit. Many of the former students are in the accounting department, and several are in management or corporate relations.

The BU personnel who went were Dr. Larry Jones, acting president; John Walker, vice president for institutional advancement; Tony Ianiero, director of development; Dr. Kaylan Ghosh, acting provost and vice president for academic affairs; Doug Hippenstiel, director of alumni affairs; Tom Davies, director of career development; and Ruben Britt, director of internships and cooperative education.

Besides maintaining contact with former students, BU can derive many other benefits from visits to major companies like Perdue.

And, according to Davies, it all relates to bettering the education of BU students.

"Our knowledge of the 'outside world' will give students a better education at Bloomsburg University," Davies said.

Administrators were told by Perdue directors that BU is the best recruiting school percentage-wise for their company because of the graduates' strong work ethic and ambition.

"We look for students who have a strong work ethic, and we find it with Bloomsburg students," says Kenny Colbert, director of employee relations for Perdue. "The chicken is processed, frozen and ready for delivery in less than one hour.

Administrators were impressed by Perdue's commitment to quality, and President Jones related it to BU's theme, "a standard of excellence." Administrators also appreciated the friendly and caring treatment that Perdue extended to its visitors and employees.

According to Walker, the benefits of a trip like the one to Perdue begin with this idea of meeting the people in charge and learning and experiencing the ideals of the company. From there, he said, it's important to see what kind of working situations alumni are in and the positions they are getting.

Hippenstiel added that visiting Perdue shows that BU is concerned about its alumni and is interested in working with them and the companies that employ them.

Administrators agree that BU has established itself with Perdue, Shell Oil, Shared Medical and other major companies through its successful graduates. "We're a known quantity," Walker said about BU in the business world.

Ianiero added that "the employment of so many alumni shows that BU is highly represented and competitive in top-notch industries."

With the "outside world" always changing, however, the Perdue trip was important in providing the administrators a chance to question the directors and alumni at Perdue on how well BU is preparing its students and what might be done differently in the future.

Although BU is a known quality, Walker said, it is important that companies like Perdue see how successful our graduates and our institution continue to be. And President Jones added, "It's important for BU to 'stay in touch with reality.'" According to Ghosh, the alumni at Perdue feel the curriculum at BU prepared them very well for the business world, and the Perdue officials too are "very satisfied," Ghosh said.

students (when interviewed) don't come to us saying 'what can Perdue do for me,' they say, 'what can I do, how can I help your company?'" Colbert said.

For these and other reasons, Colbert's recruiting team interviewed 96 BU students this spring, and Perdue continues to hire BU students.

The visit to Perdue began with a slide presentation and talks by several Perdue directors at the main office building. From there, Perdue tour guides took the administrators and student on a riding tour of a feed mill and a chicken house. The chicken house, which had 21,800 Perdue chickens in it, is one of many in the Salisbury area operated by local farmers with instruction and supervision from Perdue.

The final Perdue facility toured by the BU group was the Salisbury Processing Plant, where nearly one million chickens are processed in one week. After delivery, a live

"It is great for me to get this type of feedback," according to the chief academic advisor. "It makes me more confident about my job, and now I can work with the faculty so that they also know what companies are looking for."

Ghosh said the university would like more department chairpersons and faculty to visit companies like Perdue. He said a major concern of the Perdue managers is to hire students with good organizational and "people" skills.

Finding out how to improve the curriculum and better prepare students for the job world were certainly important aspects of the Perdue visit. But after visiting nearly 40 companies this summer, Davies says the simpler things can be just as important to current students.

"If a student comes into my office for advice about a job or a particular company, and I can tell them I've visited that company and I know what they want, our students feel better," Davies said. This, he added, can be a confidence builder for the student.

ts everyone

Also concerning current students, Walker said they will have more confidence by knowing that "the door" opens more easily for a BU graduate at a company that already has numerous BU alumni.

In its relationship with the university over the past several years, Perdue has accepted many BU interns. Therefore, the trip this summer was important to Ruben Britt, BU's new director of internships and cooperative education.

Britt discussed plans for continued internship programs with Perdue, and he expressed the importance of students' chance to have first-hand experience at such a major company. Year by year, Britt says, the intern network is established.

The Perdue trip also created an opportunity for a Perdue executive in residence, another "great plus" for BU, President Jones said.

During the executive-in-residence program, a Perdue representative would spend up to one week on campus, talking with students in and out of classes. Jones said that students can benefit more from the executive in residence than by simply talking to company representatives who come to campus for recruiting.

Another future possibility in Perdue-BU relations involves the athletic department. Since the trip to Maryland, Perdue has contacted BU with the beginnings of plans to sell their products at sporting events, according to Jones. This arrangement would expand Perdue's sales and provide BU with some free advertising.

The advantages already realized from the trip to Perdue this summer are numerous, and they alone make the trip successful. Davies says, however, that more and more benefits will be revealed in the future, just because BU took its top personnel to the company and met its people.

And the Perdue facilities were definitely a unique experience for the administrators. But in one way, the results from the Perdue trip were not at all unique. As Ianiero said about all the companies that BU personnel have visited, "one after another acknowledges and recognizes the outstanding graduates of Bloomsburg University."

The BU Alumni employed at Perdue are Michelle Zechman Basely, Alan Burggraf '83, Mary B. Cavosi '83, Earl Crum '82, John Holford '81, Darrell Keck '81, John

Edith Dunsten '34 with President Jones

Kraske '83, Bill Krieg '83, Randy Robinson '82, Mike Thomas '82, and Tom Trainer '82. The intern was Randy Feger.

In conjunction with the visit to Perdue's Maryland facility, Alumni Director Doug Hippenstiel was able to arrange an alumni chapter meeting. Invitations were mailed to alumni in the Salisbury-Ocean City area.

Joining the administrators for dinner and an update on BU at Dockside Murphy's Restaurant in Salisbury were alumni Bill Kreig '83, Edith Dunsten '34, Verna Jones '35, and Eric Slingerland '80."

Kathryn (Jennings) Blackstock '17 died on April 23, 1984. Mrs. Blackstock came from Mehoopany. While a student at Bloomsburg she was active in Philo, Y.W.C.A. Cabinet and delegate to Eagles Mere.

Nan R. Jenkins '17 of Nesquehoning, who has been helping the sick and elderly in that community since most folks can remember, was honored recently by the Nesquehoning American Legion Post.

Miss Jenkins, a retired Carbon County educator and school administrator, received the "Citizen of the Year Award" for her countless humanitarian deeds. Jack McLaughlin, post service officer and past commander, presented the award and served as master of ceremonies.

Mayor Frank Jacobs presented the key to the borough to Miss Jenkins, a lifelong resident of the community.

One of the prime movers of special education in Carbon County and the state, Miss Jenkins was the second assistant superintendent of schools in the county for 27 years before retiring in 1963. She studied at Bloomsburg, Penn State University, New York University and Johns Hopkins University.

During her career as an educator, she was a demonstration teacher for the University of Delaware, taught elementary school in Lansford and Nesquehoning, and was supervisor of elementary education in the former Mauch Chunk Township School District.

In 1979, Miss Jenkins was cited by the Carbon County commissioners for 30 years of volunteer service at the county home for the aged in Weatherly.

In 1978, she was honored for her dedication as a teacher by the Child Evangelism Fellowship of Eastern Pennsylvania. She is a past superintendent of the Sunday School of the First Baptist Church in Nesquehoning, and also a past president of the Missionary Society of the church. She is the only surviving member of the Mauch Chunk Chapter, Order of Eastern Star.

In 1959, Miss Jenkins received the Distinguished Service Award of the Bloomsburg University Alumni Association in recognition of her active participation in all phases of child welfare work, as a teacher and administrator. She was praised for her accomplishments with the physically handicapped and underprivileged children.

Miss Jenkins helped organize the Carbon County Retired Teachers Association and became its first president. She is also a past president of the Carbon County Crippled Children's Association, a member of the board of directors of the Easter Seal Society, and a past director of the Pennsylvania Tuberculosis Society.

Her address is 209 West High Street, Nesquehoning, Pa. 18240.

Edward H. Yost '18 died on December 4, 1983.

1919

Ruth M. (Maust) Drumm '19 died on August 7. A lifelong resident of Bloomsburg area, she was born April 14, 1899, in Hemlock Township, a daughter of the late 1. Neal and Sarah Mericle Maust. She was one of the oldest members of Trinity Reformed Church of Bloomsburg.

Mrs. Drumm was a graduate of Bloomsburg High School. She taught in the Berwick elementary school and served on the kitchen staff of the Caldwell Consistory.

Surviving are a daughter, Sara Jane (Sally) McHenry, Bloomsburg; nine grandchildren; seven great-grandchildren; and a sister, Agnes Dieffenbacher of rural Bloomsburg.

A son, Robert Hilday Drumm, died September 28, 1981.

Dorothy (Woodring) Ubberoth '19 died in January 1984. She had spent her teaching years in the schools of West Hazleton and the Bethlehem area. She was a graduate of St. Johns High School. While attending Bloomsburg she was active in Philo, Y.W.C.A., G.D.C. and G.A.A.

Efforts make difference

(Editor's Note: John Sertingour '53, director of orientation at BU, sent the following memo to the Alumni Office. We thought you would appreciate what it says.)

In these days of declining college and university enrollments in the country, we concern ourselves with how to attract and retain students. An orientation family shared with me the reasons for their daughter's coming to Bloomsburg and for their happiness with her choice:

(1) One of our alumni — a former cheerleader — encouraged the student to be sure to check out Bloomsburg University. After checking six other schools, the family came here in December after the University had closed.

(2) Ms. Jennie Carpenter saw them and offered assistance. She showed them through a residence hall, gave them information and answered questions.

(3) Some maintenance workers saw the family, too, and asked if they could be of assistance. (This really impressed the father.)

(4) Finally, as we hear so many times, the appearance of the campus impressed them tremendously. The father said it was the best maintained campus they had seen.

Here we have evidence of the effects of a satisfied customer (our recent graduate), of our friendly and caring attitudes (Ms. Carpenter and the maintenance workers) and of the efforts of many people who help to keep the campus looking so good.

I couldn't wait to pass this information along, not only to thank some people, but to illustrate how the efforts of all of us can make a difference — often in ways that we never realize.

1920

Grayce (Mausteller) Newhart '20 has died. She worked at Bloomsburg Motors for 35 years.

1923

Mary E. Learn '23 died on July 5, 1984. Miss Learn came from White Haven, Pa. and was a graduate of White Haven High School. Known as Merleyn while attending Bloomsburg, she was very studious and enjoyed hikes whenever they were scheduled.

1924

Christine E. (Holmes) Taylor '24 died on July 24 at her summer home in Laporte.

Born in Bloomsburg, she was the daughter of the late William D. C. and Cora E. Hagenbuch Holmes. She lived in Nutley since 1938 and spent her summers at her home in Laporte.

Mrs. Taylor was a graduate of Bloomsburg High School. She taught third grade in Bloomsburg schools during the 1920s. She was a member of the Grace Episcopal Church, Nutley, N.J., and also a member of the Altar Guild. She was a member of the Laporte Women's Club.

Her husband, Alton P. Taylor, died December 31, 1962. Surviving is a son, Rev. Alton H. Taylor, Kearney, N.J., rector of Christ Episcopal Church in Harrison, N.J.

Earl T. Farley '25 is deceased.

Historian celebrates 95th with book

(The following article was written by Ted Fenstermacher and appeared in the August 4 Issue of the Press-Enterprise, Bloomsburg.)

The word "scholarly" is overworked but it is the proper one to describe a volume on which work is currently being completed. The subject is Columbia County history and the author, Edwin M. Barton, class of 1907, marked his 95th birthday August 4.

How is that for remaining active at an advanced age?

Mr. Barton modestly says it is "a revision of an earlier manuscript, entitled 'Columbia County 200 Years Ago,' which was published in 1976, in mimeograph form by the active man.

Well, OK, but extensive changes have been made, with new facts added and it is a fine work. The author pays tribute to the work of Sonja Turner in connection with the volume. He comments, "I am deeply grateful to Sonja Turner for accepting my request to revise and edit my unfinished manuscript." He also thanked Edna Lynn, executive secretary of the county historical society and Crystal Andrezzl, typist.

I was given the opportunity to read the 350 typed pages. The thoroughness shown in the listing of the many references, books, newspapers, articles and booklets is, in itself, a major project.

The other day I visited with Sonja and Mr. Barton at his combination office and living quarters at the Bloomsburg Health Care Center. They were checking over the manuscript as I took the accompanying photo.

In reply to a query as to how he first became so interested in history he said that when he was supervisor of the School Studies Department of the schools of Ellizabeth, N.J., he had joined their county historical society. He had felt the activities of that society were "somewhat limited for a county with a population of 300,000."

