BU seeks $12 million for projects

The Bloomsburg University Council of Trustees has asked the State System of Higher Education for nearly $12 million for library expansion, student housing and general rehabilitation of facilities.

The requests include $7.5 million to expand Andrus Library, $3.45 million to build housing for up to 300 students, and $950,000 to repair "aging" campus buildings and worn roads.

The requests were forwarded to the office of Chancellor James H. McCormick following the Council's September meeting in the new McCormick Center for Human Services.

During the meeting, Administrative Vice President Robert Parrish pointed out that there are only 400 study spaces in the library and, during finals exams, students are studying on the floor, in the aisles and everywhere.

Interim President Larry Jones added that the library expansion involves several hundred more study spaces, additional "stacks" on book holding areas, and new electronic information links to other libraries. "The library was designed for 3,000 students but is being used by 6,000 students," he said.

Preliminary drawings for additional student housing call for townhouse-style apartments, possibly two to seven buildings in all, instead of the traditional dormitory concept. Total capacity is seen for housing up to 300 students.

The apartment complex would serve chiefly upperclassmen, graduate students and married students at a proposed site on the upper campus. Placement of three students in existing on-campus dormitories designed for double occupancy, plus a waiting list, bring the housing shortage into critical focus, according to school statistics.

Additional arguments for the project are found in the present zoning regulations that limit expansion of student housing in Bloomsburg. Some students are forced to deal with absentee landlords and poor living conditions, a preliminary school study reveals.

Initial sketches call for two-student capacity in 30 of the proposed apartments and four-student capacity for 60 of the apartments. A breakdown of tentative costs lists construction of the 59,500 square-foot complex at $2.97 million, with about $300,000 to be set aside for contingencies and another $178,500 for architect's fees. If the funding is cleared in Harrisburg, final designs and costs will be determined by the State Department of General Services.

Nearly $1 million in maintenance funds is needed, according to Parrish, for roof work on Nelson Fieldhouse, Centennial Gym, and Waller Administration Building. In addition, roads and parking areas are in need of rehabilitation and resurfacing.

When Chancellor McCormick was in Bloomsburg in December to receive formal president emeritus honors from the university, he said he welcomed the proposed projects and would "seriously" consider the requests.

However, as Interim President Jones points out, despite the Chancellor's close ties to BU, McCormick must remain "impartial" in his position. Jones said McCormick must weigh the needs of all the system's institutions and look at requests from all campuses.

A message from the president

DID YOU KNOW Bloomsburg University is accredited by six regional or national professional associations?

The Middle Atlantic Association of Colleges and Schools is the umbrella organization which reviews and attests to the quality of all academic programs and support services and the general climate of the institution.

Many professional associations offer specialized accreditation. Bloomsburg University is accredited by the following associations:

National Council for Accreditation of Teacher Education
National League for Nursing, Incorporated
American Chemical Society
Pennsylvania Department of Education
Council on Education of the Deaf
State Board of Nurse Examiners

Dr. Larry W. Jones
Interim President

DID YOU KNOW Bloomsburg University is seeking accreditation by this association?

American Speech-Language-Hearing Association

DID YOU KNOW the advantages that accreditation brings to the university and accrues to students?

Accreditation: *encourages standards of educational quality *holds institutions accountable for good management, enlightened personnel policies, and consumer protection *prepares students for licensure in certain occupations *entitled veterans to certain benefits *contributes toward the preservation of integrity in higher education *provides self-regulation by higher education itself *fulfills partial requirements for pursuing of graduate study *fulfills partial requirements for conducting ROTC programs and commissioning graduates *enhances ability of the institution to govern itself *enhances recruitment of students and faculty *advantageous in obtaining grant monies
The faculty and administration at Bloomsburg University support the concept of accreditation and welcome the opportunities provided for self-study and qualitative growth.

Questions about accreditation can be directed to any of the vice presidents or the president. Criteria specified to meet accreditation requirements and self-study reports may be obtained upon request.

Guidelines for requesting BU transcripts

The Office of the Registrar has outlined procedures through which it releases transcripts.

Requests for official transcripts must be made in writing to the registrar. The fee of $2.00 each, payable to Bloomsburg University, must accompany each request. The registrar's office regrets that it cannot bill alumni for transcripts, as the cost would be prohibitive.

Each transcript request must carry the signature of the student or alumnus, which authorizes the registrar to release the transcript. This requirement is necessary to comply with the Pennsylvania Right-to-Know Law and the Buckley Amendment to the Federal Omnibus Education Bill.

Transcripts are usually sent out within three to five working days after a request is received, except at the beginning and end of semesters, when processing may take as long as two weeks.

Kent State dean is new president

A dean at Kent State University has been selected as the new president of Bloomsburg University.

Dr. Harry Ausprich was named to the post as 16th president of the University during a meeting of the State System of Higher Education's Board of Governors on Tuesday, March 19.

He succeeds Dr. Larry W. Jones, who has been serving as acting and interim president since July 1, 1983, when Dr. James H. McCormick left BU to become the first chancellor of the new SSHE.

Dr. Jones will return to his post as provost and vice president for academic affairs at BU.

The new president has been dean of the College of Fine and Professional Arts at Kent State University since 1978. Prior to that he served as dean of the Faculty of Arts and Humanities at the State University of New York at Buffalo, 1976-1978; dean of Faculty of Arts at the State University of New York at Buffalo, 1973-1976; and dean of the College of Humanities and Fine Arts, University of Northern Iowa, 1970-1973.

Dr. Ausprich received his bachelor of science degree in communications and education at New York State University College at Buffalo and his master of science degree in theatre and broadcasting at the University of Wisconsin. He earned his Ph.D. in communications and theatre at Michigan State University.

He served as an appointed member of the Ohio Humanities Council, an appointed member of the National Fine Arts Commission, and as a guest lecturer and consultant for faculty development and retraining in what was then Pennsylvania's system of state colleges.

He has published articles in the following journals: Players Magazine, New York State Art Teachers Magazine, Southern Speech Journal, Quarterly Journal of Communications, and Speech Teacher. He has also presented numerous papers in the area of humanities and fine arts.

Dr. Ausprich was the recipient of the Wheelock Scholarship from New York State and state scholarships for graduate work at the University of Wisconsin and Michigan State University.

While at Kent State, he was responsible for program development for the recently created Shannon Rodgers/Jerry Silverman School of Design and Merchandising.

He has served as dean of the Blossom Festival School which encompasses the Blossom Program. This program is the summer home of the Cleveland Orchestra, Porthouse Summer Theatre and houses the Eells Art Gallery.

Dr. Ausprich established the Community Advisory Council, which includes membership from business, educational and industrial constituencies to garner support and understanding for the College of Fine and Professional Arts.

His professional memberships include Kappa Delta Pi, Sinfonia, Alpha Psi Omega, Phi Delta Kappa, and National Collegiate Players.

He and Mrs. Ausprich are the parents of two children.

Dr. Ausprich was one of five candidates invited to campus for two-day visits in February. They were selected from a pool of more than 90 applicants.

After the campus visits, the names of the three finalists were recommended to the Chancellor's Office and the Board of Governors by the local Council of Trustees.

Couple gives $500,000 for scholars

A Columbia County couple has donated a half million dollars to establish a scholarship program at BU.

And it's not the first time that Marco and Louise Mitrani have contributed time or money to BU; they were recognized for their many other services in 1983 when they received the first BU medallion.

The $500,000 is the largest private gift the university has ever received, according to Anthony Ianiero, BU's director of development.

In a letter to BU, the Mitranis said the money should be "maintained in a special fund . . . and used annually for scholarship grants. These grants should be based primarily on merit and potential of the prospective recipient, with some consideration to financial need."

Interest earned annually from the "Marco and Louise Mitrani Scholarships" will be used to make awards to BU students. The first series will be made this fall.

The Mitranis came to America in the early 1920s. He is chairman of the board of Milco Industries, Inc., producers of daywear, sleepwear and loungewear garments. The company was founded more than 60 years ago and currently employs about 1,000 persons.

Mr. Mitrani is a former board member and president of the Bloomsburg Rotary Club and a former member of the Bloomsburg Hospital Board. He holds the Silver Beaver Award from the Boys Scouts of America.

Mrs. Mitrani has been a board member of the Girl Scouts for more than 25 years. She served as president of the organization for two years and received the Girl Scout Statuette, The Penn Woods Girl Scout Council named "Camp Louise" in honor of Mrs. Mitrani.

A charter member of the Family Counseling and Mental Health Association, Mrs. Mitrani is also involved in several other regional, national and international organizations.

The Mitranis have made significant philanthropic contributions to non-profit organizations. They have provided leadership for the United Jewish Appeal, assisted the Bloomsburg Hospital through gifts to the coronary care and intensive care units, regularly supported the Family Counseling and Mental Health Association, and helped to build schools and a library in Israel. Avid art patrons, the Mitranis have also given major gifts to the Bloomsburg Theatre Ensemble and the Haas Center for the Arts at BU.

Ianiero said the gift shows that the Mitranis, "along with many others, have recognized the need to support public higher education and are making that commitment."

A committee has been appointed to develop guidelines and application procedures for the new scholarships, to be announced later this spring. Approximately $50,000 will be available annually to award scholarships to students.

The goal for the 1985 BU Alumni Annual Fund will be $142,500 — an increase of about 5 percent over the 1984 total of $135,785.

All alumni gifts to the General Fund of the Alumni Association, the Deans' Fund for Academic Excellence, the Alumni Scholarship Fund or the BU Athletic Fund will count toward the goal of $142,500.

Gifts from friends of the University and non-alumni members of the University community will be received and processed by BU's Development Office.

Class goals for this year, based on 1984 totals, will be as follows:

1905 — $105; 1907 — $137; 1910 — $105; 1911 — $27; 1912 — $263; 1913 — $105; 1914 — $95; 1915 — $221; 1916 — $121; 1917 — $82; 1918 — $132; 1919 — $315.

Dad sends 5 daughters to BU

Bloomsburg University is many things to many people, but for a Shamokin man and his family, it is becoming a tradition.

Since his graduation in 1959, Leo Mulhall has seen two of his daughters graduate from BU, and three others are currently enrolled.

"I was sold on Bloom" ever since attending, Mulhall said. "I was always pleased with the education I got there and the kids knew that."

And Mulhall and his wife, Mary, knew that BU made good sense: "A good education at a reasonable cost" was very important, Mulhall said, with five daughters to put through.

He didn't pressure his daughters to attend Bloomsburg, the alumnus said. He does like the idea, however, and said, "I think Bloom is a real plus for our area." But it seems that the Mulhalls' oldest daughter's attending BU is what really started the current six-year streak of Mulhalls.

Sharon, an '83 accounting graduate, started the tradition in 1979 and now works for a public accountant in Shamokin. Following Sharon the next year was Patricia, who was graduated in May 1984 with a degree in sociology. Mulhall's other daughters currently enrolled are Maureen, senior business secondary education major, and identical twins Colleen and Eileen, freshmen in the nursing program.

Since graduation, Leo Mulhall has been employed at Lourdes Regional High School in Shamokin. He came to the school in its first year, when two other schools combined to form Lourdes, and became head coach of the new football team. He is now vice principal, athletic director and assistant boys' basketball coach.

Mulhall's wife is a graduate of the Sacred Heart School of Nursing in Allentown and is now the supervisor of the emergency room at Shamokin State Hospital.

How proud can two parents be? Five daughters attend dad's alma mater and the youngest two are studying for mom's profession.

According to Eileen, "Dad sort of had that idea (attending BU) with all of us," but added that each had her choice.

And for nursing as a future, Eileen said, "I chose nursing a long time ago," and her mother advised that she and Colleen attend a college, particularly BU, for their nursing degrees, rather than a nursing school as she had.

A lot of things have changed since Mulhall attended BU. But now and then, he and his daughters are able to share something about the college.

"One day, dad was looking through a (recent) yearbook and was telling us all the professors and other people who were here when he was," Colleen remembers.

But for Maureen, who is taking the current semester off and will finish with student teaching in the fall, and her twin sisters, it is Patricia and Sharon who have been most helpful.

"Even before I started at Bloom," Maureen said, "I knew where the dorms and other buildings were." And when it came time to start classes, the older sisters provided crucial advice on what certain professors expected of their students.

The twins have really had an advantage because they could rely on the advice of three older sisters. It started when they were 13 and used to travel along when Sharon came back to BU after a weekend. And Maureen was still here in the fall when the twins started and was able to help them get started.

But let's go back to Leo Mulhall's youth.

Mulhall rejected several college football scholarships after his high school days at Shenandoah Catholic High. He worked for two years following that and then joined the Marines and spent three years in the Korean conflict.

"After that," Mulhall said, "I thought it was time to get with it," and he began the Bloomsburg tradition in 1954 as a 24-year-old freshman. And, since he was a veteran, Mulhall was allowed to play football regardless of his age and he remembers his freshman and senior years as good ones for the Huskies.

Besides his daughters, Mulhall is able to stay in touch with his hilltop alma mater through several professors he knows and through the teachers and coaches BU sends to Lourdes Regional High. And it seems his appreciation for the university continues to grow.

"Over the years I've really been proud of Bloom. It's a real plus for our area having a school like that at our fingertips."

In the Mulhall story, that's 60 fingertips.

'We like BU . . . pass it along!

Getting the Rev. Lizziner Johnson's children and grandchildren to come to Bloomsburg University for their college education was like the shampoo commercial — "you tell a sister, and she'll tell a brother, and he'll tell a cousin," and pretty soon you'll have up to six aunts, uncles, cousins and nephews on the campus at the same time.

According to the Rev. Mrs. Johnson, her children and grandchildren "got the Bloomsburg connection" several years ago when one of her daughters put on a workshop designed to help mainstream minorities into higher education.

The first minority she mainstreamed was her own sister — Evette Oakman, then 17. Evette came to BU in 1979 to pursue a major in business.

In 1980, Iris Hall — Evette's nephew — decided to forego a well-paying career as a professional butcher to pursue studies in sociology and a career in the Army via BU's ROTC program. Since coming to BU, Iris has not only involved himself in his studies, but also with the university's debating team and student activities program board. He is active in the Kappa Alpha Pi Fraternity Inc., skydiving, intramural football and wrestling.

"My mother, Aunt Evette, and lots of people encouraged me to come to BU. It wasn't so far from home, and people like the Bryans (of the BU Center for Academic Development) helped me get squared away with financial aid, admission applications and housing," said Iris, an award-winning meat cutter.

"He chose BU over a great paying job and assurance of all the meat he could eat," laughed Iris' aunt, Bernice Johnson, who came to BU in 1981. Currently a psychology major at BU, Bernice also runs track, sky dives and is active in several other BU activities, ranging from the Air Force and Delta Sigma Theta Sorority, Inc., to university politics. She plans to become a clinical psychologist.

In 1982, Iris' brother, Mark Hall, and cousin, Kenneth Roberts, decided that they also wanted to come to the "friendly college on the hill."

"We sort of put our heads together and decided to follow Iris' footsteps. All of us were members of our high school Civil Air Patrol program and are now involved in military preparation via the ROTC. It was just natural for Kenneth and me to come in to Bloom," Mark said.

The former high school football star now majors in history at BU. When he isn't studying or developing his military skills, he's busy with activities of BU's first black fraternity, co-founded by his brother Iris, and the Third World Cultural Society, which his cousin Kenneth heads.

After being accepted at several other colleges, Kenneth decided he'd rather be with his aunts and cousins at BU. The business management major is one of the university's most outspoken students — often described as the "prophet of minority concerns."

"I honestly thought I would go elsewhere. I wanted to get far away from home. However, as time got closer for my decision, I started to weigh all the pros and cons —

BU won out. Not only did its business school have a great reputation, but also, mom's good cooking is just a little over two hours away," Kenneth joked.

This year, the Rev. Mrs. Johnson sent BU her baby, Kevin, and other grandson, Terrell, Kenneth's brother.

"I came here because my family was here. BU had to be a pretty good place if they chose it. Plus, when you've got family around you, you don't ever have to worry about getting help when you need it. There was no faltering about my decision. In fact, I told my high school counselor that if I didn't go to BU, I would not go to college, I'd just go straight to the Army," Terrell said.

So a confident Terrell, who didn't apply to any college but BU, anticipates a 1988 commission as a second lieutenant in the U.S. Army — backed by strong training in business or engineering. Already involved in numerous campus affairs, Terrell has plans to pledge Kappa and "to participate in other university committees that could benefit from my different perspective on things."

Although one of the youngest of the Johnson clan, Kevin considers himself the "man of the family." "I'm everybody's uncle except for Bernice," he says. (Evette left BU last year).

How Kevin ended up at BU is quite different from the stories of his relatives. "I really wanted to be in New York or Hollywood. Mark encouraged me to delay my plans to be among the stars — painting and sketching them." Several stars from "Hogan's Heroes" and "All My Children" have paid Kevin to do their portraits.

Although tagged a born artist by his mother, Kevin is also a track star who has a strong desire to run hurdles in the 1988 Olympics. "I've delayed those plans, but coming to BU will facilitate my realizing these goals as well as prepare me for the real 'real world' — including life in Hollywood and New York."

The freshman BU art major added, "After breaking Olympic track and field records and building my mother a church, I'll take on the stars."

The Johnsons — most of whom are graduates of a parochial high school — said they had no major problems in the transition from Philadelphia to the predominantly white campus and community at BU, where about 140 of the university's 6,300 students are black.

"The academic system here is outstanding. They (BU faculty and administrators) don't just get the students here. They help them once they are here — tutoring and whatever else is necessary for helping students excel. I think it's great how they are putting more effort into minority development — buffering that initial cultural shock of entering a predominantly white world," said Mrs. Glandnair Oakman Carter, Kenneth's and Terrell's mother.

The Rev. Mrs. Johnson added, "We must think that Bloomsburg University is OK. There are four more from this family who plan on coming here in the next two years.

New honors program offers chance for independent study

An honors program has been created in the College of the Arts and Sciences, providing academically gifted students a chance for independent study.

The program, an idea of Dr. Al Forsyth, dean of the College of the Arts and Sciences, involves two semesters of independent study totaling six credits and one semester of participation in a Honors Seminar for three credits.

Dr. Howard Schreier, communication studies professor and co-organizer of the program, said it will provide a structure in which students can work independently, creatively and responsibly.

The program has three divisions — humanities, natural sciences and social sciences — and will include seven to nine hours of advanced work. Students must maintain a 3.0 Q.P.A. and have the recommendation of their respective departments to participate in the program.

Honor committees, one for each division, will review student applications for the program and will also approve student seminars.

Honor committee members and their divisions follow:

Dr. Ervine Gully, English, Dr. Marjorie Clay, philosophy, and Stu Nagel, art, for the humanities; Kip Armstrong, chairperson of the sociology department, Dr. Dave Minderhout, anthropology, and Dr. John Baird, psychology, for the social sciences division; and Dr. Larry Mack, chemistry, Dr. Lynne Miller, biology, and Dr. Brian Johnson, geology and earth sciences, for the natural sciences.

Alumni describe life abroad

By ANDREW HEINTZELMAN
Student Feature Writer

Editor's Note: Through correspondence with cooperating alumni, we have compiled information on Alumni Living Abroad. Letters were mailed to alumni in many different countries, and in our first attempt at this type of story, we have heard from eight of them. The alumni explained some of the differences of living in a foreign country and what they are doing in that country. Some offered information on how Bloomsburg University has helped them achieve. The following article features four "Alumni Living Abroad."

As is probably the case for many of our Alumni Living Abroad, Richard Ward '73 has found that "to enjoy overseas life takes a strong sense of individualism, independence, self-reliance and adaptability." For a farm boy from Columbia County, traveling has provided the chance to experience how different the people of the world are. It began for Ward when he came to BU.

"Attending BU broadened my horizons significantly," Ward wrote. "It was the first time he came in contact with people who had grown up in suburban and urban areas, and he wrote, "I can remember walking on the grass along sidewalks because I wasn't accustomed to the hard surfaces, and the concrete made my feet hurt."

Since Bloomsburg, it seems, Ward has adapted. He has lived and worked in Australia, Israel, Venezuela and Columbia. He currently lives in Papua, New Guinea, where he works for the Department of Minerals and Energy.

Papua is pleasing to Ward. He says he can still enjoy an "informal and outdoorsy" lifestyle that includes outdoor sports and sailing. But life overseas has its drawbacks, he says.

"Nothing is permanent, and little can be taken for granted," Ward wrote. These factors, along with poor social conditions and unemployment, can make it difficult for overseas family life, according to Ward. What can really make a traveling lifestyle difficult, Ward expressed, is moving every two or three years.

"The adjustment process becomes a constant companion," he wrote.

Ward's experience with the "adjustment process" began during his years at BU. He spent two summer vacations at the Marine Science Consortium in Lewes, Del., and Wallops Island, Va. He met even more diversity with the students there, and those two summers, Ward said, really whet his appetite to experience "the wonders of the strange and remote corners of the world."

After college, Ward ran an oil exploration crew in Arkansas and Louisiana, and he later taught science and mathematics in a public high school in the state of Queensland, Australia.

Traveling extensively throughout the Pacific while living in Australia, Ward began paying particular attention to the role of mineral resources in the economy of every country he visited. His traveling included visits to Papua, New Guinea, in 1976 and 1977.

Richard Ward '73

After some graduate work at Penn State in mineral economics and a job teaching earth and physical science at a private international school in Caracas, Ward began concentrating on New Guinea. After completing his master's degree in mineral economics, Ward was accepted by the Papua, New Guinea Department of Minerals and Energy.

Ward's job carries significant amounts of responsibility and opportunities for professional growth. To enhance those opportunities, he is returning to the states this year to begin a two-year management course at the Yale School of Organization and Management, and perhaps he will be able to visit BU, where his worldwide adventures began.

Thanks to an anonymous source, we are able to include Harry Cole '62 in our "Alumni Living Abroad" article.

Cole received a copy of the March 1984 ALUMNI QUARTERLY from someone and saw he was listed among the missing. He sent a letter to the Alumni Association to tell us that he was "alive and well and living in Madrid." At that time he was the First Secretary of the American Embassy in the Spanish city, where he lived with his wife and two daughters

As a diplomat, Cole says he has experienced a life of traveling and adapting to new homes and people.

After Bloomsburg and on his way to Madrid, Cole studied on a fellowship at Lehigh University, taught at Georgetown University and went to Greece on a Fulbright scholarship.

He eventually took the Foreign Service exam, entered the Service, and received postings to Lisbon, Portugal, Washington, D.C., and then Madrid.

Cole has returned to the United States until July to learn Bahasa, the language of Indonesia. After that, he will begin a tour in Jakarta, according to his letter.

THE QUARTERLY informed Cole of the death of Cecil C. Seronsy. Cole said that Seronsy was probably the most influential teacher in his life.

"I am saddened to think that when I do get a chance to return to Bloomsburg I can't look forward to a chat with my witty and erudite friend, Cole wrote."

The next alumnus abroad also lives in Madrid. Ralph A. Tremato '46, has been there since 1972.

Tremato is self-employed, with a business providing accounting and financing services to foreign companies. His firm, Afinsor Consultores, deals mostly with American companies, ranging from Burger King to Corning Glass.

Tremato has also traveled extensively since Bloomsburg. In fact, he included a P.S. in his letter to the Alumni Association that said he was writing the letter on a flight from Spain to England.

Before moving to Spain, Tremato was an employee of Texaco and C&I/Girdler of Nassau, Bahamas. He also visited countries in the Far East, Latin America, Europe and Africa.

Besides Nassau and Madrid, Tremato has lived in Colombia, Venezuela, Peru, England, Nigeria and Kenya.

Our final "Alumni Living Abroad" for this edition has spent most of her post-Bloomsburg years in the sunny town of Paget, Bermuda.

Margaret Davies '39, known during her college years as Peggy Johnson, has lived in the city for the past 38 years. She traveled to the island country for a holiday approximately seven years after graduation and while there she met the man she eventually married.

The couple had two children, a son and a daughter, and when the two began school, Johnson returned to teaching. She taught at the school the children attended, Warwick Academy, for 23 years, retiring eight years ago.

The school, built in 1669, is the "oldest in continuous existence," except for Harvard, in the western hemisphere, Davies said.

An interesting fact that Davies shared about Bermuda is that residents name their houses. The Davies named theirs "Paxtang," after the Harrisburg suburb where Mrs. Davies lived. Paxtang is from an Indian word meaning "the place of water," Davies wrote, and being only two blocks from the ocean and with their house directly above their water supply, the Davies felt the name was "most appropriate."

Grants total nearly $1M

Grants totalling nearly a million dollars have been awarded to Bloomsburg University to date for the 1984-85 academic year.

Two of the largest single grants are $153,870 from the U.S. Department of Education to sustain the university's Upward Bound program for another year, and $150,000 from the Pennsylvania Department of Labor for the Green Thumb program.

Upward Bound is a program that provides high school students with opportunities and assistance to explore their potential for academic, social and personal growth.

The Green Thumb program will provide 30 part-time, older workers on campus.

Five grants totalling $146,375 were obtained by the university through the Ben Franklin Partnership Challenge Grant Program, Northeast Tier Advanced Technology Center at Lehigh University.

Recipients were Bloomsburg Chamber of Commerce ($30,775); Habilitation Inc., Pottsville ($15,500); McBride Machine Corp., Bloomsburg ($33,000); Safety Light Corp., Bloomsburg ($45,100); and SunCom Industries, Inc., Sunbury ($22,000).

Five other grants range between $50,000 and $100,000. Included are $97,750 from the Pennsylvania Department of Education for the university Center for Academic Development with Act 101; $87,104 from the State Department of Labor and Industry for training for information processing under Job Training Partnership Act (JTPA) - Title II; $76,464 (Pennsylvania Labor & Industry) for special services for disadvantaged students; $67,200 (United States Department of Education) for training graduate personnel in education of children having speech, hearing and language impairments; and $62,100 from the U.S. Department of Energy for matching funds for energy conservation measures at Nelson Fieldhouse.

The university's share of a U.S. Department of Education grant for six colleges and universities in the Northeastern Pennsylvania Educational Opportunity Center Consortium earmarked for the Center for Academic Development is $43,550. The campus Reading Clinic is being assisted to the tune of a $33,586 from a Pennsylvania Labor & Industries grant under the Adult Vocational-Reading Center JTPA, Title II.

Nine other grants of $10,200 and under benefit the Community Arts Council, the university's physical plant and the departments of art, business and business administration, geography and earth science and physics.

"Faculty members are enthusiastic about participating in developing grants that benefit their departments," said Tony Ianiero, director of development. "This is very evident as the university is nearing the $1 million mark in grants awarded through both state and federal agencies."

Veteran faculty to retire

The retirements of six faculty members who have a total of 140 years of service at Bloomsburg University, along with the retirements of five non-instructional employees, were announced by Interim President Larry Jones at the December meeting of the Council of Trustees.

Benjamin S. Andrews, associate professor of communication disorders and special education, retired January 4, 1985. He came to BU in September 1968 from the Berks County Schools of Reading, where he was a speech and hearing therapist. He is completing 16 years at the university and 37 years in education.

A native of Orange, N.J., Andrews earned his bachelor of science degree from the University of Virginia in 1947 and his master of arts degree from the State University of Iowa in 1950. He received a diploma for advanced graduate study at the University of Virginia in 1960.

In 1963, he was on the Board of Directors of the Speech and Hearing Association of Virginia. He holds the Certificate of Clinical Competence in Speech Pathology granted by the American Speech Association.

John A. Enman, professor of geography, came to BU in September 1959 from Washington and Jefferson College. On his retirement January 4, he completed 36 years in education, 25 at Bloomsburg.

His bachelor of arts degree was received from the University of Maine in 1943. He earned a master of arts degree from Harvard in 1948 and a doctorate from the University of Pittsburgh in 1962.

The Newton, Mass., native has been a member of numerous departmental and college committees. He was a member of the former College Senate.

Charles C. Kopp, professor of English, will retire at the end of the 1984-85 academic year. He will be completing 31 years in education — 25 of them at BU.

Born in Conneville, Pa., Kopp came to the university in September 1960 from the Celanese Corporation of America. His bachelor's degree was earned at Frostburg State College in 1953 and his master's from the University of West Virginia in 1954. He earned a doctorate at Penn State in 1963.

Kopp served as president of the BU chapter of the American Association of University Professors from 1966-69 and on the Professional Affairs Committee, 1967-69.

Francis J. Radice, professor of finance and business law, will retire at the end of the summer sessions of 1985 with 28 years of service at BU and 36 in education.

He came to the university in September 1957 after serving seven years on the business education faculty at Williamsport Area High School.

A native of Wilkes-Barre, Radice is a 1949 graduate of Bloomsburg State Teachers College. His master of education and doctor of education degrees were earned at Penn State in 1954 and 1967 respectively. He has done additional graduate work at Bucknell and completed a fellowship in life insurance with the State Mutual Life Insurance Company of America.

Radice has served on a variety of committees in both the College of Business and the university as a whole. He has been a faculty representative to the Bloomsburg Foundation and a member of its board as well as chairman of the Faculty Evaluation Committee.

Richard C. Savage, associate professor of English, completes 25 years at BU and 32 in education when he retires in May 1985. Prior to coming to Bloomsburg in 1960, he was an assistant editor with the Saturday Evening Post.

The Minneapolis native holds a BA from the University of North Carolina (1949) and a MA from Columbia University (1951). He has done additional graduate work at Edinburg University in Scotland.

Savage served on the staff of the Springfield, Mass., Union newspaper and was a reporter for the Transcript-Telegram of Holyoke, Mass. During his tenure at BU, he served as an adviser for the school newspaper for more than ten years. He was chairman of the Publications Committee (1964-68) and advisor to Alpha Phi Gamma, honorary journalism fraternity.

Norman E. White, professor of chemistry, will retire at the end of the current academic year. He is completing 44 years in education, including 20 at BU.

White came to BU in September 1965 after serving 18 years at Drexel Institute of Technology. His bachelor of arts degree was received from Whittier University (1938), and his master's and doctor's degrees were earned at University of Pennsylvania in 1941 and 1954.

White has been a co-chairman of the university's Meet and Discuss Committee and has served on the All-College Promotions and APSCUF Executive Committees.

The non-instructional retirees, their titles, years of service and retirement date include: SueAnn Balliet, clerk stenographer II, 10 years, January 4, 1985; Edward Boadman, carpenter, seven years, 11 months, January 18, 1985; Doris Daniels, custodial worker I, 16 years, October 8, 1984; Nellie Edwards, duplicating supervisor, 23 years, nine months, January 4, 1985; Hubert Rescorla, equipment operator II, 13 years, February 15, 1985.

Pi Omega Pi to mark 50th

The Alpha Delta Chapter of Pi Omega Pi, the National Business Teacher Education Honor Society, will observe its 50th anniversary in May. Dr. Emory Rarig Jr., advisor, requests past members and officers to notify the organization so that invitations can be extended for anniversary activities, which are tentatively planned for Alumni Weekend in June.

The honor society, which has gained 151 chapters in its nearly 62 years of existence, is the oldest honor society on the BU campus.

The Alpha Delta Chapter officers for spring 1985 are Ruth Davis, president; Donna Malloy, vice-president; Ktm Kuronya, secretary; and Dawn Renn, treasurer. Rarig has served 17 years as advisor with Dr. Ellen Lensing, who retired from the department in May 1982.

Return a response for the 50th anniversary to: Dr. Emory Rarig Jr., Dean Emeritus, College of Business, 101 Suttiff Hall, BU, Bloomsburg, Pa. 17815. Include name (including maiden if applicable), address, phone, current position, business education sequence, month and year of graduation, date of initiation into the society and number of years as a member of the society.

The curriculum for prospective business teachers has been modified to permit more flexibility. As before, all students will be certified to teach typewriting and at least one other area. Students may select data processing, marketing or secretarial certification. In addition, students may add other certifications if they wish. Students will be automatically certified in business

English, business law, introduction to data processing, office practice and other basic business subjects as before.

Choir tour

The 67-voice BU Concert Choir, under the direction of Professor William Decker, completed a very successful six-day tour in January.

The choir performed in churches and high schools in Newtown, Fairview Village (near Norristown), Philadelphia, Harrisburg and Princeton, N.J.

A second performance in Philadelphia was in the famed Reading terminal, which has been undergoing revitalization.

"Participating as choir members is a good educational experience for these students," comments Decker. "The group learns cooperation with a measure of discipline and sacrifice. In their local and tour appearances, they enjoy meeting and communicating with people from numerous walks of life."

The Office Administration curriculum has been revised to increase emphasis on office automation. Besides the required preparation in office administration, students must select a business concentration (such as accounting, shorthand, management, data processing, marketing, or finance) based on their career goals.

The department has also been training adults for occupations in automated offices under the Job Training Partnership Act. It is hoped that this pilot project will result in continued funding for electronic equipment, which will also be available for use by students. CPT word processors are currently an important component of the program.

The Business Education/Office Administration Department sponsored a records management seminar at the Hotel Magee in November.

Speakers for the seminar included BU archivist and reference librarian Roger Fromm, several PP&L supervisors, a lawyer, a dentist and an administrator from Bloomsburg.

Nellie Edwards retires from BU

After nearly a quarter of a century and millions of copies of printed materials, Nellie Edwards has decided to retire as head of the BU duplicating services.

The Catawissa native recently announced her decision to leave behind her job, which is filled with pressure deadlines, tons of uncut paper and gallons and gallons of ink and press-cleaning fluids.

When Edwards first worked in duplicating, the department didn't have a heavy printing load. "We did all the outgoing mail, some memos and news releases," she says. "Our office was in Noetting Hall where part of the Scranton Commons is now located."

In 1969, when duplicating services moved to old Waller Hall (site of Lycoming Hall) and was expanded, she was named the department supervisor. Three years later, the final move was made to the Waller Administration Building.

"Our daily work has increased about 75 percent in the past 10 years," Edwards says. "We print material for every department on campus, including tests, newsletters, brochures, etc. A variety of other printing is done for student organizations and various administrative offices."

"One of our biggest jobs was the Five Year Action Plan," she says. "It was so thick that we couldn't even bind it here."

Approximately 125,000 sheets are printed per week by Edwards, her two full-time staff workers, a Green Thumb worker and a student assistant. "I don't think people realize the volume of work that is printed here," she remarked.

Looking forward to retirement, Edwards says she will catch up on some reading, gardening and shopping. She and her husband, Garth, "hope to do some traveling, mostly around the United States. I really would like to go to California," she added.

"I'll miss working at the university, particularly the people. Each day has been different and by encountering so many different people, I've learned a great deal about diplomacy."

However, Edwards feels it is time to move on. "I guess I'm getting tired of standing most of the day. Now I'll have to learn how to sit down again," she commented.

"I never dreamed I would be here this long or learn how to run all this equipment," she laughs. "I can remember when I used to be afraid to run my washing machine!"

"But, I guess I wouldn't have stayed so long if I didn't enjoy it."

Orientation position filled

Sandra Walker, a local reading specialist, has been appointed coordinator of orientation at Bloomsburg University.

In the part-time post, Walker will work to give new students the information and advice they need to achieve maximum success from their education.

Walker will aid new students in many ways: coordinating the initial contacts between students and faculty during the crucial academic advisement process; familiarizing them with university programs, services and people; assisting them in pre-enrollment procedures such as scheduling classes, obtaining identification cards, enrolling for food and health services and filling out questionnaires.

She will also serve as editor of the "B-U-NIQUE" newsletter to be published several times a year for new students and their parents. Another of her tasks will be to promote positive relations among students from varied racial, economic and social backgrounds.

Walker has been director of remedial reading at Central Columbia schools for the past three years. She is also a decorating consultant in greater Bloomsburg. She came to this area from Washington, Pa., where she was a teacher. After receiving her state certification in reading in 1975, she joined the Bloomsburg and Central Columbia School Districts as a reading specialist.

Walker recently wrote a book, "County Cloth to Coverlets," about 19th-century Central Pennsylvania textiles and weavers.

She and her husband, John, are parents of Rebecca, a junior at BU, and John M., a senior at Central Columbia.

GIFT OF CARPET -- Two Bloomsburg Carpet Industries officials were guests recently at an appreciation luncheon at the president's residence of Bloomsburg University. Earlier this year, the local concern gave a gift of carpeting worth $4,200 which was placed in a second floor study area of Andrus Library. From left are Jay Hock, BCI director of product development; Marty Bowman, BCI president and comptroller; Dr. Larry W. Jones, interim president of BU, Scott Miller, readers' services librarian; Tony Ianiero, BU director of development, and Dr. Kalyan Ghosh, acting provost and vice president for academic affairs.

Good news for BU

Bloomsburg University has been granted reaffirmation of its 10-year accreditation by the Commission on Higher Education of the Middle States Association of Colleges and Schools.

This approval gives BU accreditation of its academic programs through 1990. It is the result of a required mid-term review and self-study which followed the Middle States 1980 accreditation of BU's programs.

According to Dr. Kalyan Ghosh, acting provost and vice president for academic affairs at BU, "The accreditation distinguishes Bloomsburg as a superior educational institution in regard to its academic programs, facilities, personnel, other resources and its projections for the future."

Bruce Dearing, chairman of the Middle States Association, wrote to BU Interim President Larry W. Jones. "Particularly noteworthy is Bloomsburg's increased emphasis upon quality, facilities improvement, curriculum review and revisions, and institutional planning." It is an expression of confidence in BU's purposes, performance and resources, he added.

The self-study report contains these projections for BU by 1990:

- Enrollment will remain around 6,300.
- The budget will approach $42 million.
- Old Science and Sutliff Halls will be renovated.
- New degree programs will include bachelor's degrees in general studies, health physics and microbiology, and master's degrees in instructional technology, secondary education and social restoration.

The report also contains details about programs BU has added or eliminated since the 1980 accreditation. New programs include bachelor's degrees in anthropology and clinical chemistry, the master's in nursing, education of the gifted, and a supervisory certificate in curriculum and instruction. BU has eliminated 11 degree programs during the last five years.

Other BU accreditations include the Pennsylvania Board of Nursing Examiners, the National League of Nursing, the National Council for Accreditation of Teacher Education, the American Chemical Society, the Professional Services Board of the American Speech-Language and Hearing Association, the Council on Education of the Deaf and the Pennsylvania Department of Education.

Chapman, McClellan honored as outstanding teachers

The local chapter of the Delta Phi Delta National Honorary Business Society has selected Charles M. Chapman and Richard E. McClellan as outstanding teachers for the year.

Chapman, a BU associate professor of management, was named outstanding business administration professor for 1984. McClellan was named outstanding professor of accounting for the year. The business society honored the two during its recent induction ceremonies held at the Hotel Magee.

McClellan, an assistant professor of accounting at BU, is a certified public accountant with bachelor's and master's degrees in business education and another master's in accounting. The former public accountant has been teaching at BU since 1975. He and his wife Mary have two children.

Chapman, who came to BU in 1977, holds bachelor's, master's, and doctoral degrees in business. A veteran in business management, his experiences include some 15 years in management at national organizations such as General Motors and Hertz. He and his wife Kathryn have four children.

Teaching sign language is a joy

(Editor's Note: The following article about Donna Peroni '75 was written by John George for the Glenside News.)

The last memory I have of learning the alphabet dates back to when I was in first grade and my teacher, Miss Kramer, had the class write out the 26-letter sequence as many times as we could in a 15-minute time period.

Therefore, I was not surprised when I found myself more than a little apprehensive about what I was attempting to learn. Back in first grade, I could always copy from my neighbor if I had to. But on a sunny afternoon last week in the borough of Conshohocken, there was one student, one teacher and one subject - sign language.

On the telephone the day before, Donna Peroni said she could teach me the sign language alphabet in 20 minutes. I had my doubts.

Since 1980, Peroni has been teaching sign language at the Abington Township Adult School. She teaches a similar course in Whittemarsh Township and, until the school closed its doors in June, she taught high school English at Pennsylvania School for the Deaf.

Peroni said her classes, which average between 15 and 20 people, have not been limited to parents or siblings of deaf people. She said she has taught nurses, lawyers, doctors, clergymen and teachers.

"Some people who take the course don't know a deaf person, never even met a deaf person, but were curious about how the deaf communicate," she said.

The first rule of sign language I learned was to keep my palm facing the person with whom I was conversing. I handled the first three letters with relative ease, but when I tried to make a "D," I would continually raise my pinkie instead of my index finger. Once I corrected myself, I realized how silly the mistake was. Done correctly, the sign resembles the letter, especially from the vantage point of the person giving the symbol.

Not all of the signs look like the letter they represent, but enough do to make learning the alphabet not as formidable a task as I thought it would be.

"Sign language is like a foreign language," said Peroni. "I would like to see sign language offered as a foreign language in high schools."

Three forms of non-verbal communication are used by the deaf community: American sign language is a natural language which expresses feelings untranslatable into English; the Rochester method or finger spelling; and sign language.

Peroni said she strongly advocates sign language over lip reading, favored by oralists, because in lip reading "the person understands some of what you are saying, but not all of it."

"If you have ever been in a foreign country and you don't understand the language, you know just how frustrating (communicating for deaf people) can be," she said.

When I made my first "Q," I was concerned about the exact placement of my thumb and middle finger. Peroni told me not to worry.

"One of the first things I teach my students is not to be too concerned with the exact placement of their fingers," she said. "Just like everybody has different sounding voices, everybody is going to have slightly different signs."

Exposure and repetition were the keys to Peroni's teaching method. She showed me a series of letter symbols, I tried my best to copy her. Then we would start over, going deeper into the alphabet each time. She broke up the session by injecting casual conversation. . . and I thought I would surely forget all the signs she had just taught me.

When she asked if I wanted to try it myself, I thought I would be lucky to get half the letters right. But after only about 10 minutes, I was able to sign all the letters except for five or six.

When Peroni first enrolled at Bloomsburg State College, now Bloomsburg University, some 10 years ago, she had no intention of becoming a teacher of the deaf or a sign language instructor. Her curriculum was geared for a degree in science. However, Bloomsburg's program demonstrating sign language changed that plan.

"I used to see the little deaf kids around the school - I fell in love with them - I really got to like them," she said.

Eventually, Peroni received a master's degree in teaching from Bloomsburg and began teaching at the School for the Deaf.

"One of the things that drives me nuts is when people refer to the deaf as 'deaf and dumb,'" she said. "They are not dumb, they are deaf. Hearing that makes my blood run cold."

Peroni said she thought deafness was a handicap that is often overlooked because it is not as visible as other disabilities.

"People don't realize how many people are hearing impaired," she said. "Most people think blindness is a more severe handicap than deafness, but most of the time, a deaf person has a harder time of it."

"If I were blind, we wouldn't have any problem with this interview, but if I were deaf and we had to write everything out - it would take a long time."

As I watched my teacher repeat the few letters I was having difficulty remembering, I was amazed at how quickly and naturally she could sign. "It's like when you write," she said. "You make the letters without thinking about it."

I was thinking about this new awareness I had for my hand and its fingers. The repetition was making my hand somewhat tired and I had to shake the stiffness out of my arm more than once. But it hardly bothered me at all. I was so close to mastering the alphabet.

On my fourth attempt, I would have achieved my goal except for one problem. It was not that I forgot the sign for the letter after "T." I forgot the letter. The repetition was taking its toll.

But on my fifth solo flight, I "recited" the sign language alphabet with still a few minutes left before the 20-minute allotment expired.

Next I learned how to say "My name is. . ." and a few other phrases. My ability to converse is, of course, severely limited, but not non-existent.

In teaching sign language, Peroni said, she always teaches for alphabet first. Although it would be impractical to attempt to communicate with a deaf person by spelling every word, she said learning the alphabet is important because many of the words are extensions of the symbols for the letters. Spelling in sign language, she said, is limited to names and words that have no signs.

"There is no telling where the skill can take you," she said. "But at the very least, you can use your knowledge to sign a simple greeting."

Peroni recalled a time she was on an airplane which was delayed at an airport in Rochester. She said it was announced that people taking a connecting flight to Kentucky should disembark.

As some of the people were leaving the plane, she noticed a woman who seemed confused about what was going on. It turned out the woman, who was deaf, was supposed to be on the connecting flight.

Peroni was able to sign the message to the woman who was then able to make her flight.

But what if you hadn't been there? "Exactly," she said. Peroni's address is 2062 Butler Pike, Conshohocken, Pa. 19428.

Faculty deaths

Dr. Percival R. Roberts, III, Bloomsburg, R.D. 7, Professor of art at Bloomsburg University, died October 3 at the Bloomsburg Hospital. Dr. Roberts was chairman of the Art Department from 1968 to 1983.

He was born in Newark, Delaware, November 2, 1935. Dr. Roberts received his bachelor's and master's degrees from the University of Delaware and his doctorate from Illinois State University. He served in the United States Naval Reserve from 1953 to 1960.

Dr. Roberts recently was honored by the University of Delaware as being one of 54 most prominent alumni since the founding of the school in 1743. His selection was based on his distinguished career as an artist, poet, and arts administrator. Dr. Roberts is a third generation graduate of the University of Delaware and served as Ninth Poet Laureate of the State of Delaware.

Dr. Roberts received Distinguished Teaching and Academic Service Awards from the Who's Who in American Art, Contemporary Authors and others. He served on the Visual Arts Advisory Panel and The State of the Arts Committee appointed by Governors Shapp and Thornburgh. The author of seven books of poetry and numerous articles in the field of aesthetics and art education, he also has exhibited his paintings and wood assemblages extensively.

Dr. Roberts is survived by his wife, Mary Jane McVaugh, and two daughters, Julia Winona and Mary Christina. He is also survived by his parents, Percival Roberts, Jr. and Elizabeth Eubanks Roberts, and a brother, Stephen Jon, all of Newark, DE, and a sister, Winona Suzanne, of Ottawa, Ontario.

John C. Dietrich, a former history professor at Bloomsburg University, died on January 17 in Wisconsin. He was 52.

James B. Watts, 66, former head librarian at Bloomsburg University, died December 31 at Our Lady of Perpetual Help Home in Atlanta.

He retired from the university February 2, 1978, after 11 years of service. He was serving as archivist and special services librarian at the time of his retirement.

Mr. Watts joined the library staff in 1966 as head librarian when Andross Library was being completed.

Professor Prakash C. Kapil died on January 26. Born August 19, 1931, in India, he was the son of the late Shyama N. and Hukman Devi Kapil.

A professor of political science at Bloomsburg University since August 1967, he served on many department and university committees.

Mr. Kapil graduated with honors from Delhi University and obtained a master's degree in social sciences from the same institution.

He obtained a second master's degree in political science from Penn State University, where he was a candidate for a doctoral degree in political science.

Before coming to this country, he worked as a social worker with the government in Delhi and as a news correspondent for the English Daily in New Delhi. He was a member of the Association of Indians in America.

In addition to family members in India, he is survived by his wife, the former Nirmal Pandit, whom he married on March 4, 1974; and a son, Rajesh, at home.

Athletic Director

The wrestling team successfully defended its Pennsylvania Conference Championship recently by outscoring runner-up Lock Haven 161 to 143. Clarion University finished third. Rick and Rock Bonomo are currently ranked third in the nation and were selected to represent the East in the East-West All-Star meet held at Utah University in Logan, Utah.

The dates for various summer sports campus sponsored by the university's athletic department is found elsewhere in this edition of THE QUARTERLY. If your children or friends are considering a sports camp this summer, please recommend ours. Remember all profits go to our scholarship fund.

Spring is just around the corner. We are planning a week-long trip to visit various alumni chapters. If your chapter is interested in seeing some highlight films and in talking to Coaches Landis, Chronister, me and possibly the new director of development, Tony Janiero, please let us know. We would be happy to visit you and reminisce about the "Friendly College on the Hill."

Eight of coach Mary Gardner's swimmers headed South for Spring Break. They represented BU at the Division II National Swimming and Diving Championships in Orlando, Florida. The National qualifiers were Gwen Cressman, Orlando, Florida. (100-200 yd. Backstroke, 100 yd. Free Style, 200 IM, 200 Medley Relay, 400 Medley Relay, 800 Free Relay, and 400 yd. Free Relay); Kelly Knaus, Edinboro, PA. (200 yd. Butterfly, 200 & 400 IM, 200, 400, 800 Free Relay); Beth Roeder, York, PA. (200 Butterfly, 200 & 400 Medley Relay); Dana Grubb, Lebanon, PA. (100 yd. Free Style, 200, 400 Free Relay, and 800 Free Relay); Paulette Fahringer, Berwick, PA (200 Free Relay, 400 Free Relay); Crystal Wilt, Dover, PA (200, 400 Medley Relay); Kim Mader, York, PA (200, 800 Free Relay); and Margaret Norris, Carlisle, PA. (One-Meter Diving).

Four of Roger Sanders' wrestlers qualified for the NCAA Division I Championships held on March 13-16 in Oklahoma City. Rick (118) and Rock (126) Bonomo, Hunlock Creek, and Darrin Evans (177), Slatington, took their respective weights at the EWL to earn the trip, while Senior John McFadden (190) Oakland, N.J., won a wild-card berth to round out the qualifiers. The Huskies took third at the EWL's, behind host Lock Haven and winner Penn State.

The BANQUET OF CHAMPIONS will be held May 5, 7:00 p.m., in the Scranton Commons. Cost is $10.00 per person, half of which pays for a student athlete. Join us in paying tribute to some of our finest athletes.

The annual meeting of all Husky Club members will be held in conjunction with the Maroon and Gold Football Game on May 4. Lunch will be $3.00 per person. The meeting will be held at Nelson Field House in class room 255. The lunch will be outside, weather permitting. Send reservations to: Athletic Office, Bloomsburg University, Bloomsburg, PA 17815.

The Husky Club is accepting nominations for its Athletic Hall of Fame Program. Anyone wishing to nominate an outstanding BU athlete who graduated at least five years ago, contact: Dr. Robert D. Warren, c/o Athletic Office, Nelson Field House, Bloomsburg University, Bloomsburg, PA 17815.

Justine Landis wins second title

Bloomsburg University's Justine Landis won her second straight No. 1 singles championship in the Pennsylvania Conference women's tennis championships last fall.

Landis, a senior elementary education major, needs only six wins in the spring season to become the university's all-time women's tennis win leader. The spring season normally involves about 10 matches.

"I think I can break the record. Hopefully, I will," said Landis, who is student teaching this semester and will graduate in May. Her career tennis record at BU is 54-13, and she was 12-1 in the fall season.

Landis, the tournament's top-seeded player, lost only 10 of 46 games in winning her three matches in the '84 championships. She said the competition was tougher this year and that she did not play as well as when she won the event in '83.

"I did play better in the finals, though," Landis said. She beat her Edinboro opponent, 6-3, 6-1, for the title.

BU finished eighth out of the 14 state universities competing, while Shippensburg took the team title.

Landis will find out in March whether she has been invited to the NCAA Division II championships for the second straight year. She lost in the first round last year.

BU grid star Frank Sheptock and Head Coach George Landis were the featured guests at a meeting of BU alumni in Mt. Carmel on March 12.

Sheptock, a junior inside linebacker who has been a two-time first team All-American, spoke about his experiences on the rejuvenated BU team. Landis talked about this year's recruiting efforts and his expectations for spring football.

Bulletin: Wrestler Rick Bonomo wins national title at 118

Does anyone know who were the first Bloomsburg athletes to win state track and field championships?

Nicholas Rudawski '32 won the shot-put and discus titles on May 14, 1932, while Francis D. "Doc" Sell '35 won the 880 title on May 11, 1935.

If you know of earlier titles, please let us know.

Summer camps

Fifteen weeks of summer camps will be offered at BU in 1985, according to Roger Sanders, athletic director:

Tennis — (1) June 16 to June 22 and (2) June 30 to July 4

Wrestling — Father-Son Weekend, June 21-23, Midget Week, June 24-27, Regular weeks, July 1 to July 4, and July 7 to July 11.

Men's Basketball — (1) June 23 to June 28 and (2) July 7 to July 12.

Softball — July 14 to July 19.

Football — July 21 to July 25.

Track & Field — (1) July 21 to July 25 and (2) July 28 to August 1.

Soccer Day Camp — July 29 to August 2.

Cheerleading (ADTA) — August 4 to August 7; Junior Division, August 11 to August 14.

General Day Camp — July 29-August 2

For more information, please contact Roger Sanders, Athletic Director, Bloomsburg University, Bloomsburg, PA 17815.

Alumni support student research

Student Feature Writer

The Alumni Association provided over $2,700 in funds last year for BU student research on topics ranging from fetal alcohol syndrome to attitude studies on nuclear power.

In the first year of Alumni Association funding, ten different BU students received money that could be used for anything related to the research. Several thousand dollars will be issued again this year. Whether it is for a rat cage or a bus ticket, the money is essential for many students' research.

Lynn Brobyn, who last December earned her master's degree in early childhood education from BU, used Alumni money to complete a "very successful" thesis project. Her research with fetal alcohol syndrome told her more about the effects of alcohol on rat fetuses and may eventually tell her more about the effects of alcohol of human fetuses.

Brobyn's project involved the breeding of three female rats by one male rat. Twenty-one days prior to breeding, one female rat was started on a daily ingestion of heavy amounts of grain alcohol, the equivalent of a fifth of a gallon, another received moderate amounts, or the quantity contained in two cocktails; and the third female rat received none.

Brobyn said the various quantities of alcohol ingested by the rats made her project original — a requirement by the funding committee. She said subjects under study in similar projects are ingested with excessive amounts of alcohol, caffeine or saccharin that guarantee the "findings of expected differences."

From her study of the rats in 13 different mazes and through open-field observation and other means, Brobyn concluded that the offspring of the drinking mothers "were adversely affected in birthweight, growth and development and intellectual functioning, but were not significantly affected on lower-level, instinctual behaviors such as rearing and grooming."

Brobyn, who has worked with several mental health and drug rehabilitation organizations, hopes to use her research findings in dealing with human fetal alcohol syndrome.

Brobyn conducted her research in Bloomsburg, but for Diane Blyler '84, researching meant a trip to Canada.