His efforts to encourage the study of area history at that time made him aware of its importance. When he retired and returned to Columbia County — serving six years as an assistant professor at Bloomsburg University — the interest stayed with him.

His activities on his return were not limited to research and writing of history. Among his many major projects were work directed at improving park facilities and parking. Another who had been active in the work said, "Ed was a sparkplug in changing the business area parking from diagonal to parallel and in getting more parking facilities." His work in the historical society of the county included getting a Tourism Bureau started.

However, historical work and writing remained his main interest. The gift of his College Hill residence to the society was among many he made.

Mr. Barton was a native of Mount Carmel, where his father was a physician and was also in real estate. But, the future writer came to Bloomsburg at age three and spent most of his life here, both before and after his many years at Ellizabeth. He attended the so-called Model School of the college and then taught at Newlin and at Millville. He also taught at Trinity Chapel School, in New York; at Meridan, Connecticut, and at both private and public schools in Minneapolis.

As a 1907 graduate of what was then the Bloomsburg Normal School he is the oldest living alumnus. He also has a degree from Trinity College in Connecticut. Honors that have come to him include the Distinguished Service Award of Bloomsburg University Alumni, awards from the Torch Club and the Bloomsburg Chamber of Commerce.

One could write further about Edwin Barton's accomplishments but he urged me to "take it easy."

He will present copies of his new book to the Berwick, Bloomsburg, Benton and Barton libraries and to that of Bloomsburg University. The limited production will also include a copy for his personal library.

Those who read the volume will gain a thorough knowledge of Columbia County history through the days of the Indians, with the seemingly endless slayings in the area, through Canal days and those of the early railroads. Much data is given on the Civil War. Mr. Barton's father was wounded while in the Northern Army, in the Carolinas, and his uncle was killed at Antietam.

There are so many interesting incidents included that one would have to read the volume to get the full idea. One of many little-realized facts today is that during the fighting with the Indians, there were many who believed the Quaker (Friends) were in league with the Indians. They pointed out that the Indians almost always spared the Quakers and their homes. The reason, however, as Mr. Barton points out, was that the Friends never attempted to cheat or kill the Indians and that they would share their food with those Indians who were in desperate circumstances.

One also realizes, after reading the volume, that the Tories were not as bad as often painted. They had still believed that they owed allegiance to their king, a belief that had been instilled in the so-called Tories and their ancestors for many generations.

degree from Temple University. She also attended Bucknell University, Penn State and the University of Pennsylvania, where she earned additional credits. Mrs. Eyerly taught school in Paulsboro, N.J., for a number of years and was a training teacher in the Bloomsburg public schools. She also taught at Girard College and at Bucknell University during the summer sessions. A member of St. Paul's Episcopal Church, she was past president and former treasurer of the Episcopal women. She was a member of the Ivy Club and the Bloomsburg Hospital auxiliary.

Her husband, Edwin I. Eyerly, died January 3, 1972.

Surviving are two step-sons, Dr. Robert C. Eyerly, Danville, and William A. S. Eyerly, Bloomsburg; six step-grandchildren; four step-great grandchildren. She was the last member of her immediate family.

Mrs. Eyerly was a graduate of Bloomsburg High School and was known as Rankie while attending Bloomsburg University. She was active in class plays during her high school years and she was a devoted member of Delta Phi Sigma Sorority at college.

Mary McAndrew Joyce '29 died on July 18, 1980.

Miriam (Forsythe) Gilliland '30 has died. She taught school in Mifflin County, and she and her husband operated a general store and the post office in Oak Hall.

She was a graduate of Lewistown High School. She was a member of the State College Presbyterian Church. She was the widow of John Campbell Gilliland.

Surviving are a daughter, Nancy G. Thompson of Carlisle; a son, John Campbell Gilliland II of Muncie, Ind.; a brother, Caldwell Forsythe of Grantville; a sister, Pauline Hille of Lewistown, and six grandchildren.

Mrs. Gilliland was known as Buzz while attending Bloomsburg. She was active in Tau Phi Epsilon, Maroon and Gold, Freshman Athletic Club, B Club, Y.W.C.A., Social Committee, Hockey, Volleyball, Basketball, Dramatic Club and Tennis.

Raymond T. Hodges '30 died on February 15, 1984, in Richmond, Va.

He and his wife, Jacqueline, were residents of Richmond for over 40 years. He was the retired chairman of speech and dramatic arts at the former Richmond Professional Institute, now Virginia Commonwealth University. During the summer months, he and his wife operated an antique shop in Essex, N.Y., where they had previously operated the Cobweb Players in the late 30s and early 40s. During the 50s, the couple ran the Green Mountain Playhouse, a popular summer theatre in Middlebury, Vermont.

Anna M. (Gillaspy) Forsyth '34 died on August 18, 1984. While attending Bloomsburg, Mrs. Forsyth was known as "Ann." She was active in the Y.W.C.A.

1938

The Post Office has advised us that Philip B. Frankmore '38 is deceased. While attending Bloomsburg, Mr. Frankmore was active in Dramatic Club, A Capella Choir, Y.M.C.A., Cabinet, Junior Chamber of Commerce, North Hall Association, Mixed Chorus, Columbian Club, Alpha Psi Omega, Inter-Fraternity Council, Chairman of Customs and Chairman of Social Committee. His last address of record was 1350 East San Bernardino Road, West Covina, California 91790.

Robert E. Montague '50, secretary-treasurer of Kennedy Van Saun Corporation of Danville, has been elected president of the Keystone-Mountain States Council of the National Association of Accountants. Bob's address is 1414 Bloom Road, Danville, Pa. 17821.

Berdine A. (Logar) Rittenhouse '50 teaches Introduction to American Genealogy at the University of West Florida. In 1981, the University of Alabama awarded her a master's degree in history, with concentration on genealogy and archives. Over the years, she has taught shorthand, business courses and typing.

Her husband, Roy, is employed by General Electric Supply Company. They have a son, David Berdine's address is 6506 Lake Charlene Drive, Pensacola, Fla. 32506.

Dr. Max G. Cooley '50, professor of business education, retired from Shippensburg University in August after 34 years in the field of education, including 25 spent at Shippensburg.

Cooley, who joined the Shippensburg faculty in 1959 as an assistant professor in the business education department, was named associate professor and the director of business in 1965. He was named a full professor in 1967. He was named to a combined role in 1970 of chairman of the business education department and Dean of Continuing Education.

A native of Towanda, Pennsylvania, Cooley received his bachelor of science degree from Bloomsburg State College, his secondary principal's certificate from Pennsylvania State University and his master of arts and doctorate degrees from Columbia University. Following graduation from Bloomsburg State College, Cooley served as principal and teacher in the Ulster and Rome high schools. Also, he was a teacher in the business education department of Sayre High School.

"Retirement gives me the opportunity to do some soul searching," Cooley said. "I'm excited about the new opportunities and new vistas. I'm a very diverse person. I would like to do much more traveling than I've been able to do. Also, I hope to do some painting and writing."

Cooley is an avid gardener. He enjoys developing show vegetable and flower gardens. He plants three gardens a year. Cooley said, "I work at it with a pitched fever." Cooley also enjoys church music and playing the organ.

When asked his thoughts on the future of business education, Cooley said, "The need for business teachers is suddenly quite great because as individuals retire, the positions need to be filled," Cooley said. "I would like to see Shippensburg University commit itself to the future of business education since it's been a leader in the preparation of business teachers over the years."

"Young people are outstanding today," Cooley said. "I will miss working with them."

Cooley has been very active in community affairs. Besides being active in the local AARP, he served as coordinator of Shippensburg Operation Heartbeat. Also, he served as a certified instructor with the Red Cross, modular, and the American Heart Association, lecture, courses in Cardio Pulmonary Resuscitation. In addition, Cooley served as the coordinator/advisor of the Cooperative Education Program at the Letterkenny Army Depot in Chambersburg.

Among his many awards and distinctions, Cooley was awarded the Shippensburg Chamber of Commerce

Common Ground Award in 1981 for fostering better relationships between the community of Shippensburg and the University. Also, he was awarded the Outstanding Post-Secondary Business Educator Award for Pennsylvania for 1982-83.

In addition, Cooley has had many leadership activities. He is the historian/archivist for the Shippensburg chapter of Phi Delta Kappa. Also, he has been a member of and advisor to the university-wide Continuing Education Committee. For six years, he was the co-chairman of the University Commencement Committee.

Cooley and his wife, Ruth are longtime residents of Shippensburg. They have two sons. The oldest, Gary, operates an air conditioning and heating business in Shippensburg. Mark, who was an engineer at Grove Manufacturing for nine years, manages the Capitol Theatre in Chambersburg.

Ann P. (Stone) Lewis '60 wrote us on August 22, 1984 as follows: "As my daughter gets ready to go back for her senior year at Bloomsburg University, many fond memories flood back.

"Twenty-five years ago, I was getting ready for my senior year at Bloomsburg State College. My daughter attended and will be attending classes in some of the same classrooms that I did. She has taken and will be taking some of the same classes that I did since she is in office administration and I was in business education. She will be living in a downtown apartment as I did as a senior. However, there are many changes—larger campus, more facilities, more students, etc. "My daughter, Jennifer Lewis, was on the campus of Bloomsburg State College when she was only four months old—at my graduation when I received my master's degree in August of 1963. She is now enjoying the campus on her own at twenty-one years of age.

"Since my graduation with a bachelor's degree in business education in 1960, I have been busy. I taught one year at Lackawanna Trail High School in Factoryville, Pennsylvania; and Union-Endicott High School in Endicott, New York, has been my place of employment for the last twenty-three years. I have taught many subjects in the business department and have been advisor to a school newspaper as well as the yearbook. "At the present time, I am caught up with learning and teaching about computers. I am teaching a half-year course called Introduction to Computers using the IBM Personal Computers. Union-Endicott received 15 PC's in the IBM Literacy Program in 1983, and I was a participant in that program during the school year 1983-1984. I also taught, and will again in 1984-85, in-service courses for the Union-Endicott faculty and staff on the IBM PC.

"Union-Endicott recently purchased a Data General minicomputer for use in district-wide work. They sent me to Boston for a week for training on the DG Comprehensive Electronic Office equipment. I am currently training the support staff on CEO and have found that it is exciting and very rewarding teaching adults.

"The Southern Tier Business Teachers Association, of which I am president, is planning a meeting for all business teachers of three New York counties on software/hardware that could be used in teaching business students the necessary skills for entry into today's business world.

"My husband and I have four children—two married sons and two daughters—Jennifer at BU and Lisa, a senior in high school. We also have three grandchildren.

"I shall be looking forward to May of 1985 when I return to the Bloomsburg State College (University) campus for my daughter's graduation—twenty-five years after my own."

'Vid' walks where Welsh father walked

(Editor's Note: The following article about Elfed "Vid" Jones, Class of 1930, was written by Miriam Stephens and appeared in the August 9 Issue of the Press-Enterprise, Bloomsburg.)

Only disintegrating stone foundations remain of the old farm house in Llanddewi Brefi parish, South Wales, where Elfed "Vid" Jones' father was born.

But the Carroll Park resident, who recently made his first visit to the country of his ancestors, found many of the places which his father had described to him — the rolling fields, the bleak treeless mountains and the country lanes lined with hedgerows.

And then there were the Joneses of all ages who arrived in large numbers to greet their American cousins.

Accompanying the 80-year-old retired educator was his daughter, Gayle Jones Reed, art teacher in Wayne, N.J., who was making her third trip to Wales.

"I must have climbed thousands of worn stone steps," says Jones, who was describing the dozen castles and palaces visited by the pair during their tour in England and throughout the countryside of Wales.

HISTORIC CASTLE — Caernarvon Castle, where Prince Charles of Britain was crowned Prince of Wales, was visited by Jones and daughter Gayle.

LUNCH AT PUB — Sightseeing trip with cousin Elfed Jones (standing below) and his wife was enjoyed by the travelers. At the Forest Arms Hotel, Vid Jones stands on the ancient steps which were built to aid women to mount their horses, which they rode sidesaddle.

A busy itinerary was planned by Gayle. In London, the pair was met by a second cousin, Dr. Alun Jones, Oxford graduate who heads a research group studying Great Britain's problems with the Common Market.

He conducted their tour of the London area. Jones was impressed by his visit to the Tower of London, where the crown jewels are displayed behind heavy plate glass.

They also visited the site of the Henley regatta — missing the festivities by only one day. They saw the paddocks at Ascot, Stratford-on-Avon and Stonehenge.

Vid and Gayle later visited friends in northern Wales, near the town of Cwm, a beautiful area overlooking the Irish sea. There, they attended a rehearsal of an 85-voice men's chorus.

"Nearly every valley in North Wales has a male chorus," says Jones. "There is little to do at night and the farmers and other workers gather to sing."

Their trip to Wales was timed so they might attend the famous International Elsteddfod at Llangollen, Wales, where costumed choruses from throughout the world appear.