After exhausting all research materials at BU's Andrus and other area libraries, Blyler needed money to travel to the University of Toronto and York University, both in Toronto, to conclude research and finish her critical edition of the first edition of T.S. Eliot's poem "The Waste Land."

Blyler used alumni money to spend 10 days in Toronto in what turned out to be virtually the beginning of her research instead of the end.

She is now involved with a "comprehensive and complete critical edition," and she hopes to be done with the research by the end of August.

Currently, though, she is conducting master's work at Dalhousie University in Halifax, Nova Scotia. She hopes to finish by April 1986, and plans to do her doctoral studies at the same university.

Blyler is confident that Dalhousie will be supportive in recruiting a publisher for her book-length monograph if the research is completed by this September.

White Blyler's research has led her to a more comprehensive project, two other Alumni-funded researchers used their projects to attain a better understanding of their future professions.

Steven Miller, a senior psychology major, studied the effects of intracranial injections of cholecystokinin octapeptide (CCK 8) and amphetamine on the behavior of rats. Although Miller did not prove what he had planned to, he said that in terms of learning procedures, reading related literature and studying results, the project was "very worthwhile."

Miller was advised by Dr. Steven Cohen, BU professor of psychology who has worked with CCK 8 for several years. Miller used various techniques that Cohen has developed in examining the effects of CCK 8 on rats.

CCK is a peptide found in the human stomach, and it controls the emptying of the gall bladder. It has been localized in parts of the brain, and, through its connection with the central nervous system, is thought to cause response suppression. Miller's project was designed to prove this, but his results were "inconclusive."

One of the most important reasons for studying CCK is its relationship with several mental disorders. Both the mind and the nervous system are affected by neuropsychiatric diseases, such as Parkinson's disease and schizophrenia, Miller reported.

Miller also stressed the importance of CCK's relationship with satiety, the feeling of being fed to or beyond gratification.

Miller worked the full fall semester on the project and has written a 20-page research background on CCK effects.

A fourth researcher used alumni money and was also paid by the PP&L Susquehanna Steam Electric Station for his study of the plant's economic impact Peter Mehr, a business economics major planning to graduate this May, conducted the three-month study under the advisement of economics professor W. B. Lee.

Mehr studied the income, employment, taxation, savings and population effects of the plant on the surrounding area, particularly Columbia and Luzerne counties.

"It (the research) was a good starting point for econometrics work," Mehr said. Econometrics involves the use of statistics in doing economic analyses, and Mehr is hoping for a position in an independent firm that conducts such work.

Mehr concluded in his study, "It is obvious that while PP&L supplies utility services . . . it is equally true that the SSES offers tremendous economic benefits to the economies of Luzerne and Columbia counties."

Mehr is waiting for replies to his graduate school applications at Cornell, Penn State, Rutgers and the University of Delaware.

Other alumni-supported researchers, their areas of study and their project topics were Jane (Miller) Matsko, biology, malnourishment; Tammy Clewell, sociology/social welfare, congressional voting patterns; Sherri Levin, sociology/social welfare, nuclear attitudes; Bruce Cart, biology and allied health sciences, soil and plant growth study; and Maria DeMatteo and Jane Stuehling, sociology/social welfare, rape survey.

When Don Hock '68 takes the stage, his audience gets ready for a lot of hand-waving and, from time to time, a little foot-stomping. No, Hock isn't a gospel singer. During the week, he's Bloomsburg University's director of budget and administrative services, on the weekend, he's one of the Susquehanna Valley's leading auctioneers.

Donning a Stetson-like cowboy hat and armed with a judge's gavel, Hock takes the microphone from 30 to 50 weekends a year to chant out stanzas that all end with the word "Sold!" Using lines like "Won't this look great in your bathroom?" Hock sells to the highest bidders almost everything, including houses, coal-mining equipment and salt and pepper shaker collections.

One of only six state directors of the Pennsylvania Auctioneer's Association, Hock got into the auction business about 10 years ago. Now it's a family affair. His wife, Ginger, is the secretary for their auctions, their daughter is the clerk and their son is the auction runner. "I took up auctioneering as a means of relaxation. It's a change of pace after working with figures all day," said the 16-year veteran of BU budget analysis.

Hock said his wife, an antique buff, took him to a lot of auctions in search of antiques and collectibles. After spending so much time at them with her, he found he liked the business enough to start doing it himself. "It's a lot of fun. Some people go hiking, dancing, swimming and the like for relaxation. I use all of my free time for auctions," he added.

"Not only do they offer a service to people who need to raise money or to sell off things they no longer use or need, but auctions offer bidders great buys. They can buy a sofa for $200 at an auction that might cost them $1,000 in the store," Hock said.

Hock added that auctioning is "like baseball and apple pie." It's a part of the American culture — especially in Northeastern Pennsylvania. Estates are a big part of the auction business, but "you also find a lot of elderly people moving into these new highrises. They can't take everything with them, so they auction off seven or eight rooms of furniture from their 10-room homes."

The other fun thing about auctions, according to Hock, is "the entertainment. You hear a lot of good jokes and there is plenty of socializing going on. Even the churches set up food stands for refreshments.

"The only thing you have to be careful about is getting caught up in the bidding. When coming to an auction, you have to have a pre-determined value of what you want to pay for an item, they you have to stick with that amount."

Hock said that some myths about auctions include tales like, "Don't wave at an insect, you'll find you've bought yourself a $2,000 brass bed. Usually auctioneers know when a person is bidding — some bid by a wink of the eye, others scratch their ears, but most raise their hands or numbers."

Aside from knowing their bidders, auctioneers also have a wide range of other skills, from fumigating bedding to handling advertising in newspapers. They have to be able to recognize valuables and collectibles such as depression glassware and antiques.

As far as benefits for the seller, a day-long auction can bring in as little as $900 to as much as $40,000, he said.

His auctioneering does not interfere with his job at BU, Hock said. He noted that budget analysis is his "bread and butter, and that's the real gospel!"

Gifts to BU total $856,871 during 1984

Friends, alumni, corporations and foundations donated and/or pledged $856,871 in gifts, grants and equipment to Bloomsburg University during the past year.

The contributions to the 146-year-old university include a single donation of a half million dollars to the university's scholarship fund, approximately $79,000 to the BU Alumni Association General Fund, a $40,000 anonymous gift, nearly $25,000 in word-processing equipment from Topp Telecom of Scranton and $19,200 in cash contributions from Air Products & Chemicals of Allentown.

According to Anthony Ianiero, director of development at BU, the largest gift came from Marco and Louise Mitrani. The Mitranis donated $500,000 to the university for the establishment of the "Marco and Louise Mitrani Scholarships" fund. Interest from the fund will be used to award academic scholarships to BU students who have demonstrated scholastic merit and potential.

Alumni giving includes $13,677 in matching gifts from companies which employ BU graduates who contributed to the university's annual fund. The highest giving companies included Pennsylvania Power and Light Company, IBM Corporation, Prudential Insurance Company and the Sperry Corporation. Also, top alumni givers by class were graduates of 1972 with 207 persons donating a total of $7,396, reported Doug Hippenstiel, director of alumni affairs at BU.

The $40,000 anonymous gift was donated to assist the university in its renovation of the Haas Center for the Arts. Other funds include donations from the United Penn Bank, Perdue Farms, Inc., Pepsi Cola, Coke, Berwick Forge & Fabricating, Bethlehem Steel, IBM, Kawneer and Air Products and Chemicals.

Additional cash donations from individuals tallied at $34,109, including $6,000 in contributions to the James H. McCormick Scholarship Fund. A deferred gift of $75,000 also targeted for scholarships as well as computers and printers on loan to BU from IBM and the Tandy Corp. are not included in the $856,871 total. However, gifts-in-kind gave BU $57,966 in other equipment.

"These gifts supplement Bloomsburg's annual budget, allowing for the development of student scholarships, providing for additional equipment and funding projects that benefit the entire university community," Ianiero said.

Head of development at BU since January of 1984, Ianiero works with corporations, foundations and individuals to inform them about university programs. "He's done a superb job of communicating the university's needs and identifying new sources of support," said John H. Walker, BU's vice president for institutional advancement, about Ianiero.

"The response from friends of the university has been gratifying," he added.

RECRUITER -- Ray Leister '74 returned to campus recently to interview seniors interested in working for Ingersoll-Rand. Ray lives in Bethlehem.

SURPRISE! -- When Meghan Mullen and her mother decided to attend a reception for prospective BU students at King-of-Prussia, they didn't expect to see another member of the family there. Soan Mullen, a sophomore at BU and president-elect of the Community Government Association, was part of the contingent from BU who attended the reception. The Mullens are shown with Dr. Larry W. Jones, interim BU president. About 100 people attended the program which was coordinated by Anne Connell '77, assistant dean of admissions.

Important reminders

Have you purchased your copy of PROFILE OF THE PAST, A LIVING LEGACY, the history of Bloomsburg University from 1839 to 1979?

When the history was published in 1982 by the Alumni Association, we estimated that 10-15 percent of our alumni would eventually buy a copy. We therefore ordered 3,500 copies, a realistic number.

This handsome volume, written by Eda Bessie Edwards, Class of 1941, is the result of several years of careful research. The result is an interesting account of how a modest academy evolved to a multi-purpose university. The narrative features anecdotes about BU traditions and more than 100 photographs.

To date, about 1,400 copies have been purchased. If you would like a copy, but have put it off, you can purchase one at the Alumni Office for $8.50 or by mail for $9.95. Don't let your copy remain in the storeroom here at BU; put it in your home where it belongs!

You may use the response form below.

It's still not too late to sign up for the trip to Hawaii this summer, but the deadline for deposits is near. Contact the Alumni Office (717-389-4058) for details, or use the response form below.

Another deadline that is approaching is the one for ordering a 1985 BU Alumni Directory. As reported earlier, we have made tentative arrangements to publish a soft-cover, 8.5 by 11-inch directory which will sell for $12.50. It will be ready for distribution by Homecoming 1985. But we must have 2,000 orders to proceed with the project. To date, we have only 500. We must make a decision by mid-April, so let us know if you are interested by using the response form below.

REMINDER: The Annual Fund Report for 1984, included in this QUARTERLY, lists those alumni and friends who contributed between January 1, 1984 and December 31, 1984. If you sent your contribution since January 1, 1985, your name will appear in the report for 1985.

For the first time, alumni were given the option of NOT having their names appear on the list of contributors. If you checked that box on the response card, "Anonymous" should appear on the list in place of your name. Unfortunately, the computer was not programmed to indicate that a spouse should also be anonymous, so some spouses' names may appear. We hope to have this situation corrected by next year. Thank you for your patience.

Without doubt, the Class Notes section of THE QUARTERLY is the most popular feature. People like to read news about their classmates.

We encourage you to take advantage of this opportunity to tell friends the good news in your life. Don't be bashful! (And send photos, too!)

BU ALUMNI RESPONSE FORM

- I am planning to attend my class reunion this year. Please send me details.
- I would like to purchase a copy of PROFILE OF THE PAST, A LIVING LEGACY. Enclosed is $9.95, which includes postage.
- I am interested in going on the Hawaii trip in June. Please call me at _____.
- I would like to buy a copy of the 1985 Alumni Directory (if one is published) at a cost of $12.50. Send no money at this time. (If you have already indicated your interest, you need not do so again.)
- I would like to receive information about estate planning.

'Drop-outs' earn doctorates

By the middle of Robert Parrish's junior year in high school, he had missed 55 days of school. Yet, as he put it, he "was as healthy as a horse."

By the middle of Jesse Bryan's senior year, he had been captain of the football and basketball teams, president of the choir and dramatics club, and an assistant in his physics and history classes.

Yet both men dropped out of high school and joined the Navy.

They now hold doctoral degrees and administrative positions at Bloomsburg University. Parrish is vice president for administration and treasurer of the university, while Bryan is director of the Center for Academic Development.

As a youngster, despite his involvement in school activities, Bryan found his classes boring. "I thought high school was beneath me. I had many other things to do, and I didn't want to waste a whole lot of time doing the menial things other people were doing. High school wasn't useful or challenging for me."

Consequently, in 1956, Bryan left his home in Lumberton, N.C., to become one of the Navy's first black fire control technicians. Traditionally, blacks were appointed to positions as cooks and stewards in the Navy. However, because Bryan, although he was a school dropout, made the highest score on the Navy's achievement exam, he was named education petty officer.

"When they called my name, everybody looked at me as though either I had made a mistake by standing up, or the Navy had made a mistake on the scores. It was kind of funny," Bryan said.

Parrish was also bored with high school. "I was not interested in what we consider the bread and butter courses like algebra and geometry. I was sort of a punk and had a gang."

Two members of that gang, Sonny and Charlie, persuaded him to join the Navy. At that time, the farthest Parrish had been from his home in Bellaire, Ohio, was the 60 miles it took to get to the botanical gardens in Pittsburgh. The lure of cruising around the world on a destroyer made him "badger" his parents until they "threw up their hands in despair." He recalls, "My mother almost had a heart attack."

Parrish did so well on the exams he took his first day at boot camp that he was sent inland to attend school. So he waved goodbye to Sonny and Charlie, who were put out to sea.

Parrish got his opportunity to see the world by cruising for three years on the aircraft carrier Wasp. "I had a good time," said Parrish. "Every time we went out to sea, it was a thrill when the wind would come across the deck."

After completing his years of military service, Parrish returned to Bellaire and went to work with the treasurer of Interstate Truck Service. While walking down the street one day, he ran into a former high school chemistry teacher who was then the dean of a branch campus of Ohio University.

The dean urged him to take some courses, but not until Parrish learned that the GI bill would pay his tuition did he enroll in an accounting course. He remembers returning to school "with a lot of trepidation." However, after successfully completing his first course, he took more.

In addition to working eight hours a day, he continued his schooling by taking a heavy load of evening courses — 18-21 hours a semester.

The branch campus of Ohio University offered only a two-year program. In order to pursue his education further, Parrish had to attend the main campus in Athens.

"It's funny now when I look at all the soul-searching I was doing as to whether or not to leave that sure position — and I think I was making about $275 a month — to go off and do this abstract thing of going to school," says Parrish. At that point, however, he believed he had invested too much time in his education to quit again.

There still was not smooth sailing ahead for Parrish. During his junior year, it was discovered that Parrish had never officially applied to the university, nor had he received a high school diploma. The General Educational Development certificate he earned in the Navy was not sufficient. At the age of 24, then, he returned to high school to take the required civics class to earn his diploma.

Parrish was 27 when he received his bachelor's degree in commerce. His first position in higher education was at Florida Atlantic University — where he eventually earned master's and doctoral degrees — as comptroller and budget officer.

Bryan also had a mentor who encouraged him to continue his education. Dr. Winston Coleman, dean of Johnson C. Smith University in Charlotte, N.C., was the father of one of Bryan's friends. He followed Bryan into a pool hall one day, suggested he do something better with his time, and convinced Bryan to attend college.

Similar to Parrish's situation, Bryan's high school would not give him a diploma, even though he had completed studies with the United States Armed Forces Institute. Bryan entered college on a probationary basis.

Philosophy was the only course Bryan found challenging, and he recalls his frustration at only managing to earn a grade of B. Other students whose work was not particularly outstanding earned A's, said Bryan.

"I asked (the professor) 'Why?' " said Bryan, "and he said, 'They did all they could do. You have more to do.' "

Bryan has devoted years to the counseling and education of disadvantaged youth, but he came very close to becoming a lawyer. In fact, he said, "I was on my way to law school — on the bus. I looked out of the window as we rode by a school. Kids were out in the schoolyard playing. It was only nine o'clock in the morning! I said, 'That's a shame. Somebody ought to change that.' I rode about 10 miles and said, 'If somebody changes that, it probably will be me.' So, I got off the bus at the next station."

Jesse Bryan

"I see myself doing many of the things that were done for me — providing an atmosphere for education to occur. It's a take-off on what Dr. Coleman did for me."

Bryan took sabbatical from BU in 1977 to earn his Ph.D. from the University of Toledo.

Instead of entering law school, Bryan attended the University of Georgia, where he received his certificate in counseling disadvantaged youths. He continued his study of counseling and guidance and came to BU as director of the equal opportunity program.

FM station nears reality

(EDITOR'S NOTE: The following article was written by Allen Maurer '72 for the Press-Enterprise.)

If all goes well, BU's FM radio station, WBUQ, will go on the air at 91.1 in mid-March, says William Acerno, BU communications professor.

Broadcasting from 6 p.m. until midnight, the 1,000-watt station will serve much of Columbia and Montour counties. Funding for the station's tower was included in the budget for the new McCormick Human Resources Center.

"We'll be playing primarily new music," said Dan Fickes, 22, who will be general manager. "That's not new wave. We want to be the first to play the music any artist comes out with. When it hits the Top 40 list, we'll stop playing it."

Other programs will include: jazz, Christian rock, country, classic and a science show, Miracles and Molecules, once a week.

Also, local programming of various types is being considered.

"We want to become involved with the community," Acerno said.

Now that it's about to become a reality, the station is generating excitement among radio-TV majors at BU.

"A lot of people come up to me and say they want to do news, advertising, or other jobs for us," Fickes said. He expects the AM station's 75-person staff to expand.

Since it has an educational broadcasting license, the station will accept underwriting from businesses, but not advertising.

"Still, you can do a lot more with that now than you used to," Fickes said. "You can play a store's jingle in the background—as long as the name isn't mentioned—stuff like that."

Both Acerno and Fickes said they want feedback from the community regarding programming.

"We want people in the community to make suggestions," Fickes said.

Eventually, the station will broadcast locally produced radio dramas, Acerno hopes. In the meantime, Acerno and Fickes are seeking rights to old-time radio shows such as The Shadow.

Acerno sees the FM station as the beginning of a communications program at BU that has the potential to become one of the best in the state.

The McCormick facilities include television equipment and, down the road, COMSAT's satellite antenna may provide service to the university, Acerno said.

"If it is," he said, "we'll have capabilities matched by only a handful of universities in the nation."

Many alumni practice law

A number of BU alumni are graduates of various law schools, and most of them are practicing attorneys, according to Martin M. Gildea, pre-law advisor.

The largest group have graduated from Dickinson School of Law: Jerry Malinowski '63, William Gering '67, James Rosin '67, James Purcell '51, Gregory Kirk '70, Jered L. Hock '63, Elizabeth A. Dougherty '80, Richard W. Knecht '81, Thomas E. Reilly Jr., Donna R. Miller '81; Sherwood L. Yergey '56; Dorothy C. Messner '71.

Graduating from Temple Law School were Judge John Lavelle '41, David Styer '68, Sharon Federovich Harvey '73, and George Litterer '68; Carol J. Lauchman '71.

Other attorneys, with their schools, include: E. Stanley Covington '59, Howard University; Otis Johnson '66, Howard; Joseph Romano '74, Ohio Northern; Joseph Storaska '72, Ohio Northern; Eileen Albertson '67, William and Mary; Gregory Horan '70, Cornell; Betty Hoover Wolfe '54, University of California at Davis; Carolyn Carr '74, University of Virginia; Cheryl Furey '66, Villanova; Elwood Harding '68, Tuskegee Institute; William J. Yarworth '39, University of Maryland; Beth Lynn Thomas '81, Widener University; Thomas Little '62, University of Delaware; John Fick '75, Cleveland Marshall; Richard W. Terrill '75, New York Law School; Chris L. McPhillips '82, Pepperdine University; Joseph A. Mattise '77, Hamline University; Karen J. Koch '77, Ohio Northern.

This is only a partial listing. If you were not included, please contact the Alumni Office.

Poetry reflected love

By SUSAN STRATTON
Student Feature Writer

William Lloyd Sutliff, who spent more than four decades as a Bloomsburg student, teacher and dean, died 23 years ago. Through the poetry he left behind, however, Sutliff continues to celebrate the Bloomsburg institution that he knew.

Sutliff anonymously voiced his dedication and love for the Bloomsburg student through "Alma Mater and Other Poems," written in the first third of the century. His poems catch the spirit of Bloomsburg State Teachers College and impart a sense of heritage and hope for the future.

The poems first appeared in The Maroon and Gold, predecessor to the Campus Voice, under the pen name "Q." Sutliff's secretary, Mrs. Gertrude Horne, clipped and saved the poems over the years. At Sutliff's retirement on May 22, 1937, the collection was presented to him in a bound volume, copies of which were sold in the College Book Store for years after.

An area native, Sutliff graduated from Bloomsburg Literary Institute and State Normal School in 1891. He taught at Bloomsburg, then entered Lafayette College, where he earned his B.A. in 1898 and his M.A. in 1900. Sutliff then returned to Bloomsburg full-time as teacher, team manager, and substitute administrator. At one point, Sutliff was the entire department of mathematics.

In 1921, Sutliff was appointed Bloomsburg's first dean of instruction. As dean, he supervised all student records and class scheduling. His poem, "On Being Dean," reflects Sutliff's attitude toward paperwork generated by 8,000 files:

... These files are alive, they cannot annoy, when each stands out as boy or girl ...
This is the thing twixt the lines in the files, that makes the job easy and smooths the rough miles.

In his poetry, Sutliff brought school landmarks to life. The dean became "The Old Oak on South Walk," looking down on the young students and saying softly, "... these bright faced boys and girls; / Long have my gnarled arms reached out to shelter them." In "The New Training School," he says, "... deep there lives within my walls, / a soul that to the children calls."

The Class of 1937 expressed students' esteem for Sutliff in their Obiter dedication: "... to him who has caught the soul of the campus and set it fast to rhyme and rhythm ... to 'Q' this book is reverently dedicated."

At his retirement, Bloomsburg alumni honored Sutliff with the largest turnout to that date.

In 1957, a local press article reported Sutliff's 90th birthday celebration, stating, "The Dean ... hasn't changed much in the 20 years since his retirement." The article said Sutliff walked "with a firm step," spoke "in a firm voice," and discussed present and past events clearly.

As in "To The Old Pine Tree," Sutliff found "the secret of enduring youth." In a recording played for alumni the spring before his death, he said he enjoyed his work, "especially in keeping in contact with young people, for one does not grow old very fast when you have that opportunity."

The cornerstone of William Boyd Sutliff Hall was laid in 1958, with the dean in attendance. In 1960, Sutliff highlighted the building's dedication with thought-provoking comments.

Two years later, three weeks before his 95th birthday, William Boyd Sutliff died. Through his poems he lives on, linking Bloomsburg Literary Institute and State Normal School and Bloomsburg State Teachers College to Bloomsburg University.

The yolk's in his paint

Editor's note: The following article was originally published in COMMUNIQUE, a newsletter published by BU for its staff and faculty.

The incredible edible egg has many uses. It helps make quiche, omelets, sandwiches, salads, souffles and brilliant colorful paintings. That's right, paintings!

BU art professor Kenneth Wilson is one of few artists in the country using egg yolks and sometimes egg whites as a base for his paints.

Called egg tempera, the process binds ground colored pigments, mixed with distilled water, to painting surfaces. The natural oil of the egg yolk makes the hardened paint permanent on its surface, and it gives the paint a transparent brilliancy.

Derived from Greek wall art, egg tempera was used extensively during the Middle Ages by great religious painters. The 14th century Italian masters filled their churches with brilliant, colorful paintings depicting the life of Christ.

"Until the latter part of the 15th century, egg tempera was the major painting medium due to its permanence and jewel-like colors," Wilson said.

"Afterwards, when painters changed from gesso (masonite panels with layers of mixed rabbit-skin glue and fine lime powder called whiting) to canvas, the new surface was not firm enough to support egg tempera. Consequently, use and teaching of this medium all but died out," the artist said.

A few years ago, after reading about Middle Ages art, Wilson decided he would join in egg tempera contributions with a few other national artists — including Pennsylvanian Andrew Wyeth, who is well known for his paintings filled with people, and Yar Chomicky, who uses egg tempera to create lyrical landscapes.

Wilson has found that only a few artists are using this method because "there is very little written about it, and it's a time-consuming process."

The art professor has taken steps to correct this slight to egg tempera. While on sabbatical in 1982, Wilson visited museums across the United States and in Italy, viewing and studying noted art tempera exhibits. He then compiled his findings into "An Artist's Notebook," and is now making BU one of the few universities with specialized study in egg tempera art.

Expense can deter students from studying egg tempera, however. A two-ounce jar of cadmium red powder costs twice as much as other colors used in non-egg tempera paints. Wilson says, though, that "this product (egg tempera) lasts three times as long as oil does."

Two BU students have overlooked the hindrances and are emphasizing egg tempera painting in their studies toward master's degrees in art. Sharon Cressinger of Selinsgrove and Lynn Monserat of Bloomsburg "grew fast as watercolor painters and are now working to master egg tempera," Wilson said.

As Wilson said about teaching in general, the better he is at painting and drawing, the better his students will become. He hopes that process holds true with egg tempera.

"Perhaps one day, when people speak generally of the egg, they'll think of vibrant colors springing from gessos, not breakfast," Wilson said.

He never expected to be warden

Editor's Note: The following article about Raymond Yachimowski Jr. '73 was written by Leon Bogdan of the Press-Enterprise staff, Bloomsburg.

He's one of the nicest guys you'd never want to meet.

And chances are any encounter with 33-year-old Raymond Yachimowski Jr. in his Iron Street office is strictly by your choice, not his.

"It's the old cliché — it's a nasty job, but somebody has to do it," says the bearded, husky man behind the bright gold warden's badge at the Columbia County Prison.

"The job takes its toll. At times, I feel I've aged 55 years. You can think of anything that might happen in a prison environment, and it's probably happened here.

"But I like to feel I'm doing the community, and the inmates, a service. I do have a strong belief in Christ, and His guidance can help."

At present, Yachimowski is in charge of a staff of 24 and a diverse inmate population that varies from 45-60. In May, he'll have spent five years in the job.

It's not a job one leaves behind at the end of the shift — a warden stays a warden 24 hours a day, taking the anxiety and concerns over security, budget and personnel home with him. His family learns to accept phone calls in the middle of the night.

The maxim guiding any good corrections official should be, "Expect the unexpected," Yachimowski says.

"We're a medium-security prison holding high-security-risk inmates," he explains. "You're dealing with 50 to 60 persons of different mentalities and all types of crimes — all in the same block together.

"But they're made aware pretty quickly that rabble rousers won't readily be released on parole by Judge Jay W. Myers," he continues, citing the court's firm policy on denying parole to an inmate with "write-ups," a guard's written report of misbehavior.

"And you better believe that after being behind those steel doors for six to 11 months, you really don't relish another 60 days."

His job? The three C's — care, custody and control, says Yachimowski. Punishment is not his responsibility.

"I'm not out to punish people. The punishment is really mental punishment the individual has brought on himself — being locked up, separated from his family, being told when to eat, when to get up and go to bed. That's the real punishment.

"And they wouldn't be in here if they hadn't acted against society on the outside," he goes on. "The biggest thing that keeps someone out of prison is a fear of prison.

"But it takes a certain type of personality for this job. In a word? Fair. You have to be compassionate when compassion is called for, and strict when discipline is needed.

"You really have to look for that middle ground. What does the Bible say, something like, 'Treat a prisoner as your brother?' I am held accountable for the lives of these people. You have to treat them as human beings, and I think I do that."

In a rural county of some 64,000 people, it's not unusual for the warden to see a familiar face passing through Iron Street.

"I've even had a distant relative of my own and friends come through here, but they play by the same rules as any other inmate."

Trained as an educator-counselor in the social sciences, Yachimowski never envisioned himself as a prison warden.

A 1973 graduate of Bloomsburg State College who later acquired his master's degree, Yachimowski spent one year in the classroom as a student teacher.

But an interest in law enforcement attracted him instead to a job in the county sheriff's office, where he spent five years before leaving as chief deputy under Sheriff Vic Vandling to take over as warden in May 1980.

Former Warden George Keiser had just resigned, shortly after a new county administration took office, to take a job in Delaware.

"I took it on as a challenge, and it's definitely been that," Yachimowski says. "But I have a good man in (Deputy Warden) Tom (Bauman), a professional staff that knows how to respond to any situation, and a good, cooperative relationship with the prison board."

Each day, the warden must deal with an inmate's problems by arranging counselling, approving or denying phone calls or visits from the outside.

Also, the warden acts on inmate requests ranging from special diet to as harmless an item as having a radio.

A radio powered by an electric cord is out, he explains, as it can be used as a suicide or offensive device. Large batteries are also out, as they can become bludgeons.

An escape, though rare, can be "one of the worst experiences there is" for a warden, he says. "You pray nobody is hurt while the inmate's out.

"But escape is part of the vernacular. As tight as security is, that's not saying tonight or tomorrow there won't be an escape. It even happens at the so-called 'escape-proof' penitentiaries."

As can be imagined, a warden, while keeping a low profile, still makes his enemies.

"Oh yeah, you get mail from the inmate who calls you the SOB, but it goes the other route, too. I've received letters from parents or a wife thanking me for the changes they notice in a husband, for example, who gets back home.

"It all goes back to getting treated the way you want to be treated, and I often think of myself as being placed behind those bars, wondering how I'd feel."

Raymond Yachimowski

Officials comment on national report

Higher education has problems ranging from low standards and salaries to too little emphasis on the liberal arts and too much on vocational training, according to a recent report on the conditions of American colleges.

Bloomsburg University officials are exploring the implications of the report, which was prepared by a panel of prominent educators and presented to U.S. Education Secretary Terrell H. Bell.

Larry Jones, interim president at BU, said the report, entitled, "Involvement in Learning: Realizing the Potential of American Higher Education" will be a "major topic for discussion at BU for the next few months."

The report has serious implications for all Pennsylvania colleges. Although the state has 119 colleges, only 42 percent of the state's high school graduates go to college, ranking the state 45th in the nation.

"We in the education field will have to work further with basic education to develop strategies together to raise that percentage of Pennsylvanians going on to college," said Jones. "Higher education is not only a proven road to economic progress and a higher quality of life, but it also means change, enlightenment and personal satisfaction."

According to Jones, the report is "thoughtful and reflective. I am satisfied that we are on the right track in many of the areas examined."

Some of the report's criticisms and recommendations, followed by BU's status in the same area:

□ Nationally, only 50 percent of college students earn bachelor's degrees; 62.5 percent of BU students complete their degrees.

□ Across the country, 41 percent of all faculty members are part-time employees; at BU, the figure is under 3 percent.

□ The report calls for reducing the number of graduate assistants and less-experienced instructors teaching first- and second-year courses; many full professors teach freshman and sophomore level classes at BU.

□ The report call for more internships, and there are a number of intern programs at BU, ranging from work-study and assistantships to student teaching, tutoring and cooperative education programs with businesses.

□ The report urged increased and strengthened core curricula for all undergraduates; BU requires its undergraduates to take 54 hours of liberal-arts courses in its core curricula, just six hours short of the report's recommendation. "Unlike colleges criticized in this area, our general education program is not just a potpourri of courses chosen by students," said Jones. "Instead, the core program is structured to help students become well-rounded and proficient in various arts, sciences, and communications courses."

Kalyan Ghosh, acting provost and vice president for academic affairs at BU, praised the report for its comprehensiveness, and said of its specific recommendations, "We've known and have been doing some of those for a long time. I agree with most of the report's contents, particularly on the decline of liberal arts studies and the increase in vocationalism. However, as long as the employers who are hiring college graduates are demanding this type of educational

International day

The BU International Relations Club sponsored an international day at Millville High School in the fall.

Students from approximately 15 foreign countries displayed favorite food dishes, cultural items such as dress, carvings, currencies, and music of their native lands. Music was also provided by a group of singers from the Third World Society.

Nations represented were Afghanistan, Indonesia, Sri Lanka, India, Ghana, Peru, Japan, Philippines, Iran, Cameroon, Brazil, Thailand, Hong Kong, Saudi Arabia and South Korea.

program, universities will probably respond by producing graduates who meet the demands.

"On the recommendation to extend the bachelor's degree program to five years, I believe that attention should be given to the quality and content of curricula which can be achieved in four years, not requiring students to go to school an extra year, except for certain specialized curricula such as engineering."

Ghosh also took exception to the testing requirements recommended in the report. "The study recommends excessive testing programs. Batteries and batteries of tests won't improve the quality of education. No matter how you educate people, the human brain is not a bucket you fill with knowledge to be emptied out on tests," Ghosh said.

Despite the exceptions, Ghosh said if colleges heed some of the report's recommendations through a long-range systematic process, the report will prove useful.

Jones added that the BU community will "discuss in a collegial way the steps we will be taking in response to the national report."

According to the report's panelists, more than 12 million students attend the nation's 3,300 institutions of higher learning. More than half of them are undergraduates, one-sixth are minorities, two-fifths are over the age of 25, and fewer than three out of five attend college full-time.

Positive points reflected in the report included higher education's functions in research, adult education, continuing education, cultural enrichment, public service, identification of talent and encouragement of creativity.

The panel writing the report included professors Alexander W. Astin of UCLA, J. Herman Blake of Tougaloo College in Mississippi; Howard R. Bowen of the Claremont California Graduate School; Zeldia F. Gamson of the University of Michigan; Barbara Lee of Rutgers University; Harold L. Hodgkinson of the Institute for Educational Leadership in Washington, D.C.; and Kenneth P. Mortimer of Penn State.

BU honors Hopper

Commodore Grace Murray Hopper, who pioneered the widely accepted COBOL computer programming language for business, was the principal speaker during winter commencement exercises of Bloomsburg University on December 16 in Haas Auditorium.

Her topic was "The Future: Hardware, Software, and People."

During the ceremonies, the honorary degree Doctor of Laws was conferred on Commodore Hopper by Interim President Larry Jones and presented by John Dorlin, council of trustees' chairman. Approximately 240 undergraduates and 41 graduate students were awarded degrees.

A recipient of 18 other honorary doctoral degrees, the 77-year-old U.S. Naval Reservist is currently serving on active duty with the Naval Data Automation Command at Washington, D.C.

Commodore Hopper attended Vassar College, in Poughkeepsie, New York, graduating Phi Beta Kappa in 1928. The fellowship she earned at Vassar led her to Yale University, where she received a master's degree in 1930 and a Ph.D. in 1934. Her honorary doctorates, from colleges and universities throughout the country and abroad, cover the fields of science, law, engineering and humane letters.

She returned to Vassar as an assistant in mathematics in 1931, becoming, successively, instructor, assistant professor and associate professor. During this time (1941-42), she received a Vassar Faculty Fellowship and studied at New York University.

In December, 1943, she entered the United States Naval Reserve. Upon graduation, she was commissioned Lieutenant (Junior Grade) and ordered to the Bureau of Ordnance Computation Project at Harvard. There, she learned to program the first large-scale digital computer, Mark I. In 1946, she resigned from her Vassar leave-of-absence and joined the Harvard faculty as a Research Fellow in Engineering Systems and Applied Physics at the Computation Laboratory, where work continued on the Mark II and Mark III computers for the Navy. In 1946, she received the Naval Ordnance Development Award.

In 1949, she joined the Eckert-Mauchly Computer Corporation in Philadelphia as Senior Mathematician. The corporation was then building the UNIVAC I, the first commercial large-scale electronic computer. She remained with the Eckert-Mauchly company as a senior

Ave., Bloomsburg, PA 17815 (717) 784-1515

Christina (Gable) Jacks '24 died on Jan. 21. She was the wife of Robert W. Jacks.

Born in Shenandoah, Schuylkill County, she was a daughter of the late Harry and Christine (Kaufman) Gable.

She had been employed for many years as a teacher in the Auburn and Tower City school districts until her retirement.

She was a member of St. Paul's Lutheran Church, Fleetwood.

Her husband survives her.

Mildred (Wolfe) Vanderbergh '25 died in March 1980. She came from New Berlin, Pa., and was a graduate of BSNS High School. While attending Bloomsburg, she devoted much of her time helping Mrs. Hartline, as she was very interested in nature.

Margaret (Flynn) Bosso '25 died on August 18, 1964. While attending Bloomsburg she was known as Peg or Peggie. She came from Plymouth, Pa., and was a graduate of Plymouth High School.

Mary (Straub) Werkheiser '25 celebrated her 103rd birthday on Jan. 9. Mrs. Werkheiser is in relatively good health and has many friends who visit her. For many years she was an elementary teacher in Bloomsburg. She is now a guest at the Millville Health Center, Millville, PA 17846.

Wilhemina (Spangenberg) Lesalus '25 died on Jan. 13. Mrs. Lesalus came from Scranton and was a graduate of Central High School. She was known as Billie while attending Bloomsburg.

programmer when it was bought by Remington Rand and later merged into the Sperry Corporation.

Hopper was appointed Systems Engineer, Director of Automatic Programming in 1952, when she published the first paper on compilers. In 1964, she became Staff Scientist, Systems Programming. She retired from the UNIVAC Division of the Sperry Rand Corporation in December, 1971, while on military leave.

From 1952 to date, Hopper has published over 50 papers and articles on software and programming languages. Her interest in applications programming sent her to the first meeting of CODASYL with a strong interest in the development of COBOL, a standardized business language for programming a computer. She is presently serving on the CODASYL Executive Committee.

She has been associated with the Moore School of Electrical Engineering of the University of Pennsylvania for 25 years, serving as adjunct professor of engineering since 1973. From 1971-78, she was professional lecturer in management science at George Washington University.

Hopper was recalled to active duty in the Navy in 1967. She was promoted to captain in 1973 and to commodore in 1983. The computer specialist was awarded the Navy's Legion of Merit in 1973 and the Meritorious Service Medal in 1980.

She was elected to membership of the National Academy of Engineering and selected as a Distinguished Fellow of the British Computer Society in 1973. The most recent acknowledgements bestowed upon her this year were the Living Legend Award of the Women's International Center in San Diego and Woman of the Year award from the Young Women's Christian Association of the National Capital Area.

One of the most appropriate of her many awards is a gold medal presented by the Armed Forces Communication Electronics Association. She was chosen for the honor in recognition of her superior technical competence, extraordinary performance, and personal direction of major command, control, communications and intelligent systems essential to the enhancement of national and free world security.

A recent magazine article depicts Commodore Hopper as "A Living Legend" who seeks no honors or awards for her work, giving freely of her tremendous energy and talents. She has contributed more than $35,000 to the Navy Relief Society from honorariums she has received for numerous speaking engagements over the years.

Her link to BU began as child

As a girl, she had piano lessons in Old Science Hall. Twenty-five years later, she joined the Bloomsburg State Teachers College faculty. By then, her piano room had become an office - her office. At the end of this semester (Fall, 1984), Dr. Mary Lou John, Department of Foreign Language chairperson, is retiring after having taught foreign languages at Bloomsburg University for 25 years.

Dr. John moved to Bloomsburg from Detroit in 1926. She was two years old. She attended kindergarten through her first four years of college in Bloomsburg. Her education began on the campus of Bloomsburg State Normal School. Her kindergarten and first grade classes met in Noetting Hall, which has since been torn down. Her second through sixth grade classes were held in the Benjamin Franklin Building. Dr. John attended Bloomsburg High School for seventh through twelfth grade.

Because of her ancestral ties, and because she liked Bloomsburg, Dr. John says she has always wanted to live here.

"I've always wanted to remain in the area," says Dr. John. "My father and son are here, and so are my roots."

Dr. John's ancestry is French Huguenot. She says her ancestors came to the U. S. in 1684 and to Columbia County in approximately 1830. About 1888, her grandmother graduated from Bloomsburg State Normal School. Dr. John's parents continued the tradition in 1912 when they graduated from BSNS. Dr. John's father, Howard F. Fenstermaker, later joined the Bloomsburg faculty and taught languages and several other courses until his retirement in 1963.

"He was the entire language department until the university hired professors under him," says Dr. John. "Then he became the first department chairperson."

Even though Dr. John grew up around French, she hadn't studied the language until high school.

"I knew a few little phrases from home," says Dr. John. "Then in high school, I took languages and liked them. They seemed to be what I was best in."

Dr. John continued to study languages. In 1945, she received her B.S. in education from the Bloomsburg State Teachers College, and was certified to teach French, Spanish, English and social studies. She earned her master's in history from Bucknell University and, in 1978, a Ph.D. in French from Pennsylvania State University.

As a college student, Dr. John worked year around. She had a scholarship, but it only paid for her tuition and activities fee. She had to work for her spending money and to pay for her books. "In winter," says Dr. John, "I worked in the president's office typing and mimeographing. For two summers I worked in the president's office and for two summers I was a waitress in summer resorts."

Between her job and classes, Dr. John participated in college activities. She was CGA president, a member of the Dramatic Club, and sang soprano in the Women's Chorus. She was also a member of Alpha Psi Omega (national honorary society in theater), and Kappa Delta Pi (national honorary society in education).

According to Dr. John, her freshman class "was the first class to use Centennial Gymnasium in 1941, and the first class to have a fund raiser.

"We sold Coca-Cola and chips during the semester in Noetting Hall," says Dr. John. "That was before there was a snack bar."

Before Dr. John joined the BU Language Department, she taught Spanish at Central Columbia High School for two years. Since she came to BU in 1959, the department has expanded.

"When I was here as a student," says Dr. John, "there was one language professor - that was my father. When I joined the department, there were about four or five."

As a BU professor, Dr. John has served as Director of Cultural Affairs and Director of International Education. She has also been advisor for the International Club, Phi Sigma Iota (national foreign language honor society) and the French Club.

"I think it's important to be active and to know what's going on in the profession," says Dr. John.

During her teaching career, Dr. John added the exchange teachers program to England and helped organize trips to Europe and Canada. In 1979, she organized a Japanese program at BU. Two Japanese exchange students served as "conversation facilitators" in teaching students Japanese through the University's Self-Instructional Language Program. The program was discontinued, but Dr. John hopes it will reopen.

"We're working to get other languages set up in that same way when we have native speakers here," says Dr. John.

Dr. John is as active off campus as she is on. She's a charter member and former president and secretary of the American Association of Teachers of French and the next secretary of the Pennsylvania State Modern Language Association.

Singing and theater are still favorites of Dr. John's. She is a member of the First English Baptist Church, and sings in the choir. She's also on the board of deacons and on the National Scholarship Board for American Baptists.

As a student, Dr. John acted and directed plays and worked with the stage crew. As a member of the Bloomsburg Players, she acted in "Our Town" last year. She "hopes to become more involved in theater when I have more time."

Dr. John's hobbies are reading, cooking, and swimming. "I try to swim two or three times a week," says Dr. John.

She has "mixed feelings" about giving up teaching for retirement. "But in retirement," says Dr. John, "I'll have more time for my other interests."

Dr. John has a variety of ideas in mind for her retirement. "I want to do some writing in my field (17th century French Literature)," says Dr. John, "and maybe organize some more educational trips."

Dr. John is not planning to stop teaching. This time she wants to use her English certification.

"I'd like to teach English as a second language," she says. "There are many people coming to the U.S. who need to know English."

Planning to add travel to her retirement list, she wants to research her French ancestry and "maybe fly to Asia, South America, and to warmer climates in winter, like Florida."

Dr. John is leaving BU, but she isn't leaving Bloomsburg permanently. She says it will still be her "home base." Therefore, adieu (farewell) isn't appropriate, but au revoir (to meet again) is.

Area's reputation didn't scare history prof!

Editor's Note: The following article about Professor James Sperry was written by Mike Dillon of the Press-Enterprise staff, Bloomsburg.

His friends told him not to move here. Northcentral Pennsylvania, they warned, is a wild place where labor agitators tote guns and bodies turn up in rivers.

Grim talk from residents of Arizona — home of the O.K. Corral.

Jim Sperry didn't exactly start quaking in his boots — his dad was a coal miner in Western Pennsylvania. He knew the miners' lingo and knew why the northeastern anthracite coal region got such a bad rap out west.

Long after the Indians and badlands of Arizona were tamed, people in the coal region were trying to tame an industry which had become their master. Out west, he says, the revolution was over — here, it was, and at times still is, going on.

Sperry, a history professor at Bloomsburg University, came here to study labor and labor history. In academic circles, places like Centralia, Wilkes-Barre, Avondale and Frackville are famous.

The legends of violence that people hear out west are a result of the rough fight that miners put up to gain their freedom from coal companies that controlled almost every aspect of their lives, Sperry says.

Before the civil war, "One of the Alabama senators arguing for slavery said there's no slave in the south worse off than an anthracite miner," he says.

Other reminders of the area's violent past have been immortalized in books and films.

At least two of the famed Molly McGuires were hung behind the Columbia County Courthouse in Bloomsburg.

The story of the Molly McGuires was made into a movie starring Sean Connery. Segments of the film were shot in nearby Eckley and at what's now Pioneer Village, north of Bloomsburg on Route 11.

In Sperry's last year of graduate school in Arizona he switched his major from diplomacy to labor history and decided to come east, to come home. His advisor, a well-to-do, scholarly southern gentleman, wasn't pleased with Sperry's decision. Sperry smiles as he recalls the lecture he got from his distinguished mentor.

"Mr. Sperry," he said, "that area has a tradition of terrible violence. You know it is not beyond the realm of possibility that if you offend someone in that area, you may be thrown down a mine shaft."

Besides, "No one goes back there unless they have to."

Sperry did have to. If he was to write and speak about the coal region, he had to know the people, to sit with them in musty taverns and listen to their sometimes ribald, sometimes bitter stories.

"In order to get an 'in' you have to know someone who will vouch for you," says Sperry. "You do not go in and say 'Hi, I'm Jim Sperry from BU and I want to interview you.'"

No, to get the scoop from the men who scooped coal from the rich landscape, you have to prove yourself. Prove that you're not a "user" like the coal companies and the government, which Sperry says coal region people view with great suspicion.

At times, they also viewed Sperry with suspicion. As he pieced together the mystery behind an unsolved murder in Wilkes-Barre in 1934, he got a call. The anonymous voice on the line told him, "You know these murders have never been solved, it would be better if they weren't."

"I must admit, I was somewhat apprehensive," Sperry says. "Unwittingly I had stumbled upon the key motive for some of the murders. . . I hit a nerve."

He published a paper on the crime, but never got the last few pieces of evidence that would have tied everything together — his sources of information had dried up.

One of his friends from California, after reading about the newspaper strike between the Times Leader and Citizens' Voice in Wilkes-Barre, told Sperry, "I guess you people are afraid to walk the streets up there."

Unfortunately, Sperry says, many of the outsiders who share that view represent companies and are none too anxious to recommend the area to company chiefs. They fear that radical labor unions or violence will hurt business, he says.

In Sperry's view, lack of strong leadership has kept many coal towns depressed. During World War II, he reports, President Franklin Roosevelt wanted to do something to aid the coal region and dispatched an aide to assess the chances of putting a munitions factory in Wilkes-Barre.

The envoy told Roosevelt that "The people are good workers, they have a good attitude, but they lack good political-social leadership."

Sperry shares that view. "People here will stand up for what they believe. My only problem with this area is weak leadership, that's the only thing I find missing."

He admits that coal region towns are often "closed" communities, but says that people will warm up to a stranger after sizing him up.

Sperry, too, sized up his new neighbors when he moved here.

He's glad a lot of his students are from this region. He trusts them not to cheat on tests, and says he often hands out exams and leaves the room until it's time to collect them.

"I call it integrity," he says.

Sperry is optimistic about the region's future. "If industry would take a chance and local people would support it," the region would thrive economically.

"There is a tremendous work force here — they're conscientious, they'll hold on."

By this time, most alumni should have received an "Alumni Biographical Data Form." If you have completed and returned your form, we thank you for your cooperation.

If you have not received a copy of the survey, will you please take a few minutes to complete the form reproduced below and return it to the BU Alumni Office? How will the Alumni Association and the University use this information?

(1) To enable the academic departments of the University to track the career paths of their graduates. To what extent are they using their undergraduate preparation in their careers? This information will also help departments identify alumni willing to share their experiences with undergraduates.

(2) To assist the BU Career Development Center in identifying alumni willing to help the University's placement and cooperative education programs

(3) To help the Alumni Office to plan regional alumni meetings, class reunions and special programs for alumni based upon department or major, profession or occupation.

(4) To identify potential recipients of Distinguished Service Awards and Young Alumni of the Year Awards, and to provide "leads" for feature articles about interesting alumni for THE ALUMNI QUARTERLY.

(5) To alert the Development Office to alumni in positions to expedite corporate or foundation support of University projects.

The survey has been designed to make efficient use of your time. Even if you do not wish to answer every section, please be sure to return the questionnaire. Our new computerized alumni records system will be only as valuable as the quantity and quality of data it contains.

Don't hesitate to call the Alumni Office if you have questions about the survey. Please return your survey promptly so we can serve you even better.

HAPPY BIRTHDAY — Mary Werkheiser '25, who turned 103 recently, celebrated with birthday cake at the Millville Health Center, where she is a guest. Mrs. Werkheiser is in relatively good health, has many friends, and is an "elderly person who's not forgotten," according to nephew F. Stuart Straub '42 of Berwick. She was an elementary teacher in Bloomsburg for many years, and many of her former pupils — now elderly themselves — still visit her. The Alumni Association is trying to identify the oldest living alumnus or alumna — and Mrs. Werkheiser is certainly a good candidate. If you know of other alumni in the 100-plus category, please send their names and addresses to the Alumni Office.

OUR NEW HOME — Located on Lightsreel Road, just east of the University, the new alumni property features a large front yard

Bloomsburg University alumni now have a house to call their own!

Acting on behalf of over 28,000 BU graduates, the Alumni Board of Directors has purchased what they consider to be "the right house, in the right location, at the right time."

In early April, officers of the Alumni Association learned that the home of the late Dorothy John Dillon, Class of 1924, was being sold by her estate. Located on nearly four acres of land — some of which adjoins the east end of the University property — the house impressed members of the Alumni Board who were called to a special meeting on Saturday, April 6.

After several hours of careful and thoughtful deliberation, the board voted to make an offer on the property. The offer was submitted on April 8, accepted by the estate on April 9, and the agreement of sale was signed on April 11 in the Hamburg office of Alumni President John W. Thomas '47.

The idea of an Alumni House is not new. As early as the turn of the century, Bloomsburg alumni dreamed of having a building of their own. In PROFILE OF THE PAST, A LIVING LEGACY, Eda Bessie Edwards '41 writes:

"The Alumni Association had sought and received permission of the board of trustees to build an Alumni Hall. From this would be conducted Alumni business; in it would be held Alumni meetings, and provision would be made for the Philologist and Calliepien Societies to meet there. With the announcement of this project, there was great enthusiasm and pledges and gifts of money flowed into the treasury of the Association — especially from graduates who had been members of the literary societies. Encouraged by these, the officers had a plan drawn by an architect. To be constructed of brick, the plans called for a small building, beautiful in its simplicity, which would have been a fine addition to any campus."

But about that time, Old Science Hall was constructed, and the two literary societies were given permanent meeting quarters in the building. At a meeting of the Association in 1906, the plan was abandoned, and the money was returned to the contributors.

Since then, thoughts of buying an Alumni House have been entertained from time to time. But the ideal situation never presented itself — until now.

With this bold step, the Bloomsburg University Alumni Association moves confidently into the future — and joins six of its sister universities in the State System of Higher Education who already have alumni houses.

The new facility will provide much more working space than the present quarters in Carver Hall, and it will make an ideal and convenient location for various alumni functions and activities.

Although the "working" offices will move to the Alumni House, the beautiful Alumni Room in Carver Hall — of which BU alumni are very proud — will remain intact and will continue to be a focal point during events like Alumni Weekend and Homecoming.

In order to pay for the new Alumni House, the Association will kick off a special campaign on Alumni Weekend, June 14-15, to raise $110,000.

Chairing the special campaign will be Margaret (Peggy) Burns '67, retiring vice president of the Alumni Board of Directors. Serving as honorary co-chairpersons will be two classmates and close friends of Dorothy John Dillon: Editha Ent Adams '24 and Edward F. Schuyler '24, both life-time residents of Bloomsburg.

The campaign leadership is pleased to report that $25,000 has been donated by the Community Government Association from the Husky Contingency Fund, and more than $30,000 has been pledged by various classes. In addition, several alumni are considering significant gifts as memorials to family and friends.

We hope to reach our goal by Homecoming on October 19, at which time the Alumni House will be dedicated. Donors of $1,000 or more will be listed on an Honor Roll to be placed at the Alumni House. Those who give $500 or more will receive a watercolor painting of the house.

All alumni will have the opportunity to be part of this exciting project by making a one-time gift or a three-year pledge, with one-third payable by Homecoming 1985, one-third by Homecoming 1986, and one-third by Homecoming 1987.

"As you make your decision," urges Peggy Burns, "please remember that we are committed to maintaining the many worthwhile and successful programs currently supported by the Alumni Annual Fund. For that reason, we hope your support for the Alumni House project will go hand-in-hand with your continued support of the Annual Fund."

"Your Alumni Board is confident the new Alumni House will be a tangible (and functional) symbol of a vital and dynamic Alumni Association."

... and a large backyard, too Perfect for outdoor activities on Alumni Weekend and Homecoming!

Alumni talk about their lives abroad

By ANDREW HEINTZELMAN '85
Staff Writer

EDITOR'S NOTE: This is the second in a series of stories about "alumni living abroad." Alumni from around the world were contacted by mail and asked to share their experiences about life in a foreign country. Four of their responses are included in this edition.

Brazil

An experience at the Bloomsburg Fair Grounds in 1971 led this alumna to the interior parts of the Amazon.

Here and throughout Brazil, Debbie Dinstel '73, is "teaching the good news of Jesus Christ."

Dinstel said her desire to teach about Christ began in 1971 when evangelist Bill Glass was holding a week of meetings at the Bloomsburg Fair Grounds.

"... Through his preaching I trusted Christ as my personalavior," the alumna wrote.

After graduation, Dinstel studied Bible for one year at the Word of Life Bible Institute in Schroon Lake, N.Y., where she dedicated her life to the Lord and "told Him that I was willing to go wherever He sent me in order to share the good news of Jesus Christ with others."

It was at Word of Life where Dinstel came in contact with the director of Unevangelized Fields Missions and became aware of the need for teachers at the Amazon Valley Academy in Belem, Brazil.