It was while enjoying a medieval dinner in Ruthin Castle, where they were staying, that Jones met Bernard Woolford, the costumed master of ceremonies. He identified himself to the Pennsylvania visitors as a member of the Rhos male choir which sang in Scranton a few years ago while on a tour of the states.

It was the deep coal mines of the Scranton area — similar to those of Wales — which drew many Welsh immigrants to this country in the late 1800s.

Moses Jones, Vid's father, was in his twenties when he came to Wilkes-Barre in 1883. He worked in the mines as did a couple of his brothers who followed him to this country to make their home.

Vid, who played football while in high school, also worked a night shift in the mines to earn extra money.

He received his degree from Bloomsburg and a graduate degree from New York University. He taught in Nanticoke and Wilkes-Barre before coming to Bloomsburg where he became supervising principal of the Scott Township School District. At the time of his retirement in 1969, he was elementary principal of the Central Columbia School District.

Vid's father, Moses Jones, who was the oldest of eight children of Thomas and Mary Jones, visited his homeland in 1939, only a few years before his death.

When he returned to the states, he left behind in Wales his shaving mug and brush which his relatives put in safekeeping.

World War II soon erased all plans for visits home. Industrial areas of Wales suffered from enemy bombings as much as did the rest of Great Britain.

To Vid's surprise, his father's china mug and brush were presented to him by a cousin during his recent visit — nearly 40 years later. "We knew someone would be coming to pick it up," she said.

Another gift made to the visitors was an old family Bible in the Welsh language, which contains the family tree of Thomas and Mary Jones and their eight children.

Although many members of the older generation of Joneses are gone, Vid and Gayle enjoyed a visit with Annie Thomas, 90, a distant cousin who lives in Ammonford, South Wales.

At Swansea, a cousin, also named Elfed Jones, and his wife gave them a sightseeing tour of the area.

It seems two of Moses Jones' brothers also had sons named Elfed.

"There are only a few surnames in Wales," Vid points out, "so many a Tom Jones or Bill Jones was given a third name which was the place from which he came or some other word which could better describe him."

In Llanddewi Brefi parish, Vid found the cemetery which contained the grave of his great-grandfather, known as John Jones (Leclau), who died in 1832. The double headstone, made of slate, also marked the burial place of his wife. The word "Leclau" referred to the name of the Jones farm, which in Welsh is "hillsides." Many Welshmen were identified in this manner, he said.

"It's hard to describe how it feels," Vid said, "to walk down a Welsh country lane bordered by hedgerows where your father, grandfather and great-grandfather walked many years ago."

ANCESTOR'S GRAVE — Vid Jones and daughter Gayle found the lichen-covered double gravestone of John Jones (Leclau), an ancestor who died in 1832, and his wife. Stone fences, like that shown at right, border many of the farm fields

An update on John Magill's search for samaritan

Nearly 40 years have passed since the end of World War II. In that time, the painful experiences endured by many soldiers have been softened. But for Dr. John F. Magill '48, there is a pain that continues to throb, and a debt that he wants to repay. The debt he owes to a German woman is a "thank you."

Magill and his wife, Marge, spent three weeks in Germany last fall in an unsuccessful search for the frau who had aided him and 19 other unarmed, seriously injured paratroopers.

An earlier Alumni Quarterly article told of these members of the 17th Airborne Division who were hit by concentrated German artillery fire on April 3, 1945, near Munster.

The German woman, Magill said, could have turned the Americans over to the Germans, but instead she offered aid, coffee, and words of comfort that could have cost her her life.

Although he did not find the woman, Magill says he made some "major psychological break-throughs."

"I don't know if we'll ever find the lady in this world," Magill wrote in a letter to the Quarterly, "but this much I do know. We'll never be the same for having made the search."

Mac and Marge, by their pilgrimage to Baal, Germany, opened a new dimension of communion with Marge's brother Tommy. They walked where he had last walked.

They made another major breakthrough. They were able to approach the German as a person, rather than as an enemy.

"The German lady's impact made it possible for me to visit the German cemeteries," he said. "Psychologically, I was never able to face up to the realities of making peace with those who had fought against us in 1944 and 1945. I was able to do that on our latest trip to Europe.

"Finally, I was able to kneel at the graves of my 17th Airborne Division buddies in Margraten and reaffirm to them that they had not died in vain.

"Equally important, I was able to kneel at the graves of the young German boys who died in some of the awesome artillery barrages that I had to call down on them. I was able to understand the grief of the aged German couples who came to visit their sons' graves."

The pilgrimage to Clervaux also reaffirmed that people do care and people do remember. It demonstrated that people do remember the indispensable role of the ordinary G.I., he concluded.

The trip to General Patton's final resting place was another meaningful moment for Mac. He experienced "an air of tranquility there that defied description."

Despite his failure to find the German woman who helped him, the search goes on. The British Armed Forces Network continues to broadcast his pleas to find her. The National Disabled American Veterans magazine recently ran an article on the search in the event she had emigrated to the United States.

The search has had some interesting side effects. As a result of the DAV article, Magill located his long-lost buddy, Ed. They were the sole survivors of the original forward observers who went into combat with the 17th Airborne Division. Ed called by telephone, "and for nearly an hour, we talked and even cried a bit." They plan to meet in the near future.

Magill also received a call from a division buddy from California with whom he had lost all contact.

With Mac and Marge on the trip was their youngest daughter, Rebecca, who accompanied her Grandmother Martini back to her birthplace in Czechoslovakia.

'Model' principal retires in Delaware

When Wayne Von Stetten packs up his office at Brandywine High School in a few weeks, he will take with him "Baughman's Handbook of Humor in Education," the faded, 18-year-old color photo of his children, a cross-stitch sampler of the school made by a parent, and his armchair.

He will leave behind the U.S. Model School Flag awarded the school last year by the U.S. Department of Education, the plaques and trophies and the football stadium, which is now named after him.

It was 1969 when the round-faced, sturdily built Von Stetten became principal of Brandywine High School. In 1949, he began his career in education as a coach in the Coatesville, Pa., School District.

This spring, he has taken his bows at numerous ceremonies and will retire on June 29. He is already reminiscing about his successful 35-year career in education.

And he isn't talking about money.

"I really think I helped some people," he mused in a recent interview. "We knew we were never going to get rich. But in the final analysis: Did you do anything worthwhile? I'll say that what I did was indeed worthwhile."

Being a principal was not always an easy job. For the last 15 years, it consumed his life.

Five days a week, 180 days a year, he left his house at 6:40 a.m. to arrive at the school in the peaceful suburban neighborhood of Foulk Road by shortly after 7. He estimates that 100 times a year he returned to school for evening activities after dinner at home.

And, of course, he spent quiet summer days planning and organizing for the next school year.

Von Stetten came to Wilmington as assistant principal of Brandywine High in 1966 and was made principal three years later. A native of Columbia, Pa., hard by the Susquehanna River, Von Stetten had taught and coached at East Orange, N.J., and in the Coatesville School District.

His first career dream was to play catcher in professional baseball. He tried out for the St. Louis Cardinals, but the competition was tough, and he decided to take up coaching school teams instead.

He has loved the job of principal and says he never wanted to go any further.

The first and biggest task of each school day was to see that things were off and running.

The substitute teachers had to be called. Parents who had scheduled early morning conferences had to be talked to. Disciplinary problems had to be solved.

Then there was the business of education.

He observed classrooms and teachers and over the years has developed a keen sense of good schooling, opposed to bad. He was rewarded last spring when Brandywine High was chosen as among 142 in the country as a model school.

(That honor included a trip to the White House and meetings with President Reagan and Education Secretary Dr. Terrell Bell. Von Stetten was also one of 14 high school principals selected to meet with Dr. Bell at the National Association of Secondary Principals' Convention in Las Vegas in February.)

"One can usually sense where there is a highly skilled teacher," he says. "There is a relaxed air of informality, indicating that the teacher is in charge, the kids are at ease. The teacher is well-prepared and so are the students. You can immediately tell if they have done their homework. The actively prepared student wants to participate."

"These are the things that show me all is well. The contrast is a class where a teacher and students are not prepared and not paying attention."

He has lunched with students to hear their complaints — ranging from dress codes, either too strict or too loose, to athletic programs unfairly favoring boys' teams, to requests for an open-campus policy that would permit lunch trips to Burger King.

He has coped with the parents who wanted their son to graduate, even though he flunked a final exam, and the boy's grandmother who placed a curse on Von Stetten and his family because he would not relent.

He has attended musicals, football games and assemblies. "There have been 1,000 highlights," he says with fondness. "I have always felt it is I who have been privileged to serve this school."

And now, with the smell of freshly cut summer grass in the air, Von Stetten says his thoughts are turning to other things. He wants to take his grandchildren fishing and to the baseball games.

He wants to travel in Scotland with his wife. He wants to play golf and is considering writing a book about Eric Liddell, the Olympic athlete featured in the movie, "Chariots of Fire," who refused to compete in the 100-yard dash because the event was held on a Sunday.

"I think his is a story that should be told," Von Stetten says.

So he will soon pack up his office and his memories, knowing, he says, that this is the right time to move on. "Sixty," he says, "I think it's a good time to go. I know it's the time to go. It's hard to explain to someone else. I want the opportunity to do some other things. I have my health. I will always feel the privilege has been mine."

Von Stetten graduated from Bloomsburg in January 1950 with a B.S. degree with double majors in English and Social Studies. While at Bloom, he was active in athletics, playing on the varsity football teams in 1946, 1947 and 1948. He was unable to play in 1949 because of an injury, but assisted Coach Robert Redman as the freshman football coach. He also edited The Maroon and Gold (student newspaper) and was editor-in-chief of the Obitier. He was a member of Phi Delta Kappa.

He received a master of arts degree from Seton Hall University and completed additional graduate work at Millersville University and the University of Delaware.

Von Stetten and his wife, Margaret, are parents of four children: Wayne II, James, Eileen and Richard. They have ten grandchildren.

Alumni couple enjoy life in South

Have you lost touch with college friends? Do you hate to write letters, or just can't find the time? Well, THE ALUMNI QUARTERLY is your way to keep in touch with old friends without writing a lot of letters. We like to hear about the experiences alumni have had since graduation—and fellow alumni find it interesting, too. It's fun, and sometimes helpful, to compare notes.

Here's a good example, written by Dorothy (Born) Lesko, Class of 1962. She and husband Mike, also Class of 1962, live in Summerville, South Carolina.

Following graduation in 1962, Mike served six months' active duty with the Pennsylvania National Guard. When his active duty status had been satisfied, we both accepted teaching positions at Morris Hills Regional High School in Rockaway, New Jersey, where we remained until July 1964. At that time we relocated to Lock Haven High School. For eight years, Mike was employed as department head of business education at Lock Haven Senior High School. During this same time span, I worked as a substitute teacher for the same district; my summers were spent teaching in the Upward Bound Federal Program for culturally, socially and economically deprived children. This program was implemented and operated through Lock Haven State College.

During the eight years we were in Lock Haven, we also became interested in camping. When we first visited the southern coast of South Carolina, we fell in love with the area. Every opportunity we had — spring break, summer break, mid-winter break — we headed south. Each time we visited the South, we became more enamored, more indoctrinated, more attuned to the environment, which encompassed lifestyle, climate and pace.

Mike reached a point in his professional career where he was ready for a change. Where do you go? Where do you apply? What do you want? All these questions raced through our minds. Whether we would have moved 10 miles, 100 miles, or 1,000 miles, one thing was very clear to us. A move would require pulling up eight years worth of roots in Lock Haven and selling our home. We determined, We love the South; the area keeps pulling us back time and again. Why not investigate opportunities?

The master project went into effect. We began writing to the school districts along the coast of South Carolina—Charleston, Myrtle Beach, Beaufort, Georgetown. We wrote to the respective Chambers of Commerce for information relative to each area. We subscribed to the newspapers of these areas to get a "feel" for life there. We investigated housing prices, grocery prices, retail merchandise prices, etc. During Easter break of 1972, he had appointments for interviews scheduled in Myrtle Beach, Georgetown and Charleston. Following the interviews, Mike was offered teaching positions in Georgetown and Charleston. We chose Charleston—beautiful Charleston—steeped in history, culture, and tradition! Mike was told by the superintendent that if he worked hard, proved himself, and wanted to do it, the opportunity for advancement into the administrative ranks was indeed present in this urban-suburban area.

During the school year 1972-1973, Mike taught business education in Charleston County School District. In the spring of 1973, an opening occurred for an assistant principal at Garrett High School. Mike applied. The majority of the candidates had their master's degrees. Mike did not. He was the "choice" but was told that he would be hired contingent on his securing his master's degree within two years; otherwise, at the conclusion of two years, he would revert back to teacher status. Mike accepted the position, went to The Citadel concurrently and received his master's degree in 1975. He remained at Garrett High School as assistant principal until July 1979. At that time, he was selected to "move up" to assistant to the superintendent for Charleston County School District, Cooper Four.