She arrived in Belem in August, 1977, to teach at the Amazon Valley Academy, a school for American children whose parents are missionaries. Before teaching at the academy, however, Dinstel spent two years in language and culture studies which took her up the Amazon River.

Dinstel taught in a one-room schoolhouse, which was also the community's church building. She said the people build their homes along the sides of the river, which takes the place of roads. "Every morning the children arrive in their canoes to attend classes," she wrote.

The alumna added that during her two-year study she had several opportunities to travel into the interior parts of Northern and Northeastern Brazil, "and to observe the various lifestyles, many of which are quite different from anything I have ever seen in the U.S."

Once at the academy, Dinstel was in contact with students from Japan, Switzerland, Germany, Great Britain, India, Canada and the United States. She taught up to six different subjects at the academy's high school, since there are only about 35-40 students in the entire school.

"I particularly enjoyed the close contact with the students and the family atmosphere," Dinstel wrote.

Dinstel is now working as a church-planting missionary in Teresina, the capital of Piaui, in the dry Northeast. Her work there varies from teaching Bible in public schools, to selling Christian literature at the only university in Piaui, to working with adolescent and teen groups in the church. She also offers Bible correspondence courses through door-to-door visitation, and informal home Bible studies, camps, and open air meetings.

England

Thousands of miles away from Dinstel but also in a teaching environment is our next "alumni living abroad," Lola Rigel Porter '60.

Porter is the supervisor of the child care program for the Summer Institute of Linguistics (SIL) at its center in Bucks, England.

She and her husband, Glenn, have been there since May 1983, and were there on temporary assignment from May to November 1982.

The Porters joined SIL in 1973, and have lived in Mexico for four months, Costa Rica for eight months, and Colombia for seven years completing various SIL training programs.

The organization trains people in applied linguistics and literacy, Porter wrote in a letter. Teams of translators live and work, usually in remote areas of the world, studying "a minority language of a people who have never had their spoken language put into writing."

Porter's position at the England center is to care for the children of students who attend SIL classes. The students come from most European countries plus Africa, Asia and North America. Last year's program involved over 200 students from 24 different countries at the England center, according to Porter.

Porter described SIL's work as scientific, spiritual and practical. First, an in-depth analysis of the language, including grammar and sound, is done. Next, an alphabet is written, and then translation work begins. Primers are made and people are taught to read their own language.

The people's culture is also studied, according to Porter, and books, including the Bible and health and agricultural books, are translated for the people.

As members of SIL, the Porters are also members of Wycliffe Bible Translators. WBT operates in the home country to recruit members.

Porter has also lived in Wales and Japan during her travels throughout the world.

Canada

Our next alumnus is living closer to the states than most alumni abroad; but, just the same, Lyle Slack '68, is discovering differences in Toronto, Ontario, Canada. When Slack moved to Canada 11 years ago, he did not consider it a foreign country. "Canada and the U.S. share so much—currency, language, movies, television, major corporations," Slack wrote. But, in a short time he found Canada to be quite different.

"It is influenced by its English heritage, which means Canadians on the whole are more polite, less woolly than Americans. There is more order and decorum here, as well as less ambition," Slack wrote.

A job offer to write radio commercials for a steel company is what lured Slack from an advertising agency in Cleveland, Ohio, to Hamilton, a city of half a million people just south of Toronto. While there for a year, Slack also freelanced as a movie critic for Hamilton's only daily newspaper.

Canada's west coast became home for Slack after a year in Hamilton as he took a job at an ad agency in Vancouver, British Columbia. He said Vancouver is an "inordinately beautiful city set in exceptionally handsome, rugged surroundings." He added that if it were not for an offer to be entertainment writer for the Hamilton newspaper, he would still be in Vancouver. There was such an offer, however, and Slack moved back to Hamilton after only one year in the west coast city.

For the past nine years, Slack has been writing for the paper and overtime has become its sole drama critic. He moved to Toronto two years ago to be closer to the growing theatre community there, he said.

Slack says Toronto is another exciting city—"an exuberant, classy place." It seems that he is satisfied with his life and his occupation, his only complaint being that it snows in the winter.

Peru

Another alum has spent her post-Bloomsburg years traveling and teaching.

Claire Adriance '34, has lived and taught, either privately or as a civilian in the armed forces, in Cuba, the Island of Guantanamo Bay, Panama, Guatemala, Argentina, Mexico and, now, Lima, Peru.

The teaching situation is somewhat different in Lima, however, and the services Adriance is providing are much more important than just reading, writing and arithmetic.

As her plane landed in Lima nearly seven years ago on what was supposed to be only a short stay, Adriance "dimly visioned a pocket of poverty, poverty at its worst."

She wrote: "It was then I decided not to return to Argentina. Perhaps there was something I might do to alleviate the horrible suffering I intuitively knew existed in these hovels."

Now, Adriance and Laura Lineback from Indiana University, coordinate the "Desarrollo de la Familia" (Lifting up the Family) program. Two-hundred native Peruvians help the group, serving as teachers, musicians, social workers, supervisors, secretaries and in other positions.

The program is designed to develop and strengthen the family in the "shantytowns" of Lima. Mothers' Clubs and Childrens' Clubs cooperate in the program as it serves part of the "two and one-half million people (of Lima) living in third world deprivation," Adriance wrote. She and her group feel that working with the family can help alleviate some of the horrible conditions which surround the richness of downtown Lima.

Desarrollo de la Familia (referred to as ADEFA) involves 7,000 children and mothers. The mothers' and childrens' clubs and their teachers each have specific programs developed through ADEFA and activities include Bible classes, health education, drama and Christmas and Easter parties and more.

Along with her letter to the Alumni Association, Adriance sent a copy of THE CROOKED TREE, written by her and her husband, Joseph. Also, she sent Spanish and English versions of her book of poems and maxims, LOVE IS. The books are signed: "With deepest gratitude to My Alma Mater."

Retired professor dies in Bloom

Francis E. Albert, 63, a member of the BU faculty from 1961 to 1969, died on April 9 in Bloomsburg.

Born in Budapest, Hungary, he was a son of the late Eugene and Katherine Zollner Toth. He had resided in Bloomsburg since 1961.

He was a member of the Society of Jesus from 1939 to 1959. While on the BU faculty, he taught French and philosophy. He also taught philosophy at Kings College and German at Wilkes College during the 1969-1970 academic year.

In 1970, Mr. Albert founded Regis International, Inc., a cultural and academic exchange program for international students and teachers. He was also director and president of that organization. He founded the local chapter of the American Association of Teachers of French.

He was educated in Hungary where he received advanced degrees in modern and classical languages, theology and philosophy.

He was the husband of the former Joan Polito, with whom he celebrated a 24th wedding anniversary on December 1.

BU offers interpreting

By ADRIENNE S. LEINWAND
Former BU Administrator

As the procession began, the woman donned a dark blue smock and took her place before the hundreds of graduates and thousands of guests at the fairgrounds. While the first speaker addressed the audience, the woman motioned with her fingers, palms and hands only stopping when the speaker did.

The scene was one of several Bloomsburg University commencements in the last few years in which sign language interpreting was provided for the hearing impaired. It was also the scenario this May 11 when 750 BU students were awarded degrees, and Roger Tory Peterson, the famed ornithologist, delivered the keynote address.

Since 1973, greater attention has been paid to the special needs of disabled individuals. Providing interpreting services at major events is one of the ways BU attempts to meet the needs of the hearing impaired. The university recently established a program designed to train students to be interpreters of American Sign Language (ASL). This program also provides interpreting support for many BU functions such as commencement. Initiated by Professor Sam Slike of the Department of Communication Disorders and Special Education, it is currently directed by Professor Gary Mowl.

BU currently offers the associate's and bachelor's degrees as well as a certificate in ASL. It's one in only 100 colleges and universities in the United States and two in Pennsylvania offering associate's degrees in interpreting. Bachelor's degrees can be obtained at only nine institutions in the country. But BU's program is not typical of other Pennsylvania institutions.

According to Mowl, "Pennsylvania is one of three states in the United States that is recognized by the National Registry of Interpreters for the Deaf as the weakest interpreting states in the U.S. We do not have a state chapter in Pennsylvania, nor do we have many certified interpreters. The efforts at BU will hopefully change the state's status in this field."

Students are admitted into the university's Interpreter Training Program as freshmen. They receive training in sign language during their first two years and training in interpreting during the last two. The curriculum's philosophy is that learning and speaking sign language must be accomplished like fluency in any other foreign language. Included are five sign language courses supplemented by studies in Deaf Culture, which emphasizes the social, psychological and personal aspects of the deaf community.

Mowl says that sign language instruction provides students with the skills necessary to fluently communicate with deaf people. Once mastery in sign language has been achieved, the students are trained in interpreting.

"To be proficient, students hear the spoken word in English and sign it into a different language at the same time," according to Mowl.

In addition to the 74 credits required in interpreter training courses in the Bachelor of Science program, students are encouraged to take several communication courses as well. The majors are frequently enrolled in courses such as public speaking, communication theory, intercultural communication and introduction to theater arts.

"Because interpreting involves more than just signing the spoken word, the communication courses often help students identify inflections in a speaker's voice and understand their meaning. Sign language interpreters," Mowl says, "must also reflect the mood of the speaker. If the speaker is boring, you're supposed to sign boring. If the speaker is filled with emotion, an interpreter ought to express that."

Students in the BU Interpreter Training Program are made aware of other factors which make interpreting successful. For instance, an interpreter should not stand in front of a window because the glare might interfere with the viewers ability to see the interpreter's movements. Use of excessive makeup and large earrings are also discouraged as they are often found to be distracting, according to Mowl. And, a shirt, blouse, or smock that contrasts the interpreter's skin allows the deaf person to read the sign language with less difficulty.

As communicators, interpreters must follow a strict code of ethics. Of primary importance is that the interpreter keep all conversations confidential. In addition, "Interpreters are not supposed to interject personal opinions," says Mowl. They must remain objective and refrain from offering advice during a conversation.

According to Mowl, himself a seasoned interpreter, many jobs are available for students graduating with degrees in sign language interpreting. Mowl has established a career resource file that contains various job announcements requiring competency in sign language and interpreting.

"More and more jobs are opening that require a Bachelor of Art's degree in interpreting. We're finding more and more positions like 'teacher/interpreter,' meaning the applicant will have to have an education degree and an interpreting degree. For these type careers, students will have to double major."

Doctors and lawyers are hiring interpreters. Some doctors refuse to treat deaf patients without interpreters because the process of writing notes is time consuming, plus many deaf people have problems writing English. Doctors and lawyers feel it is much safer to deal with a deaf person in sign language."

Mowl, himself, is deaf, and since his parents and many other family members are deaf, he is a native signer; he learned sign language as his first language and learned to speak and read English at school. Although he is fluent in ASL and teaches it at the university, he, too, requires an interpreter for some occasions.

"We just bought a house," says Mowl. "We went to the bank with our attorney and brought an interpreter. One on one, I'm fine. Five to one, three to one, I get lost. In that situation there were four people. They were going fast, and they didn't have time to waste. Having an interpreter there solved a lot of problems."

Mowl recently attended a meeting at the Pennsylvania State University to organize a state chapter of the National Registry of Interpreters for the Deaf.

"The deaf have no voice in Pennsylvania. But once our students enter the job market showing that we have a quality program here, and once we have a state organization here, things will improve for the deaf, consequently bringing improved communications quality for us all," he contends.

Lora repays kindness

Lora Snyder had barely started college at Bloomsburg when her father died on Christmas Eve, 1936. There was just enough money in the bank to pay for the funeral.

It looked like Lora would be unable to return to school. But sympathetic and caring administrators found campus jobs for her, and she was able to complete the two-year program.

She started teaching in Mayberry Township, Montour County, in 1938 and completed the requirements for her

B.S. degree in 1943. She received a master's degree at Bloomsburg in 1968 and also took graduate classes at Penn State, Bucknell and Mansfield.

Lora is now retired after teaching 37 years, including 31 years in the Montgomery Schools.

After nearly 50 years, Lora hasn't forgotten the helping hand she received when she needed it. She recently created a scholarship fund to help other students whose college education is threatened by the death of a parent.

Athletes 'bat' .619

Two individual national crowns and a team national title highlighted the 1984-85 year in athletics at BU. The women's field hockey team won its second consecutive NCAA championship while posting the school's first undefeated season (19-0) in the sport, and swimmer Gwen Cressman and wrestler Rick Bonomo captured titles in their respective sports.

Among their peers in the Pennsylvania Conference, the Huskies also fared well as the softball team (35-6) won its third straight PC title and the field hockey and wrestling teams (15-5) won conference championships for the second year in a row. In addition, football (6-5) continued its strong resurgence and reached the "State Game" for the first time, where the Huskies fell just short of a PC championship and finished second. The football unit was joined by the women's swimming and diving (7-1) and men's tennis (23-7) teams in recording conference runnerup showings.

BU also boasted 29 individual first or second place finishers in PC action and an additional 21 athletes were awarded recognition as All-Conference or All-American.

Teams once again combined for an outstanding record with 174 wins against 107 losses and one tie. That mark equals a winning percentage of .619 and once again ranks the Huskies' outstanding athletic program near the top of the Pennsylvania Conference.

She was born October 21, 1888, in Pleasant Valley, the daughter of the late Addison A. and Matilda Phillips Nicholson. She was a life member of the Pleasant Valley United Methodist Church.

Mrs. Rittenhouse taught many years in New Jersey and at the Pocono Elementary Schools. She also taught piano at her home.

Her husband, John J. Rittenhouse, died in 1972.

Surviving are four sons, John and Donald Rittenhouse, both of Shickshinny R.D.2; Edward Rittenhouse, Shickshinny R.D.1; Joseph Rittenhouse, Clifton, NJ; a daughter, Carolyn Mancinelli, Clifton, NJ; nine grandchildren and eight great-grandchildren.

Leah (Bogart) Lawton '14 and her husband George W. Lawton, celebrated their 69th wedding anniversary on May 11. They live at Stooe Church Road, R.D. 1, Berwick, PA 18603.

Mrs. Lawton is the daughter of the late Mr. and Mrs. D. Clark Bogart of Millville. She taught in Columbia and Monlor County schools. She has been a Red Cross volunteer and former member of the Berwick Garden Club.

Mr. Lawton, son of the late Mr. and Mrs. James T. Lawton of Millville, was a rural mail carrier for many years.

The couple farmed in Greenwood Township for 25 years, then moved to Bloomsburg for a time. They have resided in Berwick since 1953.

They are members of the First Presbyterian Church and members of the sanctuary choir for over 25 years.

They have two daughters, Mrs. Jean Funk, a teacher in Endwell, N.Y. and Mrs. Louise Simington, a registered nurse in Berwick. There are four grandchildren and one great-granddaughter. Two daughters are deceased.

Representative: Warren A. Dollman, Box 22 Evers Grove, PA 17826 (717) 458-5159

Lillian Zimmerman '15 died on February 28. She was in ill health for eight and one-half months.

Born August 15, 1895, in Millville, she was a daughter of the late George E. and Mary Gertrude Kirkendall Zimmerman. She taught at Smith Hollow school and later at the Millville school.

In 1918, Ms. Zimmerman went to Washington, D.C., where she was employed by the Veterans Administration as a statistician and at the Pentagon during World War II. Athletes honored

By ROGER SANDERS
Athletic Director

A year of excitement and outstanding individual and team performances culminated with one of the nicest and best attended Day of Champions awards banquets in recent years.

Not only did we honor our great student-athletes, but Mary Gardner, the women's swimming coach was honored as the 1985 Coach of the Year by the Husky Club.

John McFadden, won the Robert B. Redman Award—symbolic of the outstanding senior male athlete. John, the co-captain and two-time NCAA Qualifier for the Husky wrestling team, was chosen by the coaching staff for this award.

The Eleanor Wray Award was given to Linda Hershey. Linda played in four national championship field hockey games. This year she tried her skill at track and field where she became the Pennsylvania Conference Champion and qualified for the NCAA Championships in the 800-meter run.

Frank Sheptock, All-American Football player, and Kelly Knaus, All-American Swimmer, were selected as the Outstanding Underclassmen Athletes for 1984-85.

The softball team completed another very successful campaign by winning the Pennsylvania Conference and advancing to the finals of the NCAA Regional Tournament, where they lost to Akron University 2-0. With only one senior on the team, it looks like there are many good years to follow.

Looking at the Fall, we have added Buffalo State to the football schedule. Following spring drills and the annual Maroon & Gold game, they appear ready to defend the Eastern Conference Championship they won last fall.

John Babb, first-year baseball coach, finished the season with a 14-13 record. His team had a shot at the playoffs until the last weekend in the season when they lost a double header to Mansfield. Centerfielder John Nicodem of Mount Carmel led the team in batting with a .440 average.

As the year comes to an end, I want to thank all of the people who have made contributions to the Athletic Scholarship Fund. Very honestly, you are the big reason Bloomsburg is as successful as we are. It has to be a good feeling to know you are helping us in recruiting the best student athletes possible.

If you haven't contributed yet to the scholarship fund through the Alumni Association or the Husky Club, I encourage you to do so.

Have a great summer—and "Join the Excitement" by following the Huskies next year.

ATHLETES HONORED — Among the outstanding BU athletes honored at the Day of Champions Banquet were Gwen Cressman, national champion in swimming, Linda Hershey, outstanding senior woman athlete, Bob Tucker '68, guest speaker, John McFadden, outstanding senior male athlete, and Rick Bonomo, national wrestling champion at 118 pounds.

PLAYER OF YEAR — Jack McDowell presents the McDowell Oil/Time Markets Basketball Player of the Year Award to Glenn Noack, a junior who has already entered the Huskies' top ten scoring list with 1,096 career points.

Surviving are a son, Jackson W. Hufnagle, of Herndon, VA; and four grandchildren.

Wanda (Farnsworth) Langdon '44 reports as follows: "I came to New Jersey in September 1944 where I taught reading and social studies to sixth, seventh and eighth graders in the Robert Morris School in South Bound Brook, N.J. for two years. I taught a third and fourth grade combination in Middlesex Borough, N.J. for one year after I married Capt. Robert H. Langdon of the U.S. Air Force in Bound Brook, N.J.

After many years of caring for our four children I returned to substituting in the local schools. In 1964 I returned to teaching second grade in the Elizabeth Avenue Schools in Somerset, N.J. I've now completed 21 years in the Franklin Township Schools there, and plan to retire on June 30, 1985 with a total of 24 years service. For the past three years I've taught first grade in the Elizabeth Avenue School.

I have no immediate plans for the future. I will visit my five grandchildren and do some traveling. Our eldest son lives on Route 1, Muncy, Pa., and has his law offices in Muncy.

Our second son is a captain in the U.S. Marine Corps and is stationed at Camp Pendleton, California. We visited him last summer on the base.

Our identical twins are both teachers. At this time they both live at home. Elaine teaches English as a second language. Carla has taught sight-handicapped in Pennsylvania and has gotten her master's degree at Penn State to counsel the handicapped. She is searching for a job in her field.

My husband is about to retire with 46 years with American Cyanamid (Lederle), Bound Brook, N.J."

The Langdons live at 49 West High Street, Bound Brook, N.J. 08805.

On being Black in small town

By HOLLY RICHART
Student Feature Writer

Eleven months ago, Jessie McCoy and her two daughters, Raven, seven, and Tameka, 12, packed all their belongings and left the Mississippi Delta for Northeastern Pennsylvania. As they drove into Bloomsburg, Raven turned to her mother and asked, "Hey Mamma, are you sure we're going to the right place? I don't see anybody but white people. Where are the blacks?"

McCoy turned to her daughter and replied, half-seriously, "Raven, there aren't any—we're lit!"

Says McCoy, "I was living in the Mississippi Delta, 49 percent black in population. I came here and didn't know a soul, and contrastingly everybody is white! I thought, 'what if these white people are like some of the white people I've read about? What if they have all these myths about blacks? What am I going to do?'"

"I went through this when I was moving here," recalls McCoy, "but people were really nice to me and still are. A lot nicer than I expected."

McCoy became BU's director of university relations in July. She has an associate of arts degree from Coahoma Junior College and a bachelor of arts in journalism from the University of Southern Mississippi.

Before McCoy came to Bloomsburg, she was the director of university relations at Mississippi Valley State University, the country's youngest historically black college.

"I got there when the office was literally a desk and a chair—building it from doing few news releases and less in publications, television and radio productions to doing all of these things and more," recalls McCoy.

She also helped to complete a documentary film on the university and started a regular television and radio show at MVSU. She is currently trying to start a similar radio and television show at Bloomsburg.

Since her move here, McCoy says that she hasn't really had that many problems with racism. "I read about people in the Northeast, about communities where race never enters the picture," says McCoy, "and I knew it would be different when I got here."

But she admits she still had some apprehension. "Back home they tell us that the difference in white folks here and there is that you know where whites in the South stand, you have to guess where the northern whites stand on certain racial issues. I'm not sure how true this stereotyping is," she adds.

She has noticed a number of differences between the South and the North—"other than the weather," she chuckles. "For example, I used to get upset when people back home called me 'gal.' 'Gal' here is a special word. People here when they call you 'gal,' don't seem to mean it in a derogatory sense. I'm trying to adjust to that."

Another difference McCoy notices in Bloomsburg is the attitudes about blacks in churches. Says McCoy, "I couldn't go into the First Baptist and feel comfortable back home. But I can go into any one of the churches here because attitudes seem to be different."

Then there is the difference in the ratios of blacks to whites. Says McCoy, "It's a drastic change in that sense. Racism exists in both places, but it affects me in a different way here because I'm not sure I'll have the kind of support here that I did there in case of a racial crisis."

One major backbone of support is her family. McCoy is one of 13 children, all of whom are very close. "I really miss them," says McCoy. "When I was in Mississippi, we got together nearly every weekend. I try to go home whenever I can, plus my phone bills are very high."

McCoy began her career in journalism at college. She remembers, "I went to college (all black) to make up my mind about what I was going to do with my life. While I was there, I started writing. Instructors said, 'Well you don't have to take the basic writing courses, go right into the advanced.' Then they asked me to be the editor of the college newspaper, then the yearbook, and somebody said 'Well, you ought to major in journalism.' By the time I graduated, I was majoring in journalism."

After finishing junior college, McCoy went to a predominantly white senior college to finish her education. It was here that she learned some realities about race and the real world.

Recalls McCoy, "I had lots of great professors, but one was really biased. It was a feature writing class and the requirements were clear. I was the only black in the class—the only one who made a 100 on all the exams and the only one who sold all of my feature stories. I deserved an A but when I got my grade, I had a B. There was a white girl who went to the parties, didn't make A's on the tests and didn't sell one story. She got an A."

Says McCoy, "We used to joke about it. 'Well, you got a B because you're black, or a C for colored.' But boy, was I fired up . . . just thinking about somebody out there who worked for a C and got a D—it's not that fair."

When McCoy graduated from USM, she wrote to Hodding Carter III, editor of the Delta Democrat-Times, founded by the late Hodding Carter II (who won the 1946 Pulitzer Prize for his paper's stand on racial discrimination). Carter III wrote McCoy back offering her a job.

Says McCoy, "I thought I could write when I got there, then I spent six months with red ink running all over my copy. At first I thought they're doing this to me because I'm black—to discourage me. Then I started looking at my edited stories and following their instructions and the red marks started disappearing."

While employed at the Delta Democrat-Times, McCoy was assigned to cover police, city and county government, education and to write features and profiles. There were times when being black kept her from covering stories, but there were also times that her color got her the story.

One incident occurred at a private country club whose members were all white. She was assigned to interview a congressman who was speaking there. McCoy was kept out because she was black. The incident changed that day's headlines from 'congressman visits' to 'black reporter barred from covering congressman.'

After three years as a journalist, McCoy was offered the university relations job at MVSU. Says McCoy, "When MVSU came along, I was making about $10,000 a year. They (MVSU) almost doubled that. I thought about the kids, stability, retirement security, and no more ambulance chasing, threats or weird hours."

McCoy enjoys public relations. "The hours are still weird, but I like being able to communicate with all kinds of people with all sorts of personalities." Says McCoy, "It's like you're the link between one extreme and the other. And somehow you might be able to bring them together."

But McCoy does say that being director of university relations can be as frustrating at times as it is rewarding. "There are a lot of things I'd like to do, but the resources just aren't here right now." Says McCoy, "I'd like to get national media recognition for some of our outstanding programs. I'd like to have a computerized office so I can write and edit and do the things that I should be doing faster. But, I just have to keep telling myself to be patient."

The economic frustrations may have allowed McCoy down in her job at BU, but her skin color has not.

"I go out, I meet the press and nobody says to me, 'Well, you're black and you're not qualified.'" Says McCoy, "A lot of times I forget. Most times, it's not a matter of what color the skin is. The fact is that I'm about business regardless of my skin's color. If I'm sitting there thinking 'Gee, everybody in here is white,' I'm going to miss something else that I should be getting."

McCoy strongly supports black colleges as well as blacks at white colleges.

"There are many factors at work trying to keep blacks out of higher education. If you look at the records, for some reason we don't do as well as students at white colleges as we may do at black for women and other minorities. By having me and some other blacks here, not only will the job be done, but some people may even be enlightened about the real world—a world that's not black or white, but a multitude of colors."

McCoy does commend Bloomsburg on increasing the number of minorities at the university. "But, I don't think we should relax."

McCoy has received a number of honors during her career. At MVSU, she was the only woman on the executive council (the highest decision making group on campus). When she worked at the Delta Democrat-Times, the Ford Foundation named her a Ford Fellow in Educational Journalism (one of only 10 in the nation that year). She has also received several awards for writing, layouts and broadcasting.

But her greatest achievement of all was when she wrote a story about a poverty stricken elderly handicapped woman. Help poured in the day after the story ran. It really felt good. It also felt good to be elected president of the College Public Relations Association of Mississippi. Says McCoy, "I represented all the public relations people in colleges and universities in the state of Mississippi. When I thought of all those people who supported me . . . well, it gets to be good for your ego."

Even though McCoy is very happy with her career at present, she eventually wants to write a book of stories for children about black children's lives. "My ex-husband is really responsible for it." Says McCoy, "He used to tell the kids about growing up in rural Mississippi, from raiding the watermelon patches to his relationship with his dad. I want to write a book about those stories."

But the future is still too far away for McCoy to think about now. Right now she's too busy settling down in a new home, getting used to a new job and different people. Says McCoy, "I'm finding out there's another world out there and maybe some people are finding out there are other people."

Two trustees reappointed

Two BU trustees have been reappointed by Governor Dick Thornburgh to six-year terms.

LaRoy Davis '67 of Feasterville and Robert W. Buehner of Danville have served on the Council of Trustees since 1980.

Davis has been a secondary teacher in the Bensalem High School in Cornwells Heights since 1967. He has served as president of the Bensalem Township Education Association and as chairman of BTEA's professional rights and responsibilities committee.

He served three years as vice chairman of the council, being elected in June of 1981, 1982 and 1983.

Buehner, associate director of legal services at Gelsinger System Services, was elected council chairman in December 1981 to complete the term of Frank Fay of Hazleton. He was the youngest council chairman in the history of the university.

He was elected to the post again in June 1982 and June 1983. Last June he was elected vice chairman.