In 1980, the principalship of Garrett High School came open. Mike missed being "in the field" daily, direct contact with students—in general, the high school environment.

The Garrett community wanted him back as their principal; he was encouraged to apply and did. He was hired in June 1980. He has found his "niche" and is satisfied, happy, and "into" a job he loves. Historically, Garrett High School has been a "hot bed"—having once been an all-white school. Years ago, the community and student body were resistant to integration—as much of the South was. The ratio at Garrett is about 60/40 (white to black). Of course, there are still some isolated "redneck" situations. Generally speaking, Garrett High School no longer experiences racial conflict; the majority of discipline problems which surface time to time are not racial in nature. Like many other areas in the country, there has been a decline in enrollment. Garrett High School has a student body of approximately 1,100. So much for Mike!

When we re-located to Charleston in 1972, that first year I worked as a substitute teacher in the Charleston County School District. I wanted to get a "lay of the land" and become exposed to the "territory" my husband had adopted in his career move. In 1973 I accepted a teaching position at Charleston Air Force Base. I taught typewriting classes on different levels to military personnel who were being channeled into the clerical/secretarial field of service. Concurrently, I taught shorthand for Trident Technical College on a part-time basis in their evening program of studies.

In 1978, I decided to "hang up" teaching for a time. I accepted a position in the Division of Operations working with the deputy superintendent for Charleston County Public Schools. Operations encompasses data processing, accounts payable, internal audit, food services, budgeting, grants accounting, facilities planning and management, energy management, buildings and grounds, maintenance, custodial services, payroll, archives and records, property control, supply management services. The position has carried a salary in excess of what I would earn teaching; however, I work for it! The pace is hectic, timelines are maddening, and the workload is considerable. I work as executive secretary/ administrative assistant.

My work is primarily supervisory in nature and relative to the areas I have outlined with the division of operations. I like my job; however, as the years pass, I may find I need a more "calming" environment. One of my chief hobbies/interest areas is writing. I have had the opportunity to enjoy this "interest area" on the job as well. The division of information services of the school district publishes a newspaper for the employees. I frequently write, edit and publish for the newspaper. I love to write and have expressed an interest in joining the staff of information services on a permanent basis should a vacancy occur in that division. So much for me!

Charleston County Public Schools employ 4,574 people. The entry level for a teacher with no experience and a bachelor's degree is $12,220, although the state is adopting significant raise next year from all indications. The 1983-1984 operating budget was $68,111,171.

Barbara Lynn Mann '80 and Michael Charles Zeigler were married recently. The bride is a special education teacher in the Central Dauphin School District. Her husband, a Pennsylvania State University graduate, is a restaurant manager for the Friendly Ice Cream Corporation. They live in Hummelstown, Pa.

Frank J. Berleth '81 was recently named administrator in training of the Doctors' Convalescent Center, Selinsgrove. His mailing address is P.O. Box 91, Penns Creek, Pa. 17862.

Richard Stanley Walewski '81 was recently named director of data processing for the Good Samaritan Under miscellaneous, I offer this. When we moved here in 1972, my brother-in-law was completing his doctorate at Penn State University. In 1973, he was "on the market" for a college level teaching position. We made a few contacts and had the "contacts" contact. Subsequently, my brother-in-law was employed as a professor at the College of Charleston. He remains employed there.

Shortly after they moved here, my sister, Patricia Born Bower (BSC '67) joined the school district family as an elementary education consultant on the central staff. Four years ago, my mother retired and relocated to Charleston from Williamsport, Pa.

Our 19-year-old daughter, Kimberly Ann, is in her third year at The College of Charleston. She is uncertain about career choices. She is intrigued with computer science, but she maintains a yen for journalism and has a real knack and flair for writing.

In our free(?) time, we enjoy reading, music, the sand and surf of the nearby beach, and "soaking in" Charleston—the joy and interest of which never wanes. Much of our time is spent with the young people in school-related activities—baseball, football, basketball, banquets, dances and a myriad of other events.

We are in "Gamecock" (University of South Carolina) and "Tiger" (Clemson University) country, but we remain steadfast "Huskies" and proudly display and boast of this heritage.

Speaking of the University of South Carolina, many readers may remember Bill Foster, former basketball coach at Bloomsburg. When Mike and I did our student teaching, Bill Foster supervised us and taught our practicum course as well. Coach Foster is in our neck of the woods, too—serving as head basketball coach for USC in Columbia, about 100 miles west of Charleston.

We have one eccentricity of which we are aware. We love dogs and have five of our own! My office is located adjacent to the former Charleston County Animal Pound. From time to time, these "lost" or "unwanted" or "abandoned" animals escape. Over the years, I have brought five of them home "temporarily" until such time as I could secure a good home for them. My efforts on all five occasions were in vain; the result was that these dogs "hung their leashes" permanently at 104 Huntington Circle. Our assortment includes poodle, mixed breed, cock-a-poo, labrador retriever and Old English sheepdog! Fortunately, we have the room to accommodate these adoptees, which have made life interesting by the way.

We are in the South because we want to be. I no longer enjoy traveling that much—why travel? I'm here, and Charleston has it all! It is a beautiful city to explore; the plantations are magnificent. Touring/walking the grounds of the plantations, one can step back in the pages of history and momentarily be carried away in pleasant musings and daydreams. It can prove to be genuinely therapeutic.

Many people view the South as backward, slow, deprived, behind-the-times. In movies and television, oftentimes, the depiction of the Southerner is ignorant, "redneck," stupid. I don't suggest that some or a combination of these factors do not, in fact, exist. I suggest that the South and Charleston in particular is a "proud" people, and there is far more substance to the South than mint juleps and that strange drawl.

"Name"? One of the songs goes like this: "This time the South will rise again . . ." We are! And, we have a lot of Northerners helping us to do so. Please note I say, "Northerners." There is a difference between a "Yankee" and a "Northerner." The former does not carry a particular favorable connotation.

Where is Charleston, South Carolina? It is where the Ashley River and Cooper River meet to form the Atlantic Ocean! That is the answer given by any self-respecting resident of the area!

Can you help us find them?

BU honors Dick Lloyd, McCormick

By ANDREW HEINTZELMAN
Student Feature Writer

BU's 57th annual homecoming was not only a chance to celebrate the fifth Husky football victory of the year — although the victory was reason enough to celebrate — but a chance to recognize and honor some important people who have contributed to the University's "margin of excellence."

On Saturday morning, October 27, '84 graduate Scott Righter's efforts to have a sculpted Husky mascot were realized as the four-foot bronze Husky was unveiled during a ceremony on the Carver Hall lawn.

During halftime of the football game that afternoon, '62 graduate Richard Lloyd was officially inducted as the ninth member of the BU Athletic Hall of Fame.

And on Sunday afternoon, BU dedicated the McCormick Human Services Center to the University's former president, and now chancellor of the State System of Higher Education, James H. McCormick.

It was a "Thriller of a Weekend" — the theme took something from Michael Jackson's hit album — that began Friday night with an on-campus pep rally and fire works show. At the rally, head football Coach George Landis promised the crowd a homecoming victory, and sure enough, the Huskies tallied their fifth win of the year with a 14-3 defeat of Kutztown University at Redman Stadium the next day.

Friday night also featured the testimonial dinner that celebrated McCormick's "Decade of Leadership" at BU. The $40-a-plate dinner, held at the Sheraton Danville Inn, helped set up a $5,000 scholarship fund to help University students who "might not afford the education otherwise," McCormick said.

About half of the dinner's proceeds went into the new scholarship fund, which also has been boosted by the contributions of "several hundred other donors," according to John Walker, BU vice president for institutional advancement.

McCormick said he was pleased to see so many people at the dinner, but that he was not surprised. "I've sensed great support during all my years here in Bloomsburg," the chancellor said.

McCormick joined about 200 alumni, students, faculty, administrators and townspeople early the next morning for the unveiling of the husky, an animal known for being "alert and ready for either offense or defense, protecting his domain . . ."

Acting President Larry Jones said the "Husky statue stands tribute to many fine qualities" of BU, and he recognized the role of Righter in the Husky Statue Project.

The statue, which represents BU's spirit of competitiveness, is the result of a drive that Righter began and maintained.

Jones said, "I believe it is an excellent example of how one individual can make a difference. Scott's leadership and perseverance, his ability to convince others to support the project made today's event possible."

The statue was commissioned by the Community Government Association and was a gift of the classes of '84, '83, '81, '79, '78, '77, '75, '74, '73, and '65. Several class presidents from these graduating years were present for the unveiling.

PROUD MOMENT — Years of anticipation ended on Homecoming Day with the formal dedication of a bronze sculpture of the Husky mascot on the lawn of Carver Hall. Gifts from 10 classes financed the project, and seven of the classes were represented at the dedication ceremony. Seated are Kim Gobora '83 and Pat Kanouse Peattie '74. Standing are Doug McClintock '73, Carl Sheran '65, Scott Righter '84 (chairman of joint committee), Paul Seif '77, and Corey Waters '79. Other participating classes were '81, '79, '78, and '75. The statue, sculpted by E. Richard Bonham of Catawissa, stands 50 inches by 48 inches by 24 inches on a concrete base.

In his speech before the unveiling, Righter thanked those who had helped make the Husky statue dream come true, and he asked for a moment of silence in remembrance of Percival Roberts III, BU trustee and advisor of the Husky statue project, who died in early October.

Several artists submitted proposed Husky models over a year ago, and Bloomsburg High School art teacher E. Richard Bonham was chosen to create the final product.

The sculptor has worked with bronze, steel, gold and silver for twenty years and, speaking at the unveiling, called the Husky statue "the most difficult, challenging and enjoyable commission" of his career.

The statue stands on a concrete base on the southwest lawn of Carver Hall, and Righter says there are plans to install lights to illuminate it at night.

After the unveiling, alumni, students and faculty took to Market Street for the annual Homecoming Day Parade, with McCormick as the Grand Marshall. Floats were based on the "Thriller of a Weekend" theme and made use of the music and moves of Michael Jackson. A tombstone on one of the ten floats claimed Jackson had been "thrilled to death," while most other tombstones assured the death of Kutztown University's football team.

The winning float was by Lambda Chi Alpha and Theta Tau Omega, and the organizers received a rotating trophy and $250 for their efforts.

The Homecoming Sweetheart, selected from a group of 41, was Jean Pioreschi, representing Theta Tau Omega. Lori Sine, an elementary education major, was voted the Freshman Sweetheart.

As the streets of Bloomsburg cleared after the parade, the seats of Redman Stadium began to fill.

But before the game started, alumni and others gathered in Nelson Fieldhouse for an Ox Roast, catered by Hotel Magee. Alumni and the Barbershop Quartet from BU's Madrigal Singers provided entertainment.

This year's football game started with a new approach. To honor BU's active participation in the ROTC program, Major General Lawrence Keller, deputy director, state area command of the Pennsylvania Army National Guard, threw in the game ball. Jones discusses report

(Editor's Note: The following article by Dr. Larry W. Jones, interim president of Bloomsburg University, discusses the report of the Study Group on the Conditions of Excellence in American Higher Education entitled, "Involvement in Learning: Realizing the Potential of American Higher Education." This report was developed over the past year by Dr. Kenneth P. Mortimer, currently executive assistant to the president of Pennsylvania State University and six nationally known colleagues in higher education. The full text of their report was printed in the October 24, 1984 issue of the Chronicle of Higher Education.)

A thoughtful reading of this report identifies many issues and recommendations deserving the serious attention of the various university constituencies. One quite naturally, of course, tends to view the recommendations in terms of the educational process at Bloomsburg University specifically and within Pennsylvania in general.

The report offers suggestions for improvement in all aspects of higher education from students and faculty to external governing agencies and legislatures. Throughout, the emphasis is on students and direct and indirect influence activities occurring within the academic environment have upon them.

The American system of higher education is the most complex and advanced in the world. It is an important national resource of which we can be proud. However, the authors of the report suggest this resource has not yet realized its full potential. (Page 35)

The authors write "that the United States must become a nation of educated people. Its citizens should be knowledgeable, creative and open to ideas. Above all, they should learn how to learn so they can pursue knowledge throughout their lives and assist their children in the same quest." (35)

To realize this goal, access to higher education should be extended to more persons regardless of age. Along with access, students must receive a quality education which demands high level learning experiences. These experiences include meaningful contact with faculty, high standards of student performance, and the opportunity to choose from diverse educational programs.

Many of the ideas presented confirm what has been found from research but often neglected in practice within many institutions. The many specific steps suggested for realizing the full potential of higher education within the United States are very clear and will be useful as we plan to meet the future needs of students and society.