Their terms run until January 1991.

George Thear '49 was honored as the borough's "Citizen of the Year" recently by the borough of Nesquehoning. George is married to the former Pauline D. Hublfsky of Lehigh. They have three children: Edward, Donna and Georgine, and two grandchildren. His address is 470 East Center Street, Nesquehoning, PA 18240.

Matthew J. Maley '49 died recently.

Born in Pottsville, September 16, 1923, he was a son of the late Joseph W. and Grace (Floyd) Maley.

Mr. Maley was a retired business math school teacher of the Pottsville Area School District.

A veteran of World War II, he was graduated from Pottsville High School, attended Lebanon Valley Community College and received his masters degree in education from the University of Pennsylvania.

Mr. Maley was a member of First United Methodist Church, Pottsville; Retired Teachers Association; the American Automobile Association Motor Club, Schuylkill County chapter, and the National Association of Retired Persons.

He was preceded in death by his wife, the former Betty Jones, and a sister, Marie Lecher, who died in April, 1984.

Survivors include a nephew, Jack Lecher, and several cousins.

Upper Moreland's Mario Berlanda '49 received a letter from Governor Dick Thornburgh congratulating him on his career at his retirement.

Mario Berlanda's classes were always lessons in life.

His civics students never just sat behind a desk with their heads buried in their textbooks.

"I had them do everything," he recalls with a grin as he crosses his legs and leans back in his desk chair in his office in the Upper Moreland Administration Building. They didn't just learn about the electoral process—they lived it. He and his students staged the works—"from registration on through." A mock convention was held ("with the fanfare and all.") Berlanda remembers with obvious pleasure. Speeches were delivered and an election followed, with votes cast in a real voting machine shipped in to the Upper Moreland High School.

His freshman students even ventured out into the community and knocked on doors encouraging people to vote in the primary elections. Voter turn-out that year jumped 20 percent.

In his family living class, students prepared research papers on topics of their choice, such as alcoholism, divorce, or budgeting, and then presented and defended them before the student body. The discussion was slow at first, but it always came to life.

"If the kids would come up with any ideas, we'd work on them," the teacher said. He taught his students to think. "You call the shots," he'd tell them. "You make the decisions. We're gonna expose you to everything out there and then you make the decision—and let this be your ruler," he said, as he knocked repeatedly on his browned forehead with his index finger—"And then I always say, 'You deserve what you get.'"

His ingenuity won him the Freedom's Foundation Classroom Teachers Award in 1962. The mock election was one of two projects for which the Willow Grove resident was awarded a Freedom's Foundation Bronze Award.

Berlanda's long list of credits, after 35 years of service to Upper Moreland School District, will be drawing to a close on June 29 when he retires his position as the administrative assistant to the superintendent of schools.

His current position is the last of many he has held in his 62 years. Born in the coal mining town of Ebervale, PA, Berlanda began his illustrious career in the mines and in a textile mill.

He played football in high school and still delights in his memories of the year he and his team won the championship. "And do you know who we had as fallback?" he queries as his face lights up and his brown eyes roll. "Jack Palance. Have you heard of him?"

He spent three years in the U.S. Coast Guard in World War II, and married Elaine—who sits smiling from a picture frame on his desk, flanked by their grandchildren—a year before his discharge.

"I got the idea to teach when I was in the middle of the Atlantic Ocean," he said.

Yet, he was also toying with another career option—oil geology.

Fortunately for his many students over the years, Bloomsburg State College was the only place where he could find housing, so his decision to teach was made for him. There he earned his bachelor's degree in social studies, geography, and science in three years. He later earned his master's at Temple University through weekend and summer study.

He joined the faculty of Upper Moreland School District in 1949, teaching social studies and geography. From there, he served as department chairman, director of student activities, junior high and senior high school principal, Director of Child Accounting, and more.

"I've been through the whole mill and I don't think there's anything I haven't done in the district—except maybe custodian—and I did that one summer, too," he recalls with a chuckle.

Berlanda also coached baseball, football and bowling at Upper Moreland High School, often ending his day at 7 every night. In 1952, he introduced Little League into the township, and officiated football and basketball for nearly three decades.

Where did he find the time? "I made it," he answers simply. "People always wonder about that. You make time. You set priorities—first things first."

As a teacher, and as a supervisor of student teachers at Penn State's Main Campus—an experience he considers one of the "pinnacles" of his career—he continually emphasized the importance of the social and emotional climate in the classroom.

He gives an example: "You're the student, and I'm the teacher. I ask a question and then you answer, and then I do this." He raised his graying eyebrows, rolled his eyes around the small office, and contorted his face into various exaggerated expressions of disgust. Then he pointed to a far corner of the room and called on another student.

"Or what if I say, 'Wrong again,' and get angry and praise the student who answers correctly?"

"Or now, how about if I said to you, 'That's interesting. How did you arrive at that answer?' And you go through a long process of explanation, most of it wrong, but with a little bit of truth to it. I extract that little bit of truth and work on that. And once I see that you've given all you can, I say, 'Very good. Can anybody take it from here?'"

"Now who would you rather have as a teacher?" he inquired.

Berlanda still hears from the students and athletes he has guided over the years. Their messages are almost always ones of gratitude—"I am where I am because of you," an athlete-turned-coach-and-teacher told Berlanda at his recent retirement dinner.

"That's a great feeling," Berlanda said. "If you help one child, you've done the job. You don't know how many students you influence—colleagues you influence—and these are the things I treasure."

But to Berlanda, the contributions he has made are not extraordinary. "A lot of these things come with the territory," he said. "If I do something good, it was something I was expected to do. It's all part of my job and part of my nature. I know a lot of people don't look at things this way. But if I see something going on in the hallway, for example, whether it's good or bad, I get involved. Some teachers think that when they walk out of the classroom their job is done. Not me."

The Willow Grove resident also likes taking stock of his political accomplishments. He has served on a long list of local, state, and national legislative committees on education and has held a position as the legislative contact for three U.S. Congressional Districts for the National Education Association, and as state director and treasurer of the Pennsylvania Political Action Committee for Education.

Berlanda, father to two teachers and one horticulturist, and grandfather to six, won't be leaving the work force entirely on June 29, however. He will still be working part-time as a retirement consultant for a Jenkintown investment company.

"I'll keep busy," he said assuredly. In his new-found spare time, he hopes to travel, fish, hunt, garden, and do some car repair. ". . . and then I have three children, who always have something that needs to be done. My son called me just last week and said, 'Hey Dad, how about helping me. . .'"

"There's a lot of things I want to do, and I can't do them if I have to get up and work at 8 every morning. Now, if God's willing, I can do them."

As he reflects upon his 35 years of dedicated service to Upper Moreland township, he knows he can proudly say, "What I've done, I've done to the best of my ability."

Mario's address is 3375 Whitehall Drive, Willow Grove, PA 19090.

George Remetz '49 is planning to retire. He has been working in the Warwick School District as a principal in the elementary schools for the past 21 years.

Lois (Datesman) Nester, '49, a business education teacher in the Bangor Area School District, is on sabbatical leave for the second semester of the 1985 school year. She is writing a book—a biography about her mother—entitled, "Lady of Falth."

Her husband, Wilmer Nester '49 is a business education teacher and department chairman at Pen Argyl Area

Faculty cited for their teaching

This year's outstanding faculty in the College of Arts and Sciences are Dr. Lynne Miller, biology; Dr. Howard Schreier, communication studies; Harry Ackerman, English; James Pomfret, mathematics and computer science; and Sue Jackson, sociology and social welfare.

Five professors are chosen each year by the Arts and Sciences Student Council, with each member of the council making one nomination of a faculty member from any department within the school of Arts and Sciences. Council members are chosen based on good academic standing and enthusiasm in their major.

Nominees are chosen based on classroom teaching, academic advisement, involvement with students on campus and town activities, and community service.

Miller was cited for her work in the classroom and laboratory as well as her involvement with students as they prepare to leave college. She is active in promoting the Biology Honors Program and the Beta Beta Beta Honor Society, which she helped to create.

Schreier brings a dynamic teaching style to the classroom and remains active in the advancement of his field by attending conventions and presenting papers.

Ackerman has been noted for his dedicated and caring teaching style. He is a member of the Representative Assembly and the promotion, evaluation and tenure committees. He is also a member of the Campus-Wide Promotion Committee.

Pomfret has been involved in Kappa Mu Epsilon, the National Honorary Mathematics Society, since coming to BU 13 years ago. He has played an important role in sending 10 members of the Bloomsburg chapter to the National Convention in Dallas, Texas. He has furthered his own education by attending conferences and seminars in Decision Analysis and Discrete Systems Simulation, and has brought new ideas and technologies back to Bloomsburg.

Jackson, known for her fair treatment of students and their ideas, is involved with the Sociology Club, and serves as chairperson of the department.

Pedestrian bridge nearing completion

After a year of delays, installation of the footbridge over Lightstreet Road should be completed this summer. Connecting the Bloomsburg Hospital parking lot with the campus, the bridge, which once stood in Williamsport, will make crossing the busy roadway safer for students.

The bridge was to be up in the fall of the year, but the company erecting the bridge, Stopper Construction, Williamsport, encountered numerous problems.

The biggest problem was with the bridge's foundation on the hospital side. The builders found that the ground under which the piers and ramps would stand was once a landfill, and that brick, coal ash, cement and garbage covered the bedrock.

When digging holes for the support structure at the same location, workers discovered they were in line with a water main and with the electrical wiring for the Bloomsburg Hospital sign. The holes had to be re-dug

The foundation delays and other minor holdups have raised the project's costs from $120,000 to $138,000.

Stopper, who bought the bridge when it was dismantled in Williamsport, and sold it to BU, is now waiting for the arrival of lexan (plexiglass) panels and an aluminum base. After that, completion should take only several weeks.

The steps that now stand on the campus side of Lightstreet Road will eventually be removed so students will be sure to use the overpass. Students will get to the approximately 25-foot-high bridge on the hospital side via ramps.

According to Robert Parrish, vice president of administration at BU, the bridge idea has been advocated for more than 10 years, with BU trustee Elton Hunsinger being the leading supporter SHARING IDEAS—During his two-day visit, alumnus Lou Ciocca '65 shared ideas with faculty, students and administrators, including Jessie McCoy (center), director of university relations, and Anthony Ianiero (right), director of development.

Grad shares ideas

Louis J. Ciocca '65, site planning manager of IBM Corporation in Endicott, New York, returned to his alma mater in early April to share his professional corporate experiences of eighteen years with students, faculty members, and administrative staff. In meeting with students, he spoke on such topics as "Careers in IBM" and "Planning."

His informal discussions with faculty members in the College of Business and various university officials ranged from such concerns as workload and manpower planning to ideas on bridging the gap between higher education and the corporate world.

Following his graduation from Bloomsburg, Ciocca received his MBA Degree from Ohio University, and joined IBM Corporation in 1967 as a cost accountant in finance. Since that time, he has risen upward through the company's management team and has occupied various positions at the Product Development Laboratory, the Systems Products Division, the Data Processing Product Group, and the U.S. Tele-communications Project Office in LaGaude, France.

In 1982, he was named manager of industrial engineering plans and controls in Endicott product operations, the position he held until January of 1984, when he was named site planning manager in Endicott.

Ciocca resides in Endwell, New York, with his wife Georgi, their two sons, Dave (15 years), Doug (14 years), and daughter, Jennifer (13).

McCormick fund still growing

Alumni still have the opportunity to participate in the James H. McCormick Scholarship, established last fall after Dr. McCormick resigned as BU president to become the first chancellor of the new State System of Higher Education.

Checks may be sent to the Alumni Office, payable to BUAA with the notation that they are for the McCormick Scholarship.

appointed superintendent of schools for the Temecula Union School District in Temecula, California.

Temecula, which lies amid mountains and rolling foothills, is known for producing fine California wines. It is also the site of "Rancho California," a community being constructed by Kaiser Industries under a master plan that will ultimately house 50,000 people. Growth in the area is expected to triple over the next decade as construction continues and new families with children move into the school district.

Dr. Novotney's appointment as superintendent came as the result of an extensive search by the Temecula School Board for a recognized and innovative educator to lend leadership to the district during what will be a period of unprecedented expansion.

Dr. Novotney, formerly an elementary school principal in Irvine, California, is a graduate of Plymouth High School. She holds a master's degree in educational administration from Chapman College, and a doctoral degree in institutional management from Pepperdine University.

1962

She is widely known in California because of her consulting activities among school administrators under the auspices of the Association of California School Administrators.

The author of a number of articles and books, Dr. Novotney currently serves as an adjunct professor for the school of education at the University of Southern California, for the graduate school of education and psychology at Pepperdine University, and for the Department of Educational Administration within the California State University at Fullerton.

Donato Nieman '74 writes as follows:

"Much has happened since I graduated from Bloomsburg in 1974, and I somehow never found the time to write. I taught social studies for two years in Bristol, PA and then was lifted. I then decided to pursue a career in government employment and worked in various positions for the State of New Jersey.

It became obvious that if I wanted to progress in government I needed to do some graduate work, so I entered Rutgers University and earned a master's degree in public administration. While doing so I met Roberta, my wife, and we were married in October of 1983.

At the present time I am employed as the purchasing and personnel officer for Franklin Township, New Jersey. Franklin is my hometown, and it is a pleasure to return. (Don't be confused—Franklin is the name, but Somerset is the mailing address.)

Please excuse the brevity of this letter but work calls. I'll write with more news when time permits."

Floyd "Shorty" Hitchcock '74 has come full circle. The man who was a national champion in 1974 for Bloomsburg University was at Nelson Fieldhouse for the Pennsylvania State Athletic Conference Tournament this year as head coach of Millersville University.

Hitchcock's ties to Bloomsburg remain strong, not only through husky coach Roger Sanders, under whom he served as an assistant for a time, but also through present BU standouts Rick and Rocky Bonomo, who were PIAA state champions for Hitchcock at Lake-Lehman High School.

"This is a real good feeling coming back here," he said. "I lived in Bloomsburg for seven or eight years of my life and have lots of friends here."

A veteran of coaching at the high school level and college levels, Hitchcock jumped at the chance when the Millersville job opened. He loves it so far.

"The biggest difference between coaching here and in a high school program is that the guys here are here because they want to wrestle. In high school you often have to beat the bushes to get kids to come out for the team and when you do get them you often have to start with the basics," he said.

Since college wrestlers already have the basics down, Hitchcock feels it's easier to stress hard work and discipline and concentrate on an individual's strengths and weaknesses.

In Hitchcock's senior year at Bloomsburg in 1974, he was the Outstanding Wrestler at both the NCAA Division II and I tournaments and he finished with a career

Pam Brown '81 is well aware of the problems of child enticement and abuse, so when she opens The Greenhouse Preschool and Kindergarten this year, she intends to teach youngsters "survival skills."

Academically, her students will learn social skills, basic mathematics and science, she said, but they will also learn:

Not to take rides from strangers.

What to do when they get lost.

Their phone numbers.

How to be watchful of the candy they collect at Halloween.

In opening the school, Brown, 24, says she will combine her lifelong ambition to teach with her love for children.

Recently licensed by the state Department of Education, Brown can teach up to 23 youngsters at a time in two sessions a day.

Unlike a daycare center, Brown plans to prepare her young students for the formal education they will undertake in Berwick schools.

"It's going to be an academic program. I'm not going to be just a babysitter," she said.

Three families are now interested in Brown's operation, and she needs several more students before she can ring her school bell. If she cannot get enough students for a summer session, she will open this fall.

A graduate of Bloomsburg University, Brown earned teaching certificates for grades kindergarten through eight in 1981 and 1982. She has been a substitute teacher in the Bloomsburg and Danville area school districts and the Columbia Daycare Center, where she taught when she was a student.

Now living at 39 Middle Avenue, Bloomsburg, with her father, BU professor Leroy Brown, she plans to move into an apartment above the new school at 1814 Spring Garden Avenue, Berwick.

Between buying a home for the school, license fees and equipment, Brown said The Greenhouse Preschool and Kindergarten represents a $50,000 investment. "I've got a lot of bills to pay."

While the latest trends in art often favor individuals with a flair for creating works that leave spectators and critics in a quandary, artists such as Charles Warner '83 are content to leave a clear picture.

Warner, a Bloomsburg resident with a flair for expressing sentiment and emotion in his work, terms himself a Christian artist with a surrealist approach.

"My style can be interpreted as an abstract idea realistically rendered," Warner says in explaining his work that centers on a religious theme.

The definition might bewilder anyone viewing his paintings or drawings without understanding the terminology.

But in the case of Warner's art work, the picture speaks for itself.

"I've always tried to create a believable world—a world you could understand on canvas," he says.

For Warner, that world is where he bases his message in art and in life.

A 1983 graduate of Bloomsburg University with a bachelor's degree in studio art, Warner has become somewhat of a community artist by settling in the area and playing his trade wherever the opportunity arises.

His paintings and drawings have been displayed at local galleries, churches and the university.

Despite establishing a favorable reputation locally, Warner says he is not interested in the wider fame many artists strive to attain.

"Fame is not something to be longed for, I don't think," he says.

"You being working to fulfill the expectations of others instead of working the way you want to, and in most cases it's not worth the effort."

At age 27, Warner has found a style and way of life worth his effort in an area he credits with "helping the development" of his artistic ideas.

"Bloomsburg is a good place for an artist to work," he remarks.

"There's not the hustle and bustle of the big city, and yet it's not isolated from cultural aspects because of the university."

With the right setting behind him, Warner works diligently at honing the skills that contribute to the area's religious tradition.

A sample of his efforts include a portrait of Jesus standing in a field looking away from Jerusalem.

Another picture is of the crucifixion, distinguished by a dark background with shades of light blue that the artist says is a representation of the hope "Jesus gave for everlasting life."

Creativity, whether religious or not, seems commonplace in Warner's family.

His father, Earl, Sr., was a writer for the Williamsport Sun Gazette and Grit, and is currently working on a book about the Korean War. His brother, Earl Jr., is a songwriter with a country style.

Warner himself works at music, acting and writing.

While still a student at BU, he appeared in several theater productions that included "Fiddler on the Roof," "The Fantasticks" and "The Great Magician."

He remains active in theater by participating in church-sponsored plays around the area.

In music, Warner eventually hopes to record his own album of Christian music. As a writer he tries his hand at poetry and short stories.

"Being an artist you should try to involve yourself in different aspects of the field," he comments.

"Too often people place limits on themselves by saying 'I can't do this or I can't do that.'"

"We have so many resources we never utilize because of that attitude and it's a waste. How do you know you can't do something unless you try?"

As he continued experimenting with new methods in the arts, Warner says his purpose in the field will never vary.

"I may change my style, but my message to spread the word of Christ will remain," he says.

"When you have a strong conviction in something, as I do in my faith, the foundation for your work has been established."

AWARD RECIPIENTS — Honored with Distinguished Service Awards at Alumni Weekend 1985 were Carl L. Stanitski, M.D.; Frank J. Furgele, Ed D.; and Conrad L. Stanitski, Ph.D.

Hall to be named for Mitranis

A Bloomsburg couple will be honored this fall when the university's main auditorium is named for them.

At its meeting in June, the Council of Trustees announced that the 2,000-seat facility in the Francis B. Haas Center for the Arts will be named the "Marco and Louise Mitran Hall."

"Naming the auditorium in honor of the Mitranis will acknowledge their support of the arts and their years of service to BU and the community," said John Dorla, chairman of the Council of Trustees. "Avid art patrons, the Mitranis have also made major gifts to the Bloomsburg Theatre Ensemble as well as the Haas Center for the Arts."

The auditorium is the site of numerous university and community functions — ranging from concerts and drama productions to commencements and lectures. It opened in 1967 and is surrounded by an art gallery, classrooms, offices and several production and practice facilities for the arts.

The Mitranis migrated to America in the early 1920s. Marco Mitran is chairman of the board of Milco Industries, Inc. — producers of daywear, sleepwear and loungewear garments. Although headquartered in Bloomsburg, Milco also has plants in Berwick, Benton and Millville. The company was founded more than 60 years ago and currently employs about 1,000 persons.

Mitran is a former board member and president of the Bloomsburg Rotary Club and a former member of the Bloomsburg Hospital Board. He was a recipient of the Silver Beaver Award from the Boy Scouts of America.

Mrs. Mitran has been a board member of the Girl Scouts for more than 25 years. She served as president of the organization for two years and received the Girl Scout Statuette. The Penn Woods Girl Scout Council named "Camp Louise" in her honor. A charter member of the Awards highlight Alumni Weekend

Three Distinguished Service Awards and two "Young Alumni of the Year" awards were presented during the annual banquet of the BU Alumni Association on Alumni Weekend, June 14-15.

The banquet also honored the Class of 1935 on the 50th anniversary of their graduation. Other classes in reunion were 1905, 1910, 1915, 1920, 1925, 1930, 1945 and 1955.

A special feature this year was a tribute to Bloomsburg alumni who served in the Armed Forces during World War II.

The banquet was also the setting for the official kickoff of the special campaign for the new Alumni House. Settlement on the former Harold and Dorothy John Dillon property occurred earlier that day.

Recipients of the 1985 Distinguished Service Awards were Frank J. Furgele '52, Ed.D., superintendent of the Brandywine School District in Claymont, Delaware; Carl L. Stanitski '60, M.D., an orthopaedic surgeon in Pittsburgh; and Conrad L. Stanitski '60, Ph.D., who was a chemistry professor at Randolph-Macon College in Ashland, Va., at the time. The Stanitskis are twins.

The Distinguished Service Awards were created in 1948 to recognize alumni who have excelled in at least one area: significant accomplishments in his or her profession; outstanding service to the university and/or the Alumni Association; or contributions to mankind.

The first recipient of the "Young Alumni of the Year" award was Richard S. Benyo '68, a free-lance writer and former executive director of RUNNER'S WORLD magazine. A second award went to Doug Hippenstiel '68, SCHOLARSHIPS — Cheryl Schultz, an incoming freshman from Berwick High School, is the 1985 recipient of a first-year full-tuition scholarship provided by Columbia Life Insurance Company of Bloomsburg. She plans to major in mathematics and will be eligible for half-tuition scholarships in her three subsequent years at BU if she maintains a 2.5 cumulative grade point average. Receiving half-tuition scholarships for 1985-1986 are Stephanie A. Stewart, Bloomsburg; Diann L. Kindig, Lime Ridge; and Mark Tappe, Catawissa. This year's awards are part of a continuing program in which the company assists Bloomsburg area students who enroll at BU. From left are Mark Tappe, Stephanie Stewart, Howard F. Blasch, Columbia Life's president and chief executive officer; Cheryl Schultz and Diann Kindig.

New president reflects on first days

Dear Bloomsburg University Alumni and Friends:

Recently your alumni director, Doug Hippenstiel, asked if I would be willing to prepare a message for you reflecting on my first few days as your president and to comment briefly on my thoughts for the future direction of the university. I am delighted that he asked me, because it gives me a wonderful opportunity to send special greetings to the thousands of members of the Bloomsburg University family with whom I have little occasion for regular contact.

Speaking to you informally, as friends, I want you to know that Lorraine, Emily, Sarah, and I (as well as Muffin, the dog, and Dusty, the cat) are delighted to now be associated with this fine institution. The tradition of "the friendly college on the hill" was certainly extended to us when we arrived. Many, many individuals from the various areas on campus were most helpful and cooperative in readying Buckalew Place for our arrival and in helping us become settled. Others sent warm wishes of welcome and expressed their support.

Before officially beginning my duties as your new president, my family and I spent several days exploring the environs of Bloomsburg and Central Pennsylvania including the Hershey and Reading areas. We think Pennsylvania is a beautiful state and has much to offer. We are pleased to be living close proximity to Philadelphia and New York and hope occasionally to take advantage of some of the fine cultural and educational opportunities these cities provide.

My first day in the office I thought would be a leisurely one in which I could meet casually with some of our staff and take a walk about campus. However, I soon learned that the president has weekly Monday morning meetings with the vice presidents and that this particular Monday was to be no exception. My office staff had prepared an agenda, and the meeting was held as planned.

Early that morning I had a phone call from a local reporter asking me if I would comment on my first day in office. I did accommodate the request later that afternoon when the day was completed, and I had something to report. Also during the afternoon I participated in my first "conference call" with the other thirteen presidents. I was told these calls are not uncommon. Throughout the day I received messages of welcome from many people.

In the several intervening weeks I have had an extensive tour of the entire campus from the bell tower in Carver Hall, to the boiler plant, to the chemistry labs, and to the underwater judging windows in Nelson pool. I can only concur with what many others have said before me that Bloomsburg's campus is an attractive, well-maintained facility which clearly reflects the care of its employees. I have been apprised of the several renovation projects which are being planned and support the plans developed to maintain the good physical condition of all the buildings.

My days continued to be filled with meetings, appointments with employees and students, receptions for summer freshmen and Elderhostelers, and special meetings with representatives from business and industry who are close friends and supporters of the university.

I am now looking forward to the beginning of the fall semester when the faculty and students return. Early in September I will be participating in three individual meetings with faculty, professional staff and support staff. We will be discussing some of the ideas which I believe can help move the university forward.

Some of these include defining and implementing a new governance system, exploring new avenues for improving the visual and performing arts activities which will contribute to the cultural climate of the university and surrounding communities, expanding existing and developing new contacts with individuals and organizations in the larger external community, and beginning to evaluate the quality of the student body and determining how to accelerate its qualitative growth. As the year progresses you will be hearing more about these topics.

I have been told of the good relationship between the university, its alumni, and the larger regional community, and I am eager to strengthen these bonds during the months and years ahead. I am also looking forward to working with the Alumni Association Board of Directors as the board plans its events and conducts its business. Throughout the year I plan to participate in as many of the alumni chapter meetings as I can and, of course, will be eager to greet those of you are able to join us for the Homecoming Weekend, October 18-20. We value your interest and support and hope to hear from each of you occasionally.

Bloomsburg University is an institution of which you can be proud, and I am pleased to have the opportunity to serve as its president.

Sincerely,
Harry Ausprich
President

Barton receives honorary degree

Two Bloomsburg University alumni figured prominently in commencement exercises at the university on August 15.

An honorary Doctor of Letters degree was awarded to Edwin M. Barton, Class of 1907, and the commencement address was presented by Dr. Mary Lou Fenstermaker John, Class of 1945.

It was the first graduation ceremony for the university's new president, Dr. Harry Ausprich.

The honorary degree was awarded to Barton for his distinguished career as an educator and historian as well as for his many public service activities and contributions to civic affairs.

A native of Mt. Carmel, he spent most of his boyhood in Bloomsburg. He started attending classes at the BSNS' model school in 1895. Following his graduation from BSNS, he earned the bachelor's and master's degrees from Trinity College in Hartford, Connecticut. He earned a second master's degree with a special diploma in supervision of history instruction from Columbia University. He did further studies at the University of Minnesota.

The noted county historian has led an interesting career in education. His first year of teaching was at the Locust Township High School, followed by a year at the Public School of Millville. He then taught in New York City and at Meriden, Conn., before joining the faculty of a private school in Minnesota. From there, Barton joined the Minneapolis Central School's faculty. He experienced his longest tenure (spanning 20 years) as the supervising head of social studies in the city school system of Elizabeth, New Jersey. After this stint, Barton retired and returned to Bloomsburg. However, he returned to both full-time and substitute teaching for some time at Bloomsburg State Teachers College before finally retiring from the education field.

Barton has been extremely active in civic affairs. He was a member of the Bloomsburg Area School Board, a member of the board of directors of the Bloomsburg Area Chamber of Commerce, treasurer of the Bloomsburg Parking and Traffic Commission, and a member of the Parking Authority of Bloomsburg.

He was founder and first president of the Columbia-Montour Torch Club, initiator and former head of the Columbia County Tourist Promotion Agency, a member of the Bloomsburg Kiwanis Club with repeated service on the board of directors, and active in the Boy Scouts in both New Jersey and Bloomsburg.

He is a past president and executive secretary emeritus with the status of official historian of the Columbia County Historical Society. He was named "Citizen of the Year" in 1970 by the Bloomsburg Area Chamber of Commerce. In 1975 he received the Distinguished Service Award from the BU Alumni Association.

Active in many professional groups, Barton has served as president of the Twin-City History Club of the New Jersey Council for the Social Studies, vice president of the New Jersey Association of Department Heads, and a secretary of the Middle States Council of Social Studies.

He is author "in collaboration" of a widely used text in civics and has contributed to state and national journals in education. From 1956 to 1973 he was proprietor of a modest business, The Barton Duplicating Service, providing typewriter transcription and multi-copy blueprint services.

For the last several years, he has resided at the Bloomsburg Health Care Center. Still alert and very active, he published his most recent book last year and worked on a daily basis during the past two academic years with many university students.

Dr. John, faculty emerita, spoke about "Bloomsburg University Today — Tomorrow the World." She is a 1945 graduate of the university who comes from a family whose ties to the school date back to the late 1800s, when this university was still a small academy. (Her father, also a BU faculty emeritus, is Howard F. Fenstermaker, Class of 1912. Her mother, the late Ruth Nuss Fenstermaker, was also a member of that class. Dr. John's grandmother, Annie Supplee Nuss, graduated from Bloomsburg in 1888.)

Dr. John earned a master of arts degree at Bucknell University in 1964 and her Ph.D. from Penn State University in 1978.

She recently retired after 26 years of service to her alma mater, where she served as an instructor and later a professor of French and as chairperson of the Department of Languages and Cultures. Under her leadership, the department gained several new programs, including the Certificate of Language Proficiency and minors in French and Spanish.

When Dr. John was not in the classroom, she gave untiringly of her time to many efforts. She served as advisor to the French Club and the campus chapter of Phi Sigma Iota, the national foreign language society. She coordinated numerous study-tours and trips abroad and in the United States for students studying French. Dr. John also assisted in developing a foreign student exchange program with the University of Nancy in France and with the city of Liverpool in England. In addition, she provided an avenue for high schoolers to compete in foreign language contests during International Day at the university.

As director of cultural affairs at Bloomsburg during the mid-1970s, Dr. John not only added to the enlightenment and enrichment of students and employees at BU, but also to that of the total community. She contributed to the well-being of the university by serving on numerous institutional committees, including the General Education Committee, the Arts and Sciences Curriculum Committee, and the university-wide Sabbatical Committee. She continues to be active on the Advisory Committee to International Education and several alumni committees.

Dr. John holds memberships in many state and national associations and honorary societies pertaining to foreign languages. She is a charter member and past president of the local chapter of the American Association of Teachers of French and currently secretary of the Pennsylvania State Language Association.

She has a son, F. Edward John.

World friendship goal of program

Bloomsburg area residents can learn more about individuals and customs of other countries and provide friendship and hospitality to lonely foreign students through an International Friendship Program being initiated by the International Friendship Council of Bloomsburg University.

A pilot project began this summer with students from Liverpool, England, who were here for about eight weeks, as well as new arrivals from other countries who will attend classes at BU this fall.

The summer pilot program will be expanded to include the returning international students in the fall, along with the remainder of new admissions to the university. There are 36 undergraduate and graduate foreign students currently attending the university, according to Bloomsburg minister John Lucas, chairman of the council.

Other council members include BU professor Anthony Sylvester, foreign student advisor; Roshani Samarasinghe, president of the foreign student group; and area residents Robert Kelly, Calvin Barto and Deb Grasley.

"We want these students to have the opportunity to meet with area families who will introduce them to American customs and hospitality," Lucas said. "Hospitality involves sharing interests and family activities, perhaps a simple family dinner.

"Both will benefit. The area residents can learn of different backgrounds and cultures while providing a warm friendly atmosphere for the international student who is far from his or her home and family.

"On the other hand," Lucas continued, "the international student gets to know an American family face-to-face, which can correct some of the impressions created by poor movies and export television.

"Experience has proven that healthy friendships and exciting learnings generate from these contacts. Without doubt, the sharing of ideas help to enrich the values of all individuals concerned."

director of alumni affairs at BU.

The association also recognized outstanding faculty, retiring faculty, retiring alumni board members, and volunteers who worked in the alumni office during the past year.

On Saturday, alumni had the opportunity to tour the campus and visit the university store before the annual business meeting in Carver Hall. A picnic on Carver Hall lawn followed the business meeting.

Dr. Frank J. Furgele '52, a veteran educator in Pennsylvania and Delaware, is superintendent of the Brandywine School District in Claymont, Delaware. Along the way, he has earned considerable recognition for his administrative skills.

In his current position since 1981, Furgele has effectively organized a newly-created district which includes 18 schools, 11,500 students and 1,700 employees. He provided leadership in gaining national recognition for Brandywine High School as a "Model High School" and attended a recognition ceremony at the White House in September, 1983. He creatively organized several programs to regain the confidence of the community, resulting in increased enrollment from the private sector. He also maintained fiscal soundness while working with a 1978 tax base and managed the district into a surplus.

Dr. Furgele has received the "Medal of Excellence" for administrative leadership from the State Board of Education. He also has received an outstanding award from the Middle States Association of Secondary Schools.

Prior to assuming his current position, Dr. Furgele served from 1978 to 1981 as superintendent of Area One of the New Castle County School District. During that time period, he provided leadership and direction in implementing one of the nation's largest and most successful court-ordered desegregation plans. He successfully brought together the staff and students from four large school districts for a transition with remarkably few problems.

As superintendent of the Claymont School District from 1968 to 1978, he completely reorganized a troubled school district across its entire scope. He effectively overcame union problems and established professional policies and procedures to orderly govern educational process. At the same time, he led the district into financial stability while providing an exceptional educational program.

Prior to taking the Delaware post, Dr. Furgele was principal of the Woodrow Wilson High School in Levittown, Pa. From 1959 to 1968, he supervised the high school from its planning stages through its completion. In organizing the complete curriculum, he led Wilson to a position of prominence. In recognition of his leadership, he won Pennsylvania's "Administrator of the Year" award.

Dr. Furgele began his career in education as a social studies teacher, librarian and athletic coach in the Baltimore County Schools (1952-53). He then moved to the DeHaas High School in Bristol, Pa., where he was a social studies teacher and department chairman (1953-55). From 1956 to 1959, he was assistant principal at Benjamin Franklin Junior High School in Levittown.

After graduating from Bloomsburg, Furgele earned a master of science degree from Temple University in 1955 and doctor of education degree from Temple in 1965. At various times in the past 22 years, he has served as an adjunct instructor in education at the Philadelphia Area Extension Center of Penn State, Widener University, the University of Delaware and the Delaware County Campus of Penn State.

Dr. Furgele was a member of Phi Sigma Pi and Gamma Theta Upsilon at Bloomsburg and Phi Delta Kappa at Temple. In addition, he has been active in many professional and community organizations.

He is a life member of the BU Alumni Board of Directors, having served as a director from 1963 to 1982. He served on the search committee for the first full-time executive director of the Alumni Association.

Furgele is married to the former Mildred "Lucky" Pilscoff of Exeter, Pa., of the Class of 1953. They are the parents of three children: Dawn, who is entering her final year at Delaware Law School; John, who attended Bloomsburg for about two years before transferring to Penn State, where he received a degree in structural and civil engineering in 1984; and Jim, who will be a junior in high school this fall.

Dr. Furgele's address is Star Route Box 228, Lakeville, PA 18438.

Dr. Carl L. Stanitski's professionalism has always extended beyond the orthopaedic operating room. Virtually since the beginning of his career, he has been active as a lecturer and seminar participant in more than two dozen locations — from Maine to Hawaii and from Florida to Saskatchewan.

He has presented at least 35 referred articles and papers, and has written a number of reviews, proceedings of conference and symposia, monographs, books and book chapters. In addition, he has refereed the following journals: Orthopaedic Survey, Advances in Orthopaedic Surgery, Physician and Sports Medicine, and American Journal of Sports Medicine.

Dr. Stanitski received his medical degree at Jefferson Medical College in Philadelphia in 1967 and completed his internship there in 1968. He was an orthopaedic surgery fellow at the University of Southern California's Rancho Los Amigos Hospital in Downey during 1970-1971. He completed his orthopaedic surgery residency at the University of Pittsburgh School of Medicine and Health Center Hospitals from 1971 to 1974.

Since then, he has been affiliated with the University of Pittsburgh School of Medicine as a clinical instructor (1974-1976), clinical assistant professor (1976-1980), and clinical associate professor (1980-present). Since 1979 he has been on the senior staff at Presbyterian-University Hospital, Children's Hospital, and St. Margaret Memorial Hospital, all in Pittsburgh.

For three months in 1979 he was a fellow in orthopaedic surgery at Children's Hospital M.C. in Boston. In 1984 he was on the senior staff at Western Pennsylvania Hospital, St. Francis General Hospital and Shady Side Hospital, all in Pittsburgh. He has also served as a consultant at Magee-Women's Hospital, Eye and Ear Hospital, Pioneer School, D.T. Watson Rehabilitation Hospital, and Rehabilitation Institute, all in Pittsburgh, and the Mount Desert Island Hospital in Bar Harbor, Maine.

He has also served as a clinician for the State of Pennsylvania Crippled Children Program, a member of the Biomaterials Advisory Board at Clemson University, the editorial board for Williams and Wilkins Co., team physician at Carnegie-Mellon University, orthopaedic consultant for the Allegheny-Nike Track Club, examiner for the American Board of Orthopaedic Surgery, and staff associate for the United States Public Health Service, the National Institutes of Arthritis and Metabolic Diseases, and the National Institutes of Health.

He holds memberships in 19 professional and scientific societies on the international, national, state and local levels. He has been particularly active in the American Academy of Orthopaedic Surgeons and is a past president (1983-1984) of the Pennsylvania Orthopaedic Society. He serves on the liaison committee of the American Orthopaedic Society of Sports Medicine, the board of directors of the Allegheny County Medical Society, the Governor's Council on Fitness and Sport and the Governor's Council on Maternal and Child Health.

While at Jefferson Medical College, he received the following honors: H. A. Hare Honorary Medical Society,

Pi Omega Pi observes 50th

Alumni members of Pi Omega Pi celebrated the fiftieth anniversary of Alpha Delta Chapter during Alumni Weekend in June.

Ruth A. Davis, president of the chapter for 1984-1985, welcomed the group to the program. Also greeting the group was Dr. Emory W. Rarig Jr., dean emeritus of the College of Business and chapter advisor from 1968 to present.

Presenting remarks was Melody Rose, national student representative of Pi Omega Pi, who is a student at Southwest Missouri State University.

Two former advisors, Dr. Ellen L. Lensing and Earl A. Gehrig, were recognized.

Representing the university were Dr. Larry W. Jones, interim president; Dr. Robert P. Yorl, acting dean of the College of Business; and Dr. John J. Divo Jr., chairperson of the Department of Business Education and Office Administration.

Special guests included Mary Anne Klemkosky, president-elect of Gamma Xi Chapter, Delta Pi Epsilon, 1983-1985; Dr. William Seldon, retired senior program specialist for business education in the Pennsylvania Department of Education; Mrs. William C. Forney, wife of former department chair and Alpha Delta advisor; Dr. Francis J. Radice, writer S. Rygiel, Clayton H. Ilinkei, Dr. Cyril Lindquist.

A special citation was presented by the Honorable Ted Stuban, Pennsylvania House of Representatives.

Dr. Ellen M. Clemens is co-advisor of Alpha Delta Chapter.

Nobel Laureate at BU

Dr. George Wald, a Nobel Prize winner for his work in physiology, spoke on campus under the sponsorship of the university's Endowed Lecture Fund. His topic was "Survival in a Lethal Society." Dr. Wald has been on the Harvard faculty since 1934.

SSHE gets 5.5% increase

In recent budget action taken by the General Assembly, the State System of Higher Education received a 5.5 percent appropriation increase for the 1985-1986 fiscal year.

"While the 5.5 percent appropriation falls short of the request made by the State System, I believe we were treated equitably within the higher education community," said Chancellor James H. McCormick.

Consequently, BU's 1985-1986 operating budget will include $20,234,772 in state appropriations. An additional $181,000 is expected for deferred maintenance and $292,000 for instructional equipment. Salaries for non-faculty and non-management is to increase three percent. Other salaries are yet to be decided.

The general operating appropriation for the State System now stands at $263,803,805. The SSHE had requested $266,009,938, a 6.38 percent increase over the 1984-1985 budget.

To reconcile the difference between SSHE's requested budget and the General Assembly's appropriation, the Board of Governor's has approved a tuition increase for the 1985-1986 academic year.

Beginning in September, the basic fee will increase $30 per academic year, or $15 per semester.

The increase affects both full-time and part-time, in-state and out-of-state undergraduate and graduate students.

In comparison to tuition increases at other Pennsylvania institutions, the SSHE increase is modest.

Russo elected to Athletic Hall of Fame

Russo will join the elite group which includes Charles "Chuck" Daly '52, Bill Foster, Bill Garson '63, Floyd "Shorty" Hitchcock '74, Russ Houk, Danny Litwhiler '38, Richard Lloyd '62, Robert B. Redman, and Bob Tucker '68.

A native of Seaford, New York, Russo was one of the finest performers in the long history of wrestling at BU and has molded Columbia into one of the top Ivy League wrestling schools as well as earning eastern and national recognition for the Lions.

After competing as a member of the Huskies' freshman team and posting an undefeated record, he went on to letter the following three seasons. During that time, he won two Pennsylvania Conference titles and two Pennsylvania Amateur Athletic Union crowns.

As a junior, he was the runner-up at 137 pounds in the National Association of Intercollegiate Athletics Championships and finished sixth at the National Collegiate Athletic Association Division I championships. The following season he won the NAIA title and placed fourth in the NCAA tourney. That season he was selected for the prestigious East-West All-Star Classic where he upset Len Groom of Colorado State College to help the East score one of its rare victories in the series.

Russo was also a recipient of the Redman Trophy, presented to the university's outstanding senior male athlete, and served as the Huskies' freshman coach while completing his degree.

He earned his bachelor's degree in history at BU and continued with graduate studies at both Cortland (NY) State and Columbia where he received a master's degree in 1974. He has also done additional course work in both history and Italian.

Following graduation from Bloomsburg, the standout won four Senior Metropolitan AAU Championships and two Eastern AAU crowns as a member of the New York Athletic Club. The NYAC won four eastern and national titles while Russo was a member of the squad.

He became Columbia's head coach in 1973 following a two-year stint as assistant coach and has compiled an 88-69-3 record in leading the Lions to Ivy League championships in 1980, 1981 and 1982. He was named New York State Collegiate Coach of the Year in 1981 and is currently chairman of the Ivy League Wrestling Coaches and past president of the New York State Wrestling Coaches Association.

HUBLER SCHOLAR —

Lori K. Berg, an incoming freshman from North Schuylkill High School, is the 1985 recipient of the $1,000 Elizabeth Hubler Scholarship. The award is provided annually by the family of the late educator who served on the BU Alumni Board for over 30 years. Miss Berg, a resident of Frackville, will major in computer and information science.

CHANGING OF THE GUARD — BU President Harry Ausprich talks with Chancellor James H. McCormick of the State System of Higher Education. McCormick, who held the BU presidency from 1973 to 1983, made the trip to Bloomsburg to welcome the new president who assumed his duties on July 15.

The A.D.'s corner

By ROGER SANDERS
Athletic Director

With so many things happening, I hardly know where to begin. Recruiting and personnel will make up most of the current news.

After 24 years of as men's swimming coach, Eli McLaughlin has resigned his coaching position. It was a decision he wrestled with for a long time because he loves to coach young men. Over the years he has influenced the lives of many of our student-athletes. In the years to come, I know he will continue to make significant contributions to the BU athletic program.

Joining the athletic staff on a full-time basis will be Tom Martucci, who was with us last year on a one-year temporary appointment. Tom will be assisting in track and field and in wrestling.

We are in the process of hiring an assistant athletic trainer and an assistant men's basketball coach. These positions are so very important to the overall athletic program. We would also like to have on board a fundraiser for athletics.

I am very proud of the recruiting efforts of all of our coaches. These efforts will undoubtedly pay dividends over the next few years. I will attempt to list a few of the key recruits for each sport:

FOOTBALL — Robert Preston, 6-3, 255 lbs., offensive and defensive tackle, Pottstown; Jeff Sparks, 6-2, 170 lbs., quarterback and defensive back, Valley View, Pa.; Tony Maslo, 6-2, 220 lbs., defensive end, Endicott, N.Y.; Joe Camisa, 6-2, 225 lbs., center, Somerville, N.J.; and Al Royster, 6-4, 275 lbs., defensive lineman, Keyport H.S., N.J.

SOCCER — Frank Tawlah, Ghana; Eddie Pfeiffer, Freedom H.S., Bethlehem; Mark Salak, Western Wayne; Jim Reilly, William Tennent, Pa.

CROSS COUNTRY — Craig Koch, Boyertown; Brenda Bisset, Bloomsburg.

GOLF — Wesley Hollis, Ambler; Roger Jones, Apalachin, N.Y.; Roger Mchalck, West Hazleton

TENNIS — Paul Gennaoui, Houston, Texas, ranked 12th in Middle States; Scott Glassford, Council Rock II S., PIAA doubles champion; Rich Roth, Central Bucks; Ken Becker, Flanders, N.J.

WRESTLING — Tony Reel, 118-lbs., Sunbury, two-time state champion; Franklin Beck, 118-lbs., Michigan, state champion; Norman Brown, 158-lbs., Maryland, two-time state champion; Brian Davls, 167-lbs., Maryland, two-time state champion, Dave Kennedy, 126-lbs., Athens, Pa., state champion; Joe Burke, 150-lbs., Sunbury; John Supsic, 118-lbs., Sunbury, second, PIAA; Tim Holter, Berwick, second, PIAA; Eric Lindsay, Virginin, second in state.

TRACK AND FIELD (Men) — John Walker, Central Columbia, Bloomsburg, PIAA state champion; Deann Brown, Norristown; Theresa Lorenzi, West Hazleton; Cheryl Halt, Boyertown; Brenda Blisset, Bloomsburg; Karen Lane, Shickshinny; Kathy Frick, Columbia, N.J.

TRACK AND FIELD (Women) — Jill Clercerski, York Springs, PIAA state champion; Deann Brown, Norristown; Theresa Lorenzi, West Hazleton; Cheryl Halt, Boyertown; Brenda Blisset, Bloomsburg; Karen Lane, Shickshinny; Kathy Frick, Columbia, N.J.

SOFTBALL — Lisa Hollinger, Hempfield H.S.; Cindy Long, East Stroudsburg; Robin Florett, Valley View II S.; Debbie Wilkens, Mt. Lakes, N.J. (All-State).

BASKETBALL (Men) — Bill Connolly, 6-5, Absecon, N.J.; Joe Gilhool, 6-1, Honesdale, honorable mention, All-State; Steve Melchior, 6-6, Lansdale; Mike Simpkins, 6-2, Norristown, honorable mention, All-State.

BASKETBALL (Women) — Theresa Lorenzi, West Hazleton, third team, All-State; Gina Cagnoli, Hershey; Gretchen Sharer, Allegheny Community College; Carol Spadora, Honesdale.

SWIMMING (Men) — Ron Wesche, diver, Ithaca, N.Y.

SWIMMING (Women) — Joan Wojtowicz, Linden, N.J., state finalist, Carol Gurniak, Emmaus, PIAA finalist, Amy Cole, Central Columbia, Bloomsburg, second, PIAA diving; Lisa Schmitt, Elizabethtown, N.J.; Carla Melmak, Dover, N.J.; Julie Sanders, Central Columbia, Bloomsburg; Jennifer Lindamann, Verona, N.J.; Liz Ball, Cranford, N.J.; Stephanie Kottenbach, Doylestown; Kristen Leininger, Pittstown; Lokota Hemish, Portland, Oregon.

As you can see by the above-mentioned student-athletes, there are quality young men and women who will be attending BU this fall. Hopefully, they will continue the tradition of excellence at Bloomsburg.

Very soon another school year will begin. If you haven't joined the Husky Club for the 1985-1986 year, I encourage you to do so now. We are only as strong as our alumni and friends. Become part of the excitement and join us at one of our athletic events.

Prof studies brain damaged rats

By DURRELL REICHLEY
Student Feature Writer

Rats. Most people think of rats as filthy, vile, disgusting creatures that help spread disease. Most of us would rather not even think about them, none the less look at them or handle them.

But Dr. Alex Poplawsky finds them very interesting. As a matter of fact, his career depends on them.

Dr. Poplawsky, 36, a psychology professor at Bloomsburg University, has spent the past 12 years studying the behavior of brain-damaged rats. Specifically, Dr. Poplawsky has spent most of his time studying the effects of septal lesions (damage) on the behavior of rats.

The septal area is a part of the limbic system in the brain and is located in the middle of the brain between the lower brain systems and the upper brain systems. The function of the limbic system is to integrate information from the lower and upper brain systems.

Poplawsky started studying the effects of septal lesions while in graduate school at Ohio University. He has continued his research while teaching psychology at BU.

Poplawsky studies the functions of the septal area and the recovery of functions by rats with brain damage.

He concentrates on studying the septal area "because I know the most about it. Also, there's easy access to that part of the brain," he says. "The septal area is fairly isolated. You can look at it without damaging other parts of the brain."

"I use rats because a human's subcortex has a lot of things in common with a rat's subcortex," he continues. "We can learn a lot about humans from studying rats. Plus, rats are convenient."

Poplawsky says that in the last decade or so, there's been a change in the idea of how the brain works. "In the late fifties and early sixties, people believed in the hardware theory," he says. "This theory said that everything in your brain is wired like a transistor. If something's gone, it's gone."

Now, Poplawsky says, researchers are finding out that behaviors don't just go away and that some of them come back.

"After brain damage, primary changes result in the permanent loss of a particular behavioral function. But secondary changes are temporary. It's more likely that someone will recover a secondary change."

In his experiments, Poplawsky damages the septal area by passing a very small current through it. Then, he watches the changes in the rat's behavior.

Poplawsky says there are several common behavioral changes that take place in the rat following brain damage. "The rats become hyperemotional, they overrespond to stimuli, there's an increase in their consumatory behavior, and they become very good at avoidance tasks."

From there, Poplawsky studies how long it takes before the behavior goes back to normal. "First, I need to know that the behavior does indeed go back to normal. If it does, then I try to find out what I can do to quicken the recovery. I experiment to see whether certain drugs will help speed recovery or not."

Poplawsky has been studying several of the rat's behaviors and how they relate to humans. He has found that septal lesion animals show compulsive behavior. "I can make them not compulsive by manipulating their experiences. This information could be used to help humans who are compulsive."

Another behavior Poplawsky has been studying is avoidance. "Septal animals are good at avoiding a shock," he says. "A normal animal, though, has a difficult time learning that. It's a rat's normal response to freeze."

"I tried to determine if it was the brain or hormones that caused the avoidance behavior. I concluded that it was the brain. This kind of information could be tied in with humans."

Poplawsky has also found septal lesions to be connected with anxiety, a common problem with humans today.

He's currently studying positive conditioned suppression, which deals with the suppression of responses to stimuli.

Poplawsky's work is of significant national interest. He has been published in MEMORY AND COGNITION, PHYSIOLOGY AND BEHAVIOR, BRAIN RESEARCH, and AMERICAN ZOOLOGIST. He has also presented papers to the American Psychological Association, the Society for Neuroscience, the Eastern Psychological Association, and the International Society for Developmental Psychobiology.

"I believe that the kinds of things I do may have a dramatic impact some day on something like Parkinson's Disease or brain damage in humans," he says.

Poplawsky has done research with other psychologists, too, including Dr. Steven L. Cohen, who also teaches at BU, and Dr. Robert L. Isaacson from SUNY at Binghamton.

Although Poplawsky does a lot of research, his primary responsibility is teaching. He teaches mostly experimental psychology courses. "To be good at teaching, you have to do research," he says. "I don't look at teaching and research as being separate—I look at them as being combined."

Poplawsky came to Bloomsburg in the fall of 1974. He earned a B.S. in psychology at the University of Scranton and a M.S. and a Ph.D. in experimental psychology at Ohio University.

"I never thought I would be a teacher," he says. "When I was in grad school, I didn't like to lecture. But that was because I didn't have a lot of experience in lecturing. My eyes were more on research."

"Then, during my last year of grad school, I found that I liked teaching. Actually, teaching and research work together."

Poplawsky chose to teach at Bloomsburg because "I'm from the area. I'm from Scranton. I understand the kind of students who come here."

In his lab classes, Poplawsky does mostly basic testing. But when he works with students on independent study, he usually does more difficult research—like septal lesions.

"Right now, I'm working with a student on an independent study project," he says. "I intend to get our results published in a reputable journal. It's highly unusual for a student to be published in a journal. I don't think students realize the opportunities they have here at Bloomsburg."

Poplawsky says there are probably only around 50 other researchers in the world doing septal lesions. "Few people can concentrate on it like I do," he says.

"I have freedom because my research is not funded by grants. The funds come from the university and go to the department of psychology. All of the things I do are used in my teaching."

"If I were at a major university," he says, "I would be doing my own research. Then I would have to compete for grants. The advantage of being at BU is that I can study the same topic for a long time."

One thing about the field of psychology that concerns Poplawsky is the anti-vivisectionist movement. "I'm aware of the opposition to using animals in the laboratory, but personally, I rarely get any opposition to using rats. Most people are concerned about monkeys, cats, and dogs. People don't have an attachment to rats."

"A lot of people are afraid that their pets are going to end up in a laboratory someday," Poplawsky says.

"They don't realize that the animals we use are specifically bred for research. The American Psychological Association has strict guidelines that have to be followed."

"If people are so against using animals in the labs, then they shouldn't eat meat, because that's killing animals, too," Poplawsky adds.

Poplawsky says that one of the saddest things about this kind of research is that sometimes he feels it may be shut down by anti-vivisectionist groups. "I don't know if it would happen. I don't see how it could happen. The implications are dramatic on how it will affect treatment of disease."

Poplawsky believes that some of the experiments being done with humans are "atrocious. Just look at chemotherapy," he says.

One thing that Poplawsky would point out to an anti-vivisectionist is that many surgeons practice on animals. "Would you rather have somebody practice on your mother, first?" he asks. "Lab animals help ensure our survival as a species."