Changes in higher education

Within the past twenty years higher education in the United States has undergone a series of drastic changes. Bloomsburg University, in many respects, mirrors these. For example, more than half of the nation's undergraduates are women, and forty percent are over 25 years of age (at Bloomsburg approximately 20 percent of our students are in this category).

Nationally, about 60 percent of high school graduates continue in higher education. Pennsylvania enrolls a significantly smaller percentage than that. Following the national trend there is an increasing number of Bloomsburg students who attend on a part-time basis. Other changes have been the introduction of technology-assisted instruction, cooperative education and learning contracts.

We follow another national trend in that the concept of "in loco parentis" has all but disappeared. Faculty participation in governance has increased, and the concept of faculty development is being extended beyond the traditional sabbatical leave.

Other changes include an increase in the number of occupational fields in which students may major. There is, at the same time, a corresponding decrease in the number of bachelor's degrees awarded in arts and sciences. Both of these changes tend to result in providing students with a narrower, less liberal education. (36)

On the national scene the number of part-time faculty has increased significantly. Enrollment has increased nearly 400 percent in the past 35 years while the number of colleges and universities has increased only 60 percent. As a result, there are fewer opportunities for students to become involved with intellectual life and correspondingly less personal contact with faculty.

There is also a rapid deterioration of both the physical plant and the equipment used for instructing students.

Decisions to increase admission requirements as one means of raising academic standards is described as "an inappropriate response to recommendations for more rigor in subject matter preparation." (37)

Even without extensive reflection, many alumni who have graduated within the past 25 to 35 years can readily identify with a number of these changes.

Increasing student involvement

One of the many goals necessary to improve the potential learning possibilities offered by higher education suggests that we need to determine what students actually learn and how much students grow as a result of exposure to higher education. To measure educational excellence, student outcomes such as knowledge, intellectual capacity and skills must be defined.

The writers contend that the "quality of undergraduate education could be significantly improved if America's colleges and universities would apply existing knowledge about three critical conditions of excellence — (1) student involvement, (2) high expectations, and (3) assessment and feedback." (37)

Student involvement is viewed as a very important means by which students learn and persist in their college careers. They must know what is expected of them if learning is to be enhanced. Their direct involvement is considered to be a prime factor in the student retention rate.

At Bloomsburg, a continuing effort is made to include students at all levels of discussion and policy development within the institution. As a possible result, Bloomsburg University's retention rate is approximately twice that for similar types of institutions nationally.

While institutions should state their expectations and outline the standards for students to meet, they also must access the outcomes of the educational process. The authors believe that "students respond positively to information on their performance in relation to institutional expectations, and, as a consequence, are likely to become more involved in learning." (38-40)

A number of recommendations are provided for increasing student involvement, realizing high expectations from students, and for assessing and providing feedback. Many of these recommendations are already being implemented at Bloomsburg University in one way or another. Other ideas will be investigated and incorporated as appropriate.

Realizing high expectations

In addition to the common theme of student involvement, the concept of a liberal education is specifically addressed. The curricula for four-year professional programs examined by the authors revealed few opportunities for students to develop the capacities and knowledge expected of students earning the baccalaureate degree. The authors believe that "a broader liberal arts background will enrich the experiences for the students."

Students need an education that enables them to adapt to a changing world, to think critically, to synthesize large quantities of new information, and to master language skills. Remedial courses should be designed to insure students success in the upper division of college. Fortunately, Bloomsburg University has maintained a strong liberal arts component which is required of all baccalaureate degree students.

Assessing and providing feedback

The third component of this report deals with the assessment of the learning process which can assist faculty in improving their effectiveness in working with students. The more information known about students as freshmen, the more effective academic and student service programs can be in providing the experiences necessary to achieve the outcomes desired by the institution.

Methods used in assessment should reflect the complexity with which college subjects are taught and learned, rather than evaluating on simplistic multiple choice examinations. (45) Assessment of teaching effectiveness should also be balanced without an overemphasis on research which can damage the effects on student learning.

The authors suggest that separate evaluations be used for students to rate their professors and for peer review. Additionally, students can provide an excellent source of feedback on the instructional materials used in academic programs such as course sequence, coverage, texts and the like. (46)

Implications for graduate schools

Recommendations are suggested for graduate schools and external agencies as well. Liberal arts education for undergraduates is again emphasized as the key contribution higher education makes to students' intellectual development.

Graduate students who ultimately serve as faculty at many institutions will be asked to teach general and interdisciplinary courses, thereby requiring them to draw on the breadth of the liberal arts and sciences.

The writers suggest that exposure in the undergraduate years eventually results in increased collegiality among faculties. Individuals better understand the intellectual interests, methods and perspectives of their colleagues, thus leading to better working relationships.

The integrity and autonomy of colleges remain critical to the establishment of an environment conducive to student learning and growth. (47) The authors suggest that legislators and other state officials be supportive of the need to minimize practices that breed distrust and cynicism in public colleges and universities.

Accrediting agencies often emphasize quantitative measures by which programs are evaluated. Little demand is made upon institutions to provide evidence of the degree of proficiency attained by students which the authors view as a more important function of the accreditation process.

Advice for students

The final section of the report includes special suggestions for action which students may take to make the most of their undergraduate opportunities. These include seeking out a faculty member who will serve as an intellectual mentor, advisor and friend, involving themselves in campus activities, and contributing to the life of the campus. It is recommended that serious thought should be given to attending college full-time for at least part of the students' career, even if there are family responsibilities.

At Bloomsburg University we believe we seriously attempt to involve students in the campus life in significant ways and encourage them to develop meaningful relationships with faculty. We are convinced this involvement is a major factor contributing to Bloomsburg's extraordinarily high retention rate.

The authors suggest three tests which students can use at certain points in their college careers to judge the adequacy of their education and, depending on the results, suggest steps to be taken to assure that their academic programs meet the high expectation of the tests. These tests are as follows:

Active students rewarded

Ten BU students have been awarded $300 scholarships by the Alumni Association in recognition of their contributions to the university through involvement in extracurricular activities.

A committee of BU alumni selected the recipients from a pool of applicants. Also considered were the academic records of the students.

The recipients:

Kerry Scott Boll, a speech communication/theatre major who expects to graduate in December 1985. He is the son of Mr. and Mrs. Ernest M. Boll of Schnecksville.

Joy Burgess, a junior business/accounting major. She is the daughter of Joyce C. Burgess of Downingtown.

Christine Campbell, a junior majoring in special education and education of the hearing impaired. Her parents are Mr. and Mrs. George Campbell of Kresgeville.

Grace Ann Coleman, a junior English/journalism major with a minor in speech. Her parents are Dr. and Mrs. P. B. Coleman of Lawton.

Christopher J. Hardinger, a business economics major who expects to graduate in December 1985. He is the son of Louise N. Hardinger and Dr. Judd McCune of Lancaster.

Edward H. Jameson, a sophomore majoring in environmental planning management. His parents are

Mr. and Mrs. William Jameson of Coatesville.

Marvin Metzger, a junior accounting major. His parents are Mr. and Mrs. Melvin Metzger of Watsonstown.

Kenneth M. Roberts, a junior majoring in business management. He is the son of Mrs. Glandnair Carier of Philadelphia.

Stephen F. Rohrbach, a sophomore majoring in business management. He is the son of Mr. and Mrs. Forrest Rohrbach of Emmaus.

Suzanne Shane, a senior mass communications/advertising and public relations major. Her parents are Mr. and Mrs. Samuel Shane of Springfield.

Society contributes to Hilgar fund

The Bloomsburg University Chapter of Delta Mu Delta Honor Society in Business Administration, is the latest to make a contribution to the Norman Hilgar Scholarship Fund. At their October meeting, the chapter membership voted unanimously to give $400 in memory of the loved and respected Bloomsburg educator.

A check was presented to children of Dr. Hilgar at the chapter's fall induction meeting on Sunday, November 11.

Dr. Hilgar taught accounting at BU from September 1956 until shortly before his death in April 1983. Among his many other contributions, he also served as chairperson of the Department of Business Administration from 1977 to 1980. Both he and his wife, Kay, who died in June 1982, were well known and loved in both the campus and larger Bloomsburg communities.

The Delta Mu Delta gift brings the fund's current total to $3,549, still short of the goal of $5,000. In an effort to generate more giving, the Delta Mu Delta membership and their advisor, Charles Chapman, ask chapter alumni to send a contribution. Chapman estimates that if the more than 600 chapter alumni would each give one dollar, the total Delta Mu Delta contribution would exceed $1,000.

A broader appeal is being made by the overseers of the fund. Any alumni, faculty or friends who knew Norm Hilgar, had him in class, were in a class he advised, or were associated in any other way are asked to send a contribution. Checks should be made payable to BUAA/Hilgar Fund. The goal is to reach $5,000 by May 1985, thereby providing a perpetual annual scholarship of at least $500.

Please make a contribution. It will be a lasting memorial to a very special man.

Outstanding nominees sought for alumni awards

All alumni of Bloomsburg University are invited to nominate fellow alumni for two different awards which will be presented on Alumni Weekend in June 1985.

The first award, created in 1948, is the Distinguished Service Award. Up to three are presented each year to alumni who have distinguished themselves in one or more of the following categories: (1) Service to Bloomsburg University and/or the Alumni Association; (2) Significant accomplishments within his/her profession; or (3) Outstanding contributions to Mankind in general.

This year, the Alumni Board of Directors is seeking nominations for a new award: The Young Alumnus(Alumna) of the Year Award. Up to two awards will be given to alumni who have not yet reached their 43rd birthday who satisfy the same criteria used in selecting Distinguished Service Award recipients. An additional consideration will be the nominee's potential for even greater service and/or achievements.

The Alumni Board encourages you to nominate deserving alumni for either award. Please send your letters of nomination to Francis A. Sell, Chairman, Awards and Recognition Committee, c/o Alumni Association, Bloomsburg University, Bloomsburg, PA 17815.

The deadline for nominations is January 15, 1985.

ROTC program growing at BU

By ANDREW HEINTZELMAN
Student Feature Writer

More and more BU students are considering Army and Air Force commissions as career alternatives, and many find additional incentive in scholarships and other financial support provided by the BU ROTC program.

The university's ROTC program is less than 10 years old, but there are 55 Army Cadets and 54 Air Force cadets in the BU squadrons. Numbers are not the only growing aspect of these programs, however, for the scope and quality are also improving.

The Army ROTC has a "bright future" at BU, according to LTC Thomas H. Eller, professor of military science at Bucknell University, the host ROTC school in the BU area. LTC Eller said, "Bloomsburg University is an excellent institution to develop a sound ROTC program." Because of the university's high academic standards, Eller added, "the students are competitive for scholarships and are the quality individuals the Army is seeking to commission as officers."

Army scholarships are offered to qualified students, and all students enrolled in the advanced course of study receive $100 a month from the Army. Cadet Robert Jankouskas, the platoon leader, is a senior business major and three-year scholarship recipient.

Leadership training and the development of military skills are the building blocks of the Army ROTC program. Classroom instruction is supplemented by field training exercise and leadership labs that are planned by the Army cadets.

The BU ROTC platoon also trains and provides a color guard for football games, homecoming activities, community parades and other functions.

At this year's homecoming, the entire BU ROTC program was honored as Major General Lawrence Keller, deputy director, state area command of the Pennsylvania Army National Guard, threw the game ball onto the field at the start of the annual homecoming football game.

CPT Mike Zurat, the Army officer assigned to BU, said the "Bloomsburg Cadet Corps is one of the best I've seen. The students are energetic, dedicated and dependable." Zurat added that the Cadet Corps is as big as it has ever been, but has plenty of room to grow.

The same situation exists in the Air Force ROTC program at BU. Beginning in 1978, only a few students participated in the program because it entailed an 80-mile round-trip to Wilkes College for ROTC instruction.

Because of growing interest, however, BU was designated a squadron by the Wilkes AFROTC unit by the 1980-81 school year, and Wilkes AFROTC instructors began teaching at BU once a week.

The on-campus teaching experiment was so successful — 24 students enrolled in the program that year — that the university approved on-campus instruction, which began in the fall of 1981. Since then, the squadron has grown to its present size of 54 cadets.

Like the Army ROTC program, the AFROTC squadron is also active on campus and in the community. Led by Lt. Colonel Robert F. Caffazzo, the students regularly participate as volunteer workers and donors in school blood drives. They have sponsored break-dance shows and have served as escorts in the Miss Northeastern Pennsylvania Scholarship Pageant.

Each year, the AFROTC squadron marches in the Wilkes-Barre Veterans' Day Parade and is traditionally active in BU's homecoming activities.

Last spring, the Arnold Air Society (AAS) at Wilkes College doubled in size when 20 BU students joined. AAS is a community service organization within AFROTC. Its members visit veterans' hospitals, host parties for disadvantaged children, answer telephones at public television station telethons and perform other services.

Among the social events the AFROTC participates in are annual semi-formal dinner-dances, and the annual Dining-Out. Cadets also go on base visits: last year they visited the Air Force Institute of Technology at Wright-Patterson Air Force Base, Ohio, and the Readiness Command headquarters at MacDill AFB, FL.

The AFROTC program is six years old and the Army ROTC, nine, and both Lt. Colonel Caffazzo and CPT Zurat are pleased with the advancements and growth of their programs. They expect more of the same in the future.

For more information on the BU AFROTC program, contact Lt. Colonel Caffazzo at 1-800-572-4444 extension 371 in Pennsylvania, or 1-800-537-4444 extension 371 from outside the state. For more on Army ROTC, contact CPT Zurat at 717-369-2132, or stop by the ROTC office in the rear of Elwell Hall.

"At the end of your sophomore year, pick up a recent issue of one of the comprehensive science magazines, such as "Scientific American," and see if you can explain to some friends not only the theories, methods and conclusions covered in the major articles but also the implications of the findings for the quality of human life, health, behavior, the economy, the environment, and hence, public policy and the law. If you cannot offer that explanation, use your subsequent electives to advance your knowledge to the point at which you can.

"At the beginning of your junior year of college, pick up a foreign newspaper — preferably one in a language you have studied — and see if you can recount to a friend the world, national, and cultural issues presented in that paper. If you cannot do so, use your discretionary time during the next two years to master the language and the cultural point of view that frames those issues.

"In the middle of your junior year of college, see if you can describe a high quality analysis of a particular set of data, texts, or artifacts in your major field. Then describe a high quality synthesis of information and theory from your major and minor fields. If you cannot perform either task, and if you cannot describe the criteria for 'high quality,' demand that your college give you the opportunity to reflect on and integrate your previous learning during your senior year." (49)

One implication of these tests is that students should use elective courses to explore academic fields in which knowledge is limited and to integrate what they have learned from the various disciplines. Upon graduation, students become important sources of information as to how well colleges and universities are doing their job. The authors suggest that students be asked to think critically about their educational experience and to make suggestions for change.

The authors suggest, and we at Bloomsburg agree, that during the remainder of this century and into the next, our nation will require citizens who have learned how to learn. There is a need for people to synthesize and reshape information, to analyze problems from many perspectives, and to share the knowledge and intellectual abilities in family, community and national life. The challenge to students is to be as involved as they can in their own education. The rewards are worth it.

Corporate gifts help university

Air Prod: Computer lab

Air Products and Chemicals, Inc., has made a $19,200 gift to Bloomsburg University for use in renovating the campus student computer center.

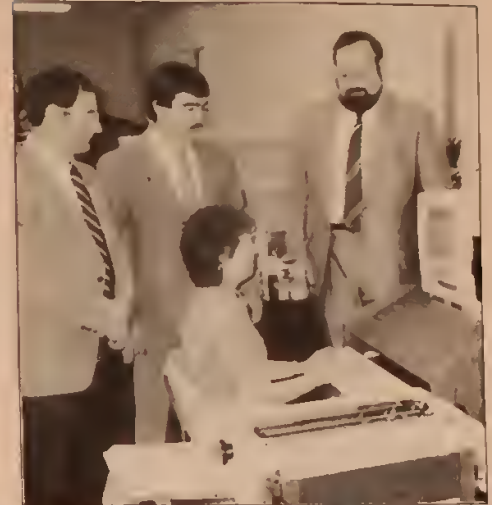

According to Anthony M. Ianiero, director of development at BU, the gift will be used to purchase 80 modern computer work stations and chairs for the public computer laboratories located in the Ben Franklin Building. "This gift will provide a better quality of computing service to the students of the university."

BU students currently have access to a main-frame computer and various micro-computers. The Air Products grant will enable students to develop a well-rounded background of a total information network in an aesthetically pleasing atmosphere, added Ianiero.

Air Products and Chemicals, Inc., located in Allentown, is a major international supplier of industrial gases and related equipment, chemicals and engineering services. The company and its subsidiaries have operations in 18 countries and employ approximately 17,000 people.

Alan Geer, manager of human resources planning at Air Products, said his company was "anxious to do its part in assisting in the development of mind power. It's a natural resource that's always in demand by corporations such as Air Products. This upgrading of the BU computer center will assist in preparing numerous students for the real world in a real-world-like atmosphere."

Doyle Dodson, BU's director of computer services, added, "This is only the beginning of the improvement in the computer labs serving our students. We're looking forward to upgrading the equipment and other aspects of the facility. This redirection of corporate gifts facilitates that accomplishment."

BF&F: Scholarships

In support of the many programs at Bloomsburg University, the Berwick Forge and Fabricating Corporation has joined a growing list of area businesses by donating to the school's general scholarship fund.

Howard McKinnon, president of the firm, announced BF&F's donation, stating, "We'd like to help draw the community of Berwick closer to the local university and make the people more aware of the vast number of quality programs at Bloomsburg. We feel this is one way that we can help the community in the long run and strengthen the strong ties that already exist between the university and Berwick."

Currently, there are 167 Berwick residents enrolled in programs at BU at both the undergraduate and graduate levels. In addition, many of the borough's residents participate in the large number of non-degree programs and mini-courses the school has to offer each year. Alumni Office records also indicate that 473 alumni of the institution are residing in Berwick.

"Our intention by donating scholarship dollars is to make an investment not only in higher education but the community as well," McKinnon added.

In conjunction with the announcement of the contribution, company officials have indicated they will use the school's five home football contests this fall as a vehicle to enter the monies into the scholarship program. At the conclusion of each of the games, a Berwick Forge and Fabricating "Offensive and Defensive Player of the Game" will be named with the contribution entered into the scholarship fund in the names of those outstanding performers.

"The recent resurgence of Bloomsburg football and the fact that several players from Berwick High School's great program have decided to continue their educations and football careers at the university make our participation especially appropriate," commented McKinnon.

The university's Director of Development, Anthony Ianiero, stated, "This gift is an expression of the growing interest and commitment by area business and industry in helping maintain the university's reputation for excellence."

DONATED COMPUTER — Shared Medical Systems of Malvern, Pa., a leading supplier of information systems for the health care industry, has given BU an IBM PC-XT (personal computer) with a graphic printer and color monitor worth nearly $7,000. SMS has hired more than 39 graduates in past years. Using the computer is Mary Ellen Marcinkus, a student. The others are Jean Kozicki, SMS employment representative, and Harold Frey, chairman of the computer and information science department.

CPT: Word processor

Students and office personnel of Bloomsburg University will benefit from $23,380 worth of word-processing equipment donated to the university by CPT Corporation through its regional distributor, Topp Telecom of Scranton.

The gift resulted from a proposal submitted by Stanley Carr, director of personnel, and the development office staff at the university. The donated equipment includes two CPT word processors, two rotary printers, a variety of accompanying software, and training services.

CPT is one of the country's leading manufacturers and distributors of office automation systems with sales and service in over 600 U.S. cities and 60 foreign countries.

Through the use of the equipment, senior business interns will gain "hands-on" experience in a modern office environment which should increase their employability in the labor market. Also, the new equipment will help several university secretaries upgrade their skills to keep pace with technological advances in the office workplace.

Free services

Free services for the hearing impaired are available through the speech, hearing and language clinic at Bloomsburg University.

Through professionals in the department of communication disorders and special education, rehabilitative out-patient services are provided for hearing impaired adults and children.

These services include aural rehabilitation and educational audiology. Auditory training, speech reading, and oral language training are part of the total rehabilitative management.

For additional information, call the BU clinic at (717) 389-4436.

manager of the student newspaper; and was involved with numerous other activities and organizations.

Lloyd was also the recipient of BU's most outstanding male athlete award while at the university.

The honoring of Lloyd continued Saturday night at the Homecoming Dinner Dance held at Caldwell Consistory on Market Street. Former head wrestling coach Russ Houk and others remembered Lloyd as a student.

Houk, who had performed the induction ceremonies, said he could remember walking through Centennial Gynasium, "and every night, Dick was in there, practicing his jump shots and so forth; and it wasn't even basketball season."

Alumni Director Doug Hippenstiel also thanked Lloyd for his help in New Jersey with talking to prospective BU students and meeting with other alumni, often serving as the host.

Lloyd, when he got a chance to speak, said he was glad to represent BU, but added that he was not representing the institution alone, but all the people that he knows and continues to meet when he visits his alma mater.

Over 200 alumni, administrators and others attended the dinner at Caldwell, with the classes of '54, '64, '74, and '79 celebrating their reunions.

Numerous alumni and guests received door prizes at the event. Mike Smith '69, was one of the bigger winners; he garnered a door prize as well as free tickets to the Ox Roast and the dinner dance itself.

Sunday was the day to honor McCormick with the official dedication of the James H. McCormick Human Services Center. Speaking at the ceremonies, interim President Dr. Larry Jones said the building "is a result of more than a decade of effort on the part of literally hundreds of persons." Jones said those involved included students, faculty, staff, alumni, legislators and many others, "and perhaps most importantly, Dr. James H. McCormick."

"Without his leadership and the combined efforts and hard work of many, many friends of the university, this building would not be possible."

McCormick agreed that the building was "a result of teamwork. It is one symbolic example of what can be done," he said.

On behalf of himself and his family, McCormick thanked the University community for the "love and caring that you have given us. What a privilege it was to serve this wonderful institution."

The McCormick Human Services Center is the 645th facility in the State System of Higher Education. The dedication ceremonies ended with the laying of the cornerstone at the front entrance. The time capsule placed inside the cornerstone features items from various eras of BU's history.

After the ceremonies, Homecoming festivities ended with the Annual Pops Concert at Haas Auditorium.

VISITING — Debra Ann Ruane, a senior accounting major from Hackettstown, N.J., talks with Chancellor James H. McCormick on a recent visit to BU. Debbie served many meals at Buckalew Place while the McCormicks lived there.

Winning play thrills BU fans

(Editor's Note: The 1984 Bloomsburg University Huskies captured the Eastern Division Championship by defeating West Chester on a dramatic play as the clock ran out. To tell the story, we have excerpted articles written by John Michaels, sports editor for the Press-Enterprise, Bloomsburg.)

WEST CHESTER — Some finishes are called fantastic; others are unbelievable or surprising.

Bloomsburg University's surprising 34-31 victory at West Chester Saturday afternoon was a fantastic feat accomplished by an unbelievable play.

The Huskies drove 95 yards in the final 45 seconds to pull out the win on quarterback Jay Dedeia's desperation 50-yard pass to freshman Curtis Still with no time remaining. Dedeia, who took the snap with five seconds showing, scrambled in his own backfield before firing the pass to Still, who was between two West Chester defenders.

It took a second or two before the official signalled touchdown to ignite a victory celebration that continued well into the night.

The come-from-behind win gives BU the Pennsylvania Conference's Eastern Division title and its first-ever berth in the "State Game" on November 17 at Hershey Stadium.

The players were not trying to be irreverent when they called the final play a "Hall Mary" pass. That's what the play's called when you throw a long pass and pray one of your players catches it for a touchdown.

For Husky captain Mike Jupina, the successful touchdown came after he knelt and said a prayer in the huddle as his teammates and coaches were on the sidelines designing the last-second play.

"I said a Hail Mary and then thought, 'this is stupid, it's never going to work,'" Jupina said. "But it did."

"Jay came in the huddle and called the play, 'Hail Mary on one.' That's what happened. She came through for us.

"It took a lot of time to develop, but we didn't quit. You can see on the film, the blocking and hustle by Jay. We didn't give up, we worked too hard."

Here's a play-by-play rundown of the winning drive:

Play No. 2 — Dedeia completes six-yard pass to Ken Liebel, who gets out of bounds at the BU 11 (0:31 left).

Play No. 3 — Dedeia and Liebel combine for 18-yard gain down the middle and first down at the 29 (0:22).

Play No. 4 — Dedeia hits Kevin Grande for a six-yard gain to 35, where Grande gets out of bounds (0:14).

Play No. 5 — Dedeia scrambles and breaks out of pocket, gaining 15 yards to midfield before stepping out of bounds (0:05).

Play No. 6 — Dedeia scrambles in backfield, first running left and then right before throwing to freshman Curtis Still in the end zone for game-winning touchdown.

With four receivers in the end zone, it's hard to determine who the pass receiver is. It takes almost five seconds before official announcement that Still scored the touchdown.

After a touchdown is declared, Huskies explode in celebration on the field. Players jump on Still, others do cartwheels on the field, while others fall on their knees in prayer.

"Last year, our program took a very, very big step by beating West Chester," said BU Coach George Landis. "This year, we took the giant step we needed to take against the same football team."

"I don't know why things happened the way they happened. In all honesty, it's the kind of game you'd have to say it's a shame anybody should lose. It was a great, great football game."

"Our kids didn't quit. They could have quit in the first half, but they just kept on coming back and fighting and fighting and fighting. God knows why the last one was completed, I don't know."

 George Landis can't walk on water or leap tall buildings in a single bound. But he is a miracle-worker.

When Bloomsburg University hired the Dartmouth assistant as football coach three years ago, he was expected to turn the program around. After being the doormats in the Pennsylvania Conference's Eastern Division for too many years to remember, the Huskies wanted to gain respectability.

Landis, his staff and players did more than that. In three short years, they are atop the division. Champions all.

Husky Club plays key role

"We're #1." "Hershey here we come." "State Champions." These are but some of the chants being heard on our campus. The first Eastern Conference football championship has generated excitement on campus and in the community not experienced before. Now is the time I wish our alumni and friends of the athletic program were here to share in the excitement. It certainly has been a long time coming. In this regard, your support and contributions have paid off.

Not to be outdone, the women's Field Hockey Team completed an undefeated season, won the Pennsylvania Conference Championship, and, at this writing, plays Trenton State College in the semi-finals of the NCAA Division III Championships.

By the time this edition goes to print, the results of these two events will be history. Someday I would like to establish a "Hot Line" for athletic results. If you have any feelings on this, please let them be known. If we had it in place now, our faithful followers would be able to get the results immediately.

We are currently setting up spring alumni Chapter tours with some of our coaching staff. If your Chapter would be interested in our visiting your Chapter, possibly showing a highlight film, please let me know.

The following is an article by Art Carucci that appeared in the local newspaper. It deals with scholarships and what is happening at Bloomsburg University. After reading the article, I encourage you to support the Athletic Department's scholarship efforts through your donation and membership to the Alumni Association/Athletics and Husky Club. If you haven't given in the past or haven't given this year, please join. I am sure you are as proud of our programs as we are!

In 1974, a group of interested town residents, along with faculty and alumni from Bloomsburg State College made the first concerted effort to form a booster club that would represent all the college's athletic teams.

It was a modest beginning for the Husky Club, the name chosen to designate a small organization offering financial assistance to student athletes at BSC.

Although well-meaning in purpose, the club's numbers in membership and assistance were still too small to affect the majority of Bloomsburg's teams.

But just as the school's athletic department has changed, so has the Husky Club in terms of influence within the athletic program, university, and community.

When Roger Sanders took over as Bloomsburg University's athletic director in 1982, he inherited a program that had been successful in important gate-receipt sports such as wrestling and basketball, but which was also a disaster in the major one — football. With a slumping football team, the club and community didn't offer support until the winter months.

That trend changed with the addition of new personnel and Sanders' enthusiasm. The results showed a sharp increase in interest for the athletic department and the solution was as basic as it seemed, according to Pat Haggerty, one of the Husky Club's initial members. "What happened was Roger brought a new spirit into the picture," he said. "People began to see a real effort was being made to build winning teams, and they decided to join in and help."

During the transformational process, the Husky Club became a driving force toward the development of scholarship funds and marketing techniques that have put Bloomsburg back in the pack with the competing state universities. Since 1982, memberships have risen to over 500, with local businesses, community members, and university alumni becoming increasingly more involved in the promotional campaign.

"Going into this job," said Sanders, "a major concept was bringing the town and university closer together through the Husky Club. The cooperation of the school and community with regard to the club has helped in that respect."

The methods used thus far have not been revolutionary as an idea, but effective in results. A combination of fund-raisers and giveaways, along with an incentive package to the community, has enabled the athletic department to form a scholarship fund, while also aiding the university in projecting a better image to the town.

"A lot of schools in the conference are starting to look at us as a model for this sort of thing," said Sanders. "As far as I'm concerned, though, it's only the beginning of what we're going to do."

An important innovation to this new beginning for the Husky Club is the incentive package. For a donation ranging from $150-$3,000, community members are entitled to season tickets for football, basketball and wrestling, as well as a donor plaque, club, jacket, invitations to special events and a health club membership.

The money raised by the club channels into a fund designed to benefit Bloomsburg's six highlighted sports — football, wrestling, softball, women's swimming, along with men's and women's basketball.

However, Sanders is quick to point out that the university's other 12 teams are not neglected. "With the six-team system, a greater opportunity has arisen for the remaining sports to receive aid," he said. "Right now, all money we make through concession sales goes toward women's sports. The other teams are also given a better chance to start fund-raisers and receive profits from our summer camp programs."

With the emergence of the football team as a prominent force in the conference, it might be assumed a majority of the funds are sent in that direction. However, the facts prove otherwise.

"If you look down our roster, you'll find 15 percent of the players receive financial assistance based solely on football," said head coach George Landis. "The rest get the same any other student is entitled to. So all things considered, I think the funds are equally distributed among the eligible teams."

"One item you have to keep in mind," added Sanders, "is that we don't have the resources to set up a scholarship fund for all 18 teams. Sure, we'd like to, but we need to focus on the teams the community turns out to see the most."

An additional event which Sanders and the Husky Club have begun this year, in order to give players of those sports more recognition, is a weekly luncheon. With steadily improving attendance during the first seven weeks, Sanders said the luncheons will continue into the winter months.

"It's just another way we've tried to improve the overall university-community relationship," he said.

(Editor's Note: The following article about Frances Blöse '24 was written by Kay Rohrer, a staff writer for the Lancaster Sunday News.)

"No retired person needs to be lonely if they don't want to be. There is always someone who needs something, whom they can serve."

This is the philosophy of 79-year-old Frances Blöse. She has lived in Cornwall Manor near Lebanon for nine years, and just because it is a retirement community doesn't mean she retired from life.

A graduate of Bloomsburg and Kutztown state colleges, Mrs. Blöse was a teacher. She taught art and later sixth grade. She also loved all kinds of music and still finds it is an outlet. "I play to amuse myself and annoy the neighbors," she said. "I'm not a finished musician, but I enjoy it." She also enjoys knitting and crocheting as hobbies, and gives her projects away for further enjoyment.

Cornwall Manor has provided all the activity that Mrs. Blöse can keep up with. She spends one afternoon a month in the library checking out books and doing the various library duties. For eight years she sang in the choir.

One of her favorite things is the visits that she makes in the health center. She spends time with people whose families can't come to see them very often and sometimes will do the shopping for friends who can't get out.

Mrs. Blöse is also a "resident friend." In this job she greets people who have recently moved into Cornwall Manor and helps them to become oriented to the community. "I introduce them to whatever they need to become acclimated," she said.

"I'm very proud of us," she said of her friends at Cornwall Manor. The residents donated over $600 to the Leukemia Foundation of Central Pennsylvania. Mrs. Blöse is in charge of the collection. She has it so well organized that she insists it isn't even that much work.

Speaking is one of the hobbies that has been to the benefit of the White Haven School for the Mentally Retarded near Hazleton. She gives book reviews at women's clubs, Friends of the Library, Business and Professional Women and churches. She also uses her extensive collection of Hummel figurines to present a Christmas program called "From Bethlehem to Calvary." She presents this to alumni groups, civic organizations, the residents of Cornwall Manor, and in churches.

The honorariums from these speaking engagements go to White Haven School. Why there? It seems that a nephew that Mrs. Blöse and her late husband, Carl, raised spent time working as a social worker at White Haven. She had several pen pals among the students at White Haven and went to visit them.

The students at White Haven wanted handbells. "And, you know, fools rush in. . ." Mrs. Blöse said, laughing. She made it her project to pay for the handbells that would cost about $1,000. She made items to sell and collected coupons, and then she put the programs together with the idea of donating the honorariums to the school. It worked, although by the time she had enough money the cost of the bells had gone up several hundred dollars.

"Now when I go up to White Haven and they play the bells, I sit and cry. . ." she confessed.

A member of the Lebanon Business and Professional Women, Mrs. Blöse was selected as woman of the year in the 1970's. She also received the Silver Award from the Leukemia Foundation in 1980 for her efforts in their behalf.

Mrs. Blöse is on the board of Cornwall Manor Society. She works with other women in the churches of the Eastern Pennsylvania Conference of the Methodist Church to help support the health center at Cornwall Manor. They hold bazaars and other fund-raising endeavors. She is also on the church board of Cornwall Methodist Church, where she is a member.

"You see," she said casually, "I'm really not an idle morial."

Pauline R. (Ranck) Eyerly '27 died on July 29, 1984. Mrs. Eyerly was a graduate of Bloomsburg High School. She attended Bucknell University for one year before entering BU. Known as Rankie, she was a devoted member of the Delta Phi Sigma Sorority. The 1927 Obitler states: Small of Stature, Great of Mind, Always Pleasant, Gentle and Kind.

1928

Leona C. (Reichenbach) Epler '28 died on August 17, 1984.

Born April 14, 1908 at Sunbury, she was the daughter of the late William O. and Viola Gullinger Reichenbach. She was married to J Gordon Epler, with whom she celebrated a 55th wedding anniversary in May.

Mrs. Epler was graduated from Northumberland High School in 1925. She taught in Rush Township schools for two years and retired from teaching in the Kelly Township schools.

She was a member of Christ's Evangelical Lutheran Church, Lewisburg, was an advisor to 4-H clubs in Kelly Township, and volunteered at the Buffalo Valley Lutheran Village.

Surviving besides her husband are a son, Donald, Harrisburg; a daughter, Mrs. Beverly Harvey, Lewisburg RD 3; seven grandchildren and two great-grandchildren; and a sister, Mrs. Dorothy Matthews, Harrisburg. Three brothers preceded her in death.

Sara (Helser) Reigle '29 died on September 14, 1984. She had been in failing health for several years and was hospitalized on numerous occasions.

Born September 3, 1906, in Buffalo Township, Union County, she was the daughter of the late William and Susan Jodon Heiser. She was married in 1939 to John Peter Reigle, who died in 1974.

Mrs. Reigle was a 1925 graduate of Lewisburg High School.

She retired in 1969 after 36 years employment as an elementary school teacher in the Mifflinburg Area School District.

She was a member of the Lutheran Congregation of the Mazeppa Union Church since 1918; a member of the Sunshine Sunday school class of the church for more than 60 years; a member of the Crimson-Rebekah Lodge, Lewisburg; Union County Retired Teachers Association; and the Pennsylvania Retired Public School Employees Association.

She is survived by one daughter, Mrs. Cherry Will of Lewisburg RD2; and one grandson. She was preceded in death by one brother.

Elfed "Vid" Jones '30 proudly reports that his daughter, Gayle Jones Reed, has been selected as "Art Educator of the Year" by the Art Educators Association of New Jersey.

Although Gayle is a Kutztown graduate, she has a Bloomsburg connection: she designed the seal and mace used by Bloomsburg State College and served as assistant professor of art at BSC in the early 1960s.

Presently an art teacher at the Wayne Hills High School in Wayne, N.J., she has had experience teaching on all grade levels from kindergarten through college and adult school.

She received a master's degree in art education and fine arts at Penn State and has completed additional courses at Bucknell University and William Paterson College.

Gayle has been art coordinator in the Wayne Schools since inception of the position and has taught on the elementary and secondary level. She is also serving as assistant girls' basketball team this year.

She has done commercial book jacket designs for a leading publishing company and has won prizes and awards for her art work, including a design accepted by the United States Postal Service for a commemorative stamp. She has also exhibited weaving and fabric collages in various galleries. She has traveled throughout the United States, Mexico, Canada and Europe, visiting museums, collecting folk art, presenting information through workshops, magazine articles and lectures.

She has served the Art Educators of New Jersey as Teen Arts liaison, newsletter editor, president of the state organization, and chairman of the AENJ conference. In addition, she established "Art Issues," a publication to complement the newsletter with articles, student art work, and critical issues.

She was chairman of a committee for the National Art Education Association convention held in New York City in 1982. She has also designed the logos of various state conferences and has provided banners for various conferences. She has conducted workshops on both the local and state levels.

Richard (Dick) Lloyd '62 became the ninth person inducted into the Bloomsburg University Hall of Fame at ceremonies during halftime of the Bloomsburg-Kutztown football contest on October 27.

Lloyd currently serves as director of annual giving at Rutgers University in New Brunswick, New Jersey.

While working toward a bachelor of science degree in business education at BU, Lloyd participated in several student activities.

He captained the Huskies' basketball team in his junior and senior seasons. He is sixth on the school's all-time leading scorers list with 1,339 career points.

In addition, Lloyd served as president of the junior and senior classes. He was also a member of the college council (student government) and the athletic council. He was vice-president of both the men's resident council and the Phi Sigma Pi (professional fraternity), treasurer of the varsity club, circulation manager of the school newspaper and sports editor of the institution's yearbook, "The Obiter."

For his contributions to the college community, Lloyd was selected to the 1962 edition of "Who's Who Among Students in American Colleges and Universities," was also a recipient of the college's service key award, the Redman Trophy — given to the school's outstanding male athlete — and was given a lifetime athletic pass.

After receiving his degree, Lloyd taught business education at Danville High School and later at Great Valley (Pa.) High School. He also worked as an accountant with Main, Lafrentz and Co., Certified Public Accountants, in Philadelphia.

In 1965, he was named assistant basketball coach and physical education instructor at Rutgers.

From 1971 to 1973, Lloyd served as the Scarlet Knights' head coach. Upon retiring from coaching, he joined the office of the university secretary and was appointed as director of alumni relations, responsible for handling affairs between the university and its more than 90,000 alumni. Leann Hornung, '65 was named the American Vocational Association Region I Vocation Teacher of the Year at the AVA Region I Conference held in Portland, Maine, October 4-6, 1984. The AVA Vocational Teacher of the Year Award is given to a classroom instructor representing a division of vocational education and teaching full-time in a vocational education program. This award recognized those classroom teachers who are currently providing outstanding vocational education programs for youth or adults in their respective fields and communities. The recipient must have made significant contributions toward innovative, unique programs, and shown evidence of development and progress in vocational education programs at the local, district, state, and national levels.

In Delaware, Leann has been active with the Delaware Aemisory Council for Career and Vocational Education. She has also served as president of both the Delaware Vocational Association and the Delaware Business Education Association and has been awarded the honors of Delaware Vocational Teacher of the Year and Delaware Business Educator of the Year. In addition, she has earned recognition on the national level by serving as chairperson of the national Office Education Association Competitive Events Advisory Committee.

Leann is an office occupations teacher-coordinator at Wilmington High School in the Red Clay Consolidated School District, where she has integrated word processing into the business education curriculum and where she coordinates the office occupations cooperative education program.

Leann's address is 159 Rockrose Drive, Newark, Delaware 19711.

Peggy L. Stenk '65, the state Department of Education's chief of teacher education, was in Bloomsburg this fall to address a meeting of the Susquehanna Valley Reading Council.

In her presentation, she said reaction to the state's tougher teacher certification regulations has been surprising. Teacher unions were expected to oppose state tests for certification.

Instead, the Pennsylvania State Education Association and state chapter of the American Federation of Teachers supported the tests, but spoke out against the requirement that teachers must take six more college credits every five years.

The test and the added course requirements, plus a revamping of teacher education programs at universities, are expected to improve teaching in Pennsylvania, Stenk said.

"The real impact is what happens with teachers . . . if it provides momentum that makes changes in the classroom," she said.

But the rules don't go into effect until 1987. And they don't apply to teachers who are already certified, or to those who will become certified in the next three years.

Stenk says her department will be very busy in the next three years as the statewide testing program is prepared. The state is also putting into place a mentor system in which new teachers are paired with experienced ones in a state-mandated system that will lead to permanent certification.

Because teacher certification takes three years, the effect of the tougher regulations won't be felt until 1990, she said.

Pennsylvania now joins 30 states already requiring a teacher certification test. The Pennsylvania test will cover basic skills, general knowledge, professional knowledge, and knowledge of the subject in which a person seeks certification.

Stenk said the test doesn't measure teacher behavior or effectiveness in the classroom. "What to teach and how to teach it will be tested," she said.

She says the department the Department of Education was always concerned about getting better teaching, but finds recent national studies were a catalyst. "Now we know more about what it takes to be a good teacher."

Stenk started her career in the Shamokin schools after a non-traditional undergraduate career at Bloomsburg. She attended Bloomsburg for two years, then married and had five children. She was divorced and then returned to Bloomsburg, graduating in 1965. She earned a master's degree at Bloomsburg in 1968 and a doctorate at Penn State in 1973.

Alumni Fund short $28,000

The 1984 Annual Fund of the BU Alumni Association stood at $144,964 on October 26, according to John W. Thomas '47, alumni president.

The goal for the campaign, which ends on December 31, is $185,000.

Of the total goal, $90,000 is needed in the general fund in order to support alumni programs and projects. For example, $15,000 is needed to publish The Alumni Quarterly.

Thomas reported that on October 26, the general fund had reached $62,176. Nearly $28,000 in alumni contributions is needed by December 31 to cover budgeted projects and services.

Since September 1, ten additional classes have surpassed their goals:

Class of 1932 — 32 alumni contributed $1,064, topping their goal of $984.

Class of 1942 — 32 alumni contributed $1,594 (goal: $1,242).

Class of 1946 — 13 alumni contributed $455 (goal: $405).

Class of 1949 — 44 alumni contributed $1,680 (goal: $1,579).

Class of 1950 — 52 alumni contributed $1,635 (goal: $1,623).

Class of 1954 — 29 alumni contributed $907 (goal: $786).

Class of 1955 — 24 alumni contributed $723 (goal: $685).

Class of 1969 — 139 alumni contributed $4,241 (goal: $3,495).

Class of 1970 — 136 alumni contributed $3,375 (goal: $3,220).

Class of 1973 — 124 alumni contributed $4,135 (goal: $3,007).

Three other classes — 1922, 1944, and 1962 — are within $100 of reaching their goals.

Classes that topped their goals by September 1 were 1933, 1934, 1936, 1967 and 1972.

Still working toward their goals are the following classes:

1905 — One contributor, $100 toward goal of $174.

Search narrowed to 20

The search for a new Bloomsburg University president has been narrowed to about 20 candidates, according to Robert W. Buehner Jr., search committee chairman.

Names of the candidates have not been released. It is not known if Interim President Larry Jones is among the candidates.

Because of confidentiality considerations, Buehner said, names will not be released until finalists have been selected.

"By the September 15 application deadline, we had received more than 100 applications and nominations for the BU presidency," Buehner said.

"The candidates represented a wide geographic area — from as far away as northern Maine and southern California. Also, several applicants were from Pennsylvania," he added.

"The applicants and nominees also represented a broad spectrum of experiences and academic backgrounds that ranged from university chief executives to botany and Bach experts."

Next on the 12-member search committee's agenda will be telephone interviews with each candidate to select those who will be invited to the campus for personal interviews.

According to procedures established by the Board of Governors of the State System of Higher Education, the search committee will make its recommendations to the university's Council of Trustees.

Trustees will in turn recommend three candidates to the SSHE chancellor and Board of Governors.

Buehner said the search committee and other officials involved will conclude the search process "in sufficient time so that the successful candidate will take office no later than July 1985."

The new president will succeed Dr. James H. McCormick, who left the post in July 1983 to become the first chancellor of the SSHE.

Acting dean

Dr. Robert Yori '57, chairperson of the Department of Accounting at BU, has been appointed acting dean of the College of Business, effective January 2, 1985.

Yori will serve as dean until a permanent selection is made by next summer. Dr.

Emory Rarig Jr., who is retiring from the deanship to return to the classroom, will be on sabbatical leave during the spring semester. He will then join the department of marketing and management next fall.

Yori joined the university faculty in 1969 after serving as chairman of the business department in the Lehigh Area School District.

After receiving his B.S. degree in business education at BU in 1957, he earned an MBA degree from Lehigh University in 1968. He holds a doctorate in accounting from Penn State.

Yori became department chair in 1982. His experience in departmental affairs and his administrative knowledge highly qualify him for the acting role, according to Dr. Kalyan Ghosh, acting provost and vice president for academic affairs.

Alumni meet in Philly

The October meeting of the Philadelphia Chapter of BU Alumni was held at Wanamaker's with President Harry J. Gabora Jr. chairing the meeting.

The treasurer's report was given by Connie Gabora. As usual, contributions were made to the Sunshine Fund. This helps to provide a scholarship each year to a youngster going to BU. Other donations to the university have also been made from this fund, which has been sustained for 54 years by the tremendous generosity of chapter members.

Following the business meeting, Vice President Dan McGrew introduced his son, Joe, who presented a program on the Molly Maguires. Joe is a graduate of Haverford College, where he majored in history.

Others attending the meeting were Marle Morgan (secretary), Sadie Mayernick, Huberte Puggiano, Lucy Ennis, Mary McGrew, Dot Cooper, Debbie Zack, Jim Gledhill, Chris Aiello, Peg Wilson, Margaret Minner, Catherine Evans, Sue Little, Betsey Wollam, Suzanne Michaels, Roy Beyers, Mary Lou Beyers, Rosemarie Schiefer and Peggy Burns.

Meetings in 1985 will be held on April 20 (Wanamaker's), June 8 (Lakeside Inn, Spring City), July 13 (Hack's Point, Maryland), October 12 (Wanamaker's) and December 14 (Wanamaker's).

Services improve

By ANDREW HEINTZELMAN
Student Feature Writer

It'll be like "having the family physician" available when the McCormick Human Services Center opens and two Bloomsburg area doctors begin their jobs at the new Student Health Center, according to its administrative director, Kay Campese.

Raymond F. Nungesser, M.D., is the new University Physician, and Eric W. Longenbach, M.D., is his associate.

But that isn't all the quickly expanding BU health program is providing. New services include a renegotiated contract with the Bloomsburg Hospital, which has eliminated the $24 emergency room fee; a reduced cost for gynecological health care at Bloomsburg Family Planning; service contracts with two physical therapists to provide better care for injuries related to athletics; and a new contract with the Bloomsburg Ambulance Association to provide free service for faculty and on- and off-campus students.

When Campese became administrative director last year, she said an evaluation of university health center costs was made on a state-wide basis, and BU's was the lowest. "With a minimal increase," she said, "we knew we could provide much more," and student fees went from $12 to $17 per semester. The fees pay for salaries, equipment and other costs of the center.

The center is an auxiliary service of the university, as designed by the Pennsylvania legislature. As such, Campese says, "what students pay, they're getting back."

The center has also hired a secretary/receptionist so that nurses can concentrate on health care, and Campese said another part-time registered nurse will soon be hired to provide service on Saturday and Sunday from 10 a.m. to 2 p.m. At this time, the center in Kehr Union is closed on weekends.

LONGENBACH

NINGESSER

Campese said that after the state-wide analysis, an ad hoc health services group was organized to look at the primary changes and costs of the changes. The ad hoc committee later joined with student representatives to form a search-and-screen committee to select the doctors.

Doctors Nungesser and Longenbach will be able to write prescriptions for students or give nurses verbal orders to do so, saving the students time and money, Campese said.

The doctors, both staff physicians at Bloomsburg Hospital, have a private practice in general medicine in nearby Millville and are certified with the American Board of Family Practice. They are graduates of Jefferson Medical College, Nungesser in 1980 and Longenbach, 1981, and both served their residencies at Williamsport Hospital.

Campese said the doctor's ages should help them communicate well with students.

Campese said the Bloomsburg Hospital has been extremely cooperative with the contract negotiations. The contract has been reduced by $10,000 because of the on-campus doctors. Students remain responsible for any emergency treatment, X-rays, lab studies, physical therapy consultation or hospital admissions.

Health center personnel will work with the hospital to coordinate any admissions, Campese said.

The new contracts with the family planning center and the Bloomsburg Ambulance Association have also saved students money, Campese said.

'TRIPLETS' — Dr. Lynne C. Miller (second from left) of the BU Department of Biological and Allied Health Sciences stands proudly with three of her recently graduated Master of Science degree students. With smiles of accomplishment are Gerald E. Williams (left), Jane R. Matsko, and James S. Phillips. "The Master of Science thesis option is a very rigorous program," notes Dr. Miller, a medical parasitologist. "It is designed to develop one's spirit of inquiry, sound judgment, persistence, self-confidence and individual responsibility, all of which are needed to conduct successful experiments." This program is intended to prepare the student for either admission to a research-oriented doctoral program in biology or employment in a biology-related area. Some of the research projects were developed as side projects from faculty research grants Dr. Miller has been awarded over the past several years. As for supervising triplets again, Dr. Miller says, "It was intense and exhausting, but it was equally enriching and rewarding. If the students were as exceptional as these three, I'd start tomorrow!"

Zenith offers special discount

Attention, Alumni!

You can save over $1,000 on a Zenith personal computer package and help Bloomsburg University get $500 worth of computer hardware absolutely free!

Zenith Data Systems is making a special offer to BU and its alumni.

First, BU alumni get a 20 percent discount on the Z-150 PC — that amounts to a $560 savings — and two of America's top-selling software packages worth $570 absolutely free. That's a $1,130 savings!

Second, Zenith will credit another $500 to Bloomsburg University, in your name, toward the list price of any Zenith computer system purchased by the university in the next six months.

Watch your mail for details and order form.

More orders needed for directory

Are you interested in buying a BU alumni directory?

We have tentatively arranged with Taylor Publishing Company to print a directory for delivery in early October 1985 — if we can get orders for at least 2,000 copies. To date, about 400 alumni have indicated an interest in buying a directory.

The directory would be a soft-cover, 8½- by 11-inch book with about 256 pages. The price would be $12.50 (including delivery) — about seven dollars less than the soft-cover directory published in 1979.

If you would like to buy a directory, please fill in the enclosed coupon and return it to the Alumni Office. Please send no money at this time.