"I don't feel great about sacrificing rats. I only use about 60 a year. But the benefits far outweigh the sacrifices."

When he's not in the classroom or in the laboratory, Poplawsky likes to spend time golfing, traveling, visiting museums, or reading Edgar Allan Poe stories. He also likes to spend time with his wife and two children at home in Espy.

Poplawsky says that, in the future, he hopes to study septal animals and their reactions to auditory signals. "I want to know if it's a function of emotion or the sensitivity of their hearing."

"I'm not interested in making a better rat," Poplawsky says. "I'm doing the research to benefit mankind."

New dean of business named

A new dean of the College of Business, Dr. John E. Dittrich, began his duties at BU on July 1. He came to Bloomsburg from the business faculty of the University of Colorado.

Dr. Dittrich succeeds Dr. Emory W. Rarig Jr., who retired as dean after 14 years to return to classroom teaching at the university. Robert P. Yori, chairman of the accounting department, served as acting dean during the spring semester.

Dittrich received his bachelor of science degree from Purdue University in 1958. He was awarded his master of business administration degree from Harvard in 1960 and his Ph.D. in business administration from the University of Washington in 1973.

"Dr. Dittrich brings to the College of Business a wealth of academic and business experience which we were seeking," said Dr. Kalyan Ghosh, acting provost and vice president for academic affairs when the appointment was made. "We're looking forward to a fine association with him, and I believe he will provide a strong academic leadership toward further progress by the College of Business."

JOHN DITTRICH

He also observed that "the contributions made by Dr. Rarig and Dr. Yori have been appreciated by the entire university community."

The new dean joined the Business College faculty at the University of Colorado in 1978 as associate professor. He became a full professor in 1981 and had been teaching courses in business policy, organizational behavior and fundamentals of management.

His previous teaching experience included five years as an assistant professor at the University of Kentucky and two years at the University of Washington as a staff and teaching associate.

From 1961 to 1969 he was affiliated with the H & D Container Division of Westvaco Corporation of New York City, where he was regional administrative manager, personnel manager and administrative services manager respectively. He previously was a commercial analyst with Fine Papers Division paper mill in Western Maryland.

He has authored or co-authored numerous books, articles, papers and reviews pertaining to his field, along with other writings for the Council of State Governments and the American Arbitration Association. He currently is doing research for the publications, "Information and Management" and "Organizational Behavior and Human Performance."

In his committee assignments at the University of Colorado, Dittrich chaired the Research and Creative Works Committee and was a member of the executive committee of the Faculty Senate, Graduate Studies Committee and the Faculty Senate Budget Committee.

'Life is for birds'

For naturalist Roger Tory Peterson, life is for the birds.

The nationally known ornithologist, writer, artist and lecturer delivered the commencement address here May 11 to about 700 sun-drenched graduating seniors at Bloomsburg University, punctuating his speech with personal anecdotes and memories of a boy who went hog-wild over birds at an early age.

"During the school years, many young people bow to peer pressure," he said. "They usually do what the others do. They do what is 'in.' But what is 'in' may soon be 'out.'"

And he gave the graduating class some time-honored tips.

"My advice to you—whether you are academically inclined or far out—is be yourself, and do not be overly influenced by the fashions or the fads of the day. Keep an open mind, an inquiring mind. Above all, be honest with yourself. It just might have survival value."

Peterson received an honorary Doctor of Letters from BU for his achievements and contributions to natural science. He is the author and illustrator of numerous bird, flower and other nature guides.

But Peterson pointed out that his success was due to education, and in particular, to an elementary school teacher named Blanche Hornbeck.

"How does a teacher know whether his or her efforts are fruitful?" he asked. "How do they know whether they have really gotten through to students? It may take many years to assess this. A teacher may never know."

He went on to tell about Hornbeck, who formed a Junior Audubon Club in Jamestown, New York, where Peterson was born and raised. She distributed ten leaflets about birds, each with a drawing for club members to color. She also provided the watercolors. For Peterson, it was all uphill from there.

As one enamored with the beauty and vitality of birds, Peterson urged the graduating class not to become "biologically illiterate."

"In this gadget civilization that we have built to insulate ourselves against the world, we often find ourselves trapped, not knowing whence we came or where we are going. It seems that the more artificially complex our affairs become, the more we yearn for the fundamentals, the things of the earth."

He cautioned students not to be like people who "go through life as though they are wearing blinders or are sleepwalking. Their eyes are open, yet they may see nothing of their wild associates on this planet. Their ears, attuned to motor cars and traffic, seldom catch the music of nature."

But that doesn't mean that the graduating seniors must abandon their courses of study in today's fast-paced world.

"We have biologists, of course, and bio-chemists," he said. "But we really need more bio-engineers, bio-lawyers and bio-politicians," he said.

And, he seemed to say, why not try living like the birds?

Peterson said that "birds, with their high rate of metabolism and furious pace of living, demonstrate perhaps better than any other animal the life forces. They are indicators, quickly reflecting changes in the environment, the environment we all share."

Peterson has traveled across the globe. He's received honorary degrees from many colleges and universities and belongs to numerous professional and scientific organizations.

He was awarded the Presidential Medal of Freedom by President Jimmy Carter in 1980 and in 1983 was nominated for the Nobel Peace Prize.

Peterson's appearance at Bloomsburg was reported in a summary of about a dozen commencement addresses throughout the country which was printed in an issue of TIME magazine.

BU ranks in top 22%

The Alumni Association of Bloomsburg University ranks in the top 22 percent of all college annual fund-raising programs in the country, according to BU officials.

Bloomsburg was one of 39 four-year public institutions selected as finalists in the Alumni Giving Incentive Award program sponsored by the Council for the Advancement and Support of Education (CASE) and U.S. Steel. BU was selected as a finalist in the Improvement category.

The winners were the Pennsylvania State University and Southwest State University of Minnesota.

The BU Alumni Fund has grown from $47,000 and a 10 percent participation rate in 1980 to $138,000 and a 23 percent participation rate in 1984, according to Doug Hippenstiel '68, director of alumni affairs.

Alumnus writes book

NEW TALES FOR OLD, by George Sharp. Published by Dorrance and Company, Bryn Mawr, PA. June 1985. $8.95.

For the parents who still enjoy the favorite old pastime of a family story hour, George Sharp has provided a book of five tales to delight all ages. Because of the wide vocabulary used, and because the settings are in ancient and medieval times, this is a book to share with children by reading aloud.

In story form Sharp shows the importance of old-fashioned virtues. He makes right triumphant, kindness and thoughtfulness rewarding, and in the story of "The Princess with the Wooden Ears" he gently points out the folly of being overly indulgent parents.

Sharp, Class of 1938, is a graduate of Bloomsburg University at the time it was known as Bloomsburg State Teachers College. He did his graduate studies at Temple University.

A teacher in the schools of Chester, Pa., Sharp has been involved with the theater productions there. For many years, he and his wife, Marjorie MacDonald Sharp, worked together on "Once Upon a Time," a series of radio plays on station WVCH. In this book, NEW TALES FOR OLD, they have collaborated again: he wrote, she illustrated.

Sharp's poems have been included in anthologies in Great Britain as well as the United States. He has published two volumes of poetry: THREE SONGS FOR MARJORIE and BONNIE IN THE WINDOW. Plays written by Sharp to celebrate our country's 200th anniversary were recorded in a cassette series entitled "Development in America," by Gamco Industries' Creative Industries.

NEW TALES FOR OLD is the first published fiction for this BU alumnus and will delight many.

Poetry prize created

An annual poetry prize has been established in honor of Professor Richard C. Savage upon his recent retirement from the BU faculty. Sponsored by the Academy of American Poets and the English Department, the contest will be open to any undergraduate enrolled at the university.

An award of $100 will be made for the prize-winning poem selected by a panel of three judges. Two poems will be cited for honorable mention.

Poems will be judged on clarity and the imaginative use of language, imagery, control of theme, and originality of insight.

Savage donated the local prize as part of the College and University Poetry Prize Program of the Academy of American Poets in 1984-1985. BU's winner, selected from 14 contestants, was Bobbie Lee Urso for "When I Knew You." Judges were Harry Ackerman, Richard O'Keefe and Savage.

Cooper elected

Dr. Tom Cooper, dean of admissions and enrollment management at BU, has been elected president-elect of the Pennsylvania Association of College Admissions Counselors.

The association's membership includes 147 Pennsylvania colleges and universities, 170 Pennsylvania secondary schools, and 196 out-of-state colleges and universities as associate members.

As president-elect, Cooper is responsible for planning the 1986 annual conference and will then assume the presidency during the 1986-1987 fiscal year. His election marks the first time in the 25-year history of the association that the president will be from a State System of Higher Education institution.

Transcript requests

The Office of the Registrar has outlined procedures through which it releases transcripts.

Requests for official transcripts must be made in writing to the registrar. The fee of $2.00 each, payable to Bloomsburg University, must accompany each request. The registrar's office regrets that it cannot bill alumni for transcripts, as the cost would be prohibitive.

Each transcript request must carry the signature of the student or alumnus, which authorizes the registrar to release the transcript. This requirement is necessary to comply with the Pennsylvania Right-to-Know Law and the Buckley Amendment to the Federal Omnibus Education Bill.

Transcripts are usually sent out within three to five working days after a request is received, except at the beginning and end of semesters, when processing may take as long as two weeks.

New grad program

Pennsylvania's newest innovative graduate program in instructional technology is making its debut at Bloomsburg University.

Approved at the last meeting of the State System of Higher Education's board of governors, the master of science degree in instructional technology combines training in computers, education, educational media and some of the personnel sciences.

Dr. Dan Pantaleo, dean of graduate studies at BU, reports that a selected combination of 30 credit hours in the instructional technology curricula prepares graduates to enter a number of careers in business, industry, government and various non-profit agencies. With this technical background in computers and interactive video, graduates are able to prepare training programs for employees in a wide range of fields.

"Because of the instructional technologist's potentials for developing and redeveloping human resources, their field is the largest single projected career growth area in corporate business through the year 2000," Pantaleo noted. "Current and future employment trends justify Pennsylvania's needs for such a program. Technology is no longer futuristic, it's now. Consequently, for now and the future, instructional technologists are needed to help America through the changing employment trends."

The BU program places emphasis on strategies and techniques for successful human systems development — including areas highlighted by the American Society for Training and Development, and especially areas involving the use of computers with other audio-visuals.

The program is interdisciplinary in design, encompassing courses from all colleges of the university. Persons with an interest in professional positions such as trainer, educational program designer or educational specialist in business, industry or health care organizations, or instructional technology resource person for an elementary or high school or school district, should consider majoring in instructional technology. Elective courses can be selected with an adviser to pattern the program for an individual's goals.

A person with an undergraduate degree in any field of study from an accredited institution of higher education is eligible for this program. Additional program requirements are being considered that will lead to teacher certification in computer education.

Master storyteller

The most famous master of story telling in the world today, Isaac Bashevis Singer, visited BU as part of the Multi-Cultural celebration. The Nobel laureate gave a special lecture and workshop on the art of writing and telling stories.

Author of the short story from which the film, "Yentl," was adapted, Singer was awarded the Nobel Prize for Literature in 1978. He has also been the recipient of numerous literary awards which include two National Book Awards, the Louis Laxed Prize, and a grant from the American Academy and Institute of Arts and Letters, of which he is now a member.

He work has appeared in numerous magazines, including "The New Yorker," "Playboy," "Commentary Esquire," and "Partisan Review." His "Collected Stories" was a national best seller in the spring of 1982. Singer's "Stories for Children" was published in October 1984.

His new novel, "The Penitent," is scheduled for release this fall.

Roberts honored

A tract of campus will be dedicated as the Percival R. Roberts III Sculpture Garden in memory of the late faculty member.

The site is located between the McCormick Center for Human Services and the Bakeless Center for the Humanities.

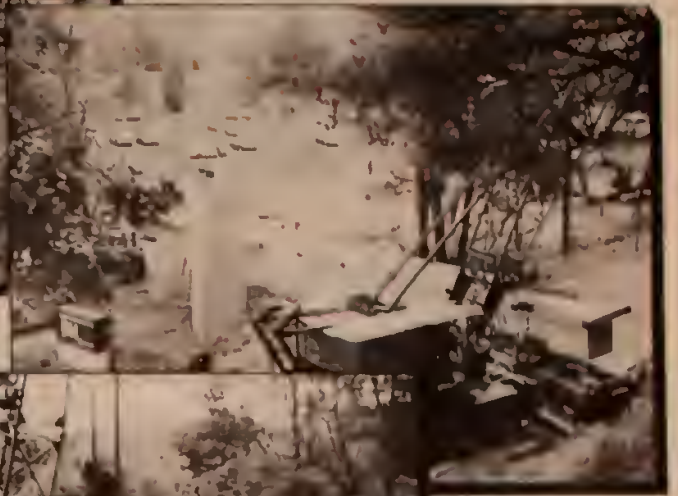

Dr. Roberts, an award-winning poet, artist and respected educator, died last October.

FM station on air

Bloomsburg University's new FM radio station started operating on June 17. Located in the McCormick Center, the station broadcasts about two hours each evening at a frequency of 91.1 on the FM dial.

The 1,000-watt station will be dedicated during the Homecoming celebration to October, according to William Aclerno, advisor. WBSC, an AM station, will continue to operate from the studio to the Kehr Union.

Cooley ready for challenge

The following article about Max G. Cooley '50 was written by Dotti Petersen for the Evening Sentinel, Carlisle, Pa.

For Max G. Cooley, retirement marks the beginning of "a new challenge."

Cooley, 61, has been an educator for 34 years, teaching and administering in both public schools and colleges.

Originally from Towanda, he earned his bachelor's degree from Bloomsburg and a master of arts and doctorate of education from Columbia University. All three were in business education.

For the last 25 years, Cooley has worked at Shippensburg University in the business education department. He retired in August.

Although he has many plans for his retirement, he has mixed emotions about leaving Shippensburg.

"Young people are outstanding today," he says. "I will miss working with them."

The tall, balding professor has lived in a small gray house at 404 Sunset Lane, Shippensburg, for 25 years. Cooley built his back porch eight years ago.

"We just about live out here during the summer," he says.

"The house is in a nice location," Cooley adds. "We have wonderful neighbors here, people we think an awfully lot of, and I suspect that has influenced our choice to stay here."

Cooley joined Shippensburg's faculty in 1959 as an assistant professor. He was made an associate professor and director of business in 1965.

Two years later, he became a full professor. In 1970, he became chairman of the business education department and dean of continuing education, a position he held for 10 years.

Cooley's interest in education began when he was a child.

"I grew up in a family where there were a number of teachers, and I think they had an effect on me," he says,

"I became very interested in teaching very early in my life and never fled from that."

When he arrived at Shippensburg in 1959, it was then Shippensburg State Teachers' College — a very small school with a very small campus.

"I've seen it not only grow, but change very dynamically, from a teacher education, single-purpose institution to a multi-purpose institution," he says.

Cooley has been involved in many professional organizations. He served as president of the Pennsylvania Association for Adult Education, the Pennsylvania State College/University Council for Continuing Education and the Pennsylvania Business Education Association.

But education is definitely not his only interest.

He was awarded Shippensburg Chamber of Commerce's Common Ground Award in 1981. The annual award is given to the person who does the most to foster better relationships between the community and the university.

Cooley received the award for his participation in the Operation Heartbeat program to teach cardio-pulmonary resuscitation.

Both he and his wife, Ruth, are certified CPR instructors. Cooley helped set up Operation Heartbeat in Shippensburg.

"The thing that is most exciting is that we were part of a program that taught literally thousands of people how to perform CPR," he says.

In the backyard of the couple's home is a colorful flower and vegetable garden, bordered by brick walkways. Neatly sculptured and fenced in, it provides a peaceful, relaxing place to spend time.

Cooley has entered his flowers and vegetables in shows, and plants three gardens yearly. Now that he's retired, he says he plans to spend more time gardening.

He also wants to travel more. Recently, the couple took a cruise to the Caribbean, and Cooley has visited every state except Alaska and Hawaii.

"I think we may very well do that if our health holds up and the money holds out," Cooley says.

He would also like to go to Europe and is investigating the possibility of taking the trip as part of the Elderhostel program, which he helped develop while president of the adult education association.

He has also become interested in painting and has set up a studio in the back of his garage.

"Wherever I go, I look at all the paintings and drawings that are around and I say, 'Hey, I could do that. Why don't I get at that?'" he says.

"I've also been very interested in writing," he adds. "I feel that possibly I will be doing more of that. I've written professionally, but I think it would be exciting to write a novel."

Whatever Cooley does, he won't be bored with retirement.

"I have a lot planned," he says. "One always hopes that he'll have the health and the energy and the inspiration to do things."

Where does he find time to do everything?

"I generally arise about five or 5:30 every morning and I feel just about all my life," he says.

Of his wife of nearly 38 years, Cooley says, "I've always been blessed with a wife who has supported me all the way through all of my professional activities . . . and she deserves a great deal of credit for the blessing she has been to me."

"We've always looked at almost all activities as a team effort," he adds. "We have not canceled each other out. That doesn't mean that we agree 100 percent. But once we decide the direction we're going to go, we're a team."

The Cooleys have two sons, Gary, who operates an air conditioning and heating business in Shippensburg, and Mark, who manages Capitol Theatre in Chambersburg.

Cooley is excited about the future.

"Every new day is a new vista, a new challenge and new excitement," he says.

Dr. Cooley's address is 404 Sunset Lane, Shippensburg, PA 17257.

A newly-released volume, "American Poetry Anthology," Spring 1985, contains a poem by Virginia E. Cruikshank '30, a retired teacher who taught in the Shikellamy and Shamokin schools for a total of 41 years.

The poem is entitled, "I Danced and Danced." The book is edited by John Frost of the American Poetry Association of Santa Cruz, California. Another forthcoming anthology by the same publisher will contain her poem, "On a Museum Piece."

Last fall, two poems were included in the anthology "Our World's Best-Loved Poems," edited by John Campbell, noted Shakespearean reader and actor and published by World of Poetry, Sacramento, California.

The poems are entitled "New Life" and "Dirge." Several poems are to be published in a new anthology in July, also by "World of Poetry." This will be the 11th anthology that includes her poems. World of Poetry has also awarded her eight "Award of Merit Certificates."

Poems by Miss Cruikshank have previously been published in "Adventures in Poetry Magazine" of Texas, "The Keystone Gardener," and "The Lantern" of New York.

Miss Cruikshank is a graduate of Shamokin High School, and the Breadloaf Conference at Middlebury College, a summer writing workshop.

She is the daughter of Mrs. Cora A. Cruikshank and the late Virgilus Moorehouse Cruikshank, real estate broker and inventor.

Miss Cruikshank's address is 220 North Second Street, Sunbury, Pennsylvania 17801.

Gayle Jones Reed, daughter of Elfred Harold Jones '30 and the late Dorothy Jones was named Art Educator of the Year for the state of New Jersey. She received an award from the governor at ceremonies in Trenton. A former teacher at Bloomsburg University, she now teaches high school in Wayne, New Jersey.

Elfred's address is 10 West Park Street, Carroll Park, Bloomsburg 17815.

Thursabert Schuyler '30 died on July 2. She was a long-time teacher of Latin and English at Bloomsburg High School.

Miss Schuyler had been in ill health for a number of years and seriously or critically ill for the past eight months, during which she was hospitalized on several occasions.

A resident of Bloomsburg almost all her life, she was the daughter of the late Fred H. and Martha Freas Schuyler and was raised in the home of her maternal grandfather, the late Birch B. Freas, and a maternal aunt, the late Mary Freas.

Miss Schuyler was a graduate of Bloomsburg High School in 1926. She received her master's degree from New York University in the early 1940s. She started her teaching career in Damascus, Wayne County, taught one year in Mechanicsburg and over 36 years at Bloomsburg High School, retiring in 1970.

Miss Schuyler was a life-long member of Wesley United Methodist Church, Bloomsburg, and for years was the director of the Youth Fellowship of that congregation. She was a member of the Fort McClure Chapter, Daughters of the American Revolution, and the Miquon Chapter, Daughters of American Colonists.

Survivors include two brothers, Edward F., Bloomsburg, and Robert M., Maple Heights, Ohio. A sister, Cpt. Mary Freas Schuyler, Women's Army Corps, was killed in November 1944 in the European Theater in World War II.

While attending Bloomsburg she was secretary of the Senior Class; vice president and historian of the junior class; active with Obiter staff, Maroon and Gold staff, Social Control Committee, Junior Class play, Mu Phi class were: Julia Weillver Driskell, Marjorie Downing Cosgrove, Mary Lou Fenstermaker John, Mary Flaherty Kohrherr, Elsie Flall Kull, Alda Hunter Richard, Carol McCloughan Hilkert; from the class of 1944: Nelena Pope Swank; from the class of 1946: Dorothy Koehler Pugh, Eltheda Klingaman Smith; from the class of 1947: Robert L. Bunge, John W. Thomas. Other guests were Louise Seaman Thomas '42, Betty L. Fisher '48, Dorothy Bunge '73, Marcella Vogel, and the Messrs. Driskell, Kohrherr, Kull, Hilkert, and Pugh.

Everyone enjoyed exchanging memories and experiences, and Alumni President John Thomas brought the group up to date on current activities of the Alumni Board, particularly the purchase of the Alumni House. Comments from some of the class members who sent notes were as follows:

From the Class of 1945: Jeanne Keller Epley: "I've been retired from teaching for ten years and enjoying it. We live in Little Culver, Indiana (where I was born) and spend the winter months in Lequesta, Florida, playing golf and enjoying the beach. . . . Even though I graduated with a business degree from Bloom, I spent my years teaching in elementary grades with a reading specialist degree from Purdue. After 21 years, I was ready to move on to hobbies and travel." (She also sent a good photo of herself and her husband — we'll save for the 45th!)

Marilyn Sailer Jackson: "It will be five years in June that I left teaching and have never for one moment regretted it. In mid-1986 we are moving to Hobe Sound, which is eight miles south of Stuart, Florida. . . . We are looking forward to building a home and to the small town flavor of the area."

Gloria Bealeastro Opakla: "After graduation from B.S.T.C. in 1945, I taught school in Pennsylvania for three years. Married John R. Opakla, who also attended B.S.T.C. in the Navy program and later graduated from Penn State Unit. We have been married 37 years, have four grown children and seven grandchildren. My husband, John, is vice president/finance of a macaroni manufacturing company in Buffalo. He hopes to retire in a few years when we hope to do a lot more traveling and playing golf, which we do a lot of now."

Mary Caroline Wagner Hoffman: "The summer of 1945, when I was graduated from the then Bloomsburg State Teachers' College, there were only three of us. . . . Of the girls who completed the two year program in 1936, I know quite a few and we meet once a year at Knoebel's for a social hour and dinner. . . . My husband Walter and I are retired. Our son is married and lives in Lancaster. Our daughter is married and lives in Danville. We have one granddaughter."

Betty Burnham Rosell: "June 1984 I retired from public school teaching after 30 years in one high school — 34 years in New Jersey, to say nothing of the time in Pennsylvania. Three days a week I have a part-time job in Camden in an office. It consists of accounting, clerk, typist. Instead of telling students to do something, I do it!"

Julia Weillver Driskell: "We are both retired, but keep busy with our family, church, and volunteer activities. Our four girls are married with families of their own. One grandson has finished his first year of college and another has plans to enter this fall."

Julian Zinzarella (and Ella Schargo Zinzarella '44): "Julian will retire as principal of Gordon Junior High School, Coatesville Area School District on June 31. He has 41 years in education; 20 of them as a principal."

Marjorie Downing Cosgrove: "I am retiring this June at the end of the school year with 34.44 years of service. My son Edward will graduate from Penn State next December. This summer he will be working with the Camden (Maine) Shakespeare Company. My husband Donald is working for Master Chemical Company in Wilkes Barre, Pa."

Elsie Ffali Kull: "I retired in June of '82 and have been busy doing volunteer work for my church and a nursing home, and I just completed my year as Worthy Matron of our Eastern Star Chapter."

Alda Hunter Richard: "Married to Charles Richard. Retired. One daughter Doreen who is with Computer Clinic at Selinsgrove office."

Eudora Berlew Lynne: "I retired from teaching four years ago this month and cannot believe it has been that long. I do a lot of craft work and volunteer at several places. I can't seem to find time for all the things I'd like to do. Borge and I took a wonderful trip to England, Scotland and Wales last summer. One of our daughters is married and lives in New Hampshire. The other one has an apartment in the next town."

Mildred Dzuris: "I'm employed at Northwest Area Junior-Senior High School as a counselor. I've been in counseling for the past 15 years after many years of classroom teaching in the areas of English and Social Studies."

From the Class of 1944:

Sara Marie Dockey Edwards: "Please tell all: 1986 is Berwick's Bicentennial Year. We are planning a whole year of activities especially the week of June 13 to 22." (Sallie is chairing the Bicentennial Committee.)

Effie Patterson Gore: "I retired last fall after having been a speech and language pathologist with the Virginia Beach public schools for 17 years. I loved my work as a speech pathologist but I am also enjoying retirement. Our daughter is completing her Ph.D. in English education at Arizona State in Tempe, Arizona. Our older son is in business for himself here at Virginia Beach. Our younger son is married, has two boys, and will complete a three-year enlistment in the Navy as a dentist. He will go into private practice with his father."

Florence Faust Yeany: "I am also retiring from full time work. Phil '43 is still working with MacCabe Electrical Conductors doing accounting work. Just for the record: 4 children, 5 grandchildren, 1 cat and 1 dog."

Nelena Pope Swank: "First grade teacher — Danville Area Schools. Husband — Donald, retired. Three children: Kay, first grade teacher in Selinsgrove; Mark, diagnostic radiologist at Bethlehem, Pa.; Lynn, organ builder at Scotia, New York. Three grandchildren."

From the Class of 1946:

Nelle A. Kramer: "Retired in 1978 after teaching 42 years in the same building less months September to February. Started in one-room school Bear Creek Township. Four-room school was ready February, 1936. We were under Wilkes-Barre Area School District when I retired. Am enjoying retirement."

Donald D. Rabb, D.Ed.: "Dottie and I regret that we will not be able to reunite with the rest of the gang, but we are leaving on June 12 to go to Ireland for three weeks to see as much of the country as we can, and above all else, to return to Dottie's ancestral homeland in County Antrim (Glants Causeway area) in Northern Ireland."

Dorothy Kocher Pugh: "God has blessed us with 4 children — all married, nine grandchildren, all in good health. I am a kindergarten teacher at Chancellor St. School in Council Rock School District, completing 26th year. We have acquired an old brownstone house on Court Street in Newtown — circa 1700 (early) — which Bill has worked diligently with his carpentry skills to restore."

Ralph Tremato: "Tantalizing envelope from Spain — tell us what you've been doing, Ralph!"

Eileen Falvey McGovern: "Until recently, I was working full time for a busy advertising agency. Would now like to do something part time. My family has 'grown and flown.' Oldest daughter is a learning disabilities specialist, is married, and has a year-and-a-half old baby girl. My next daughter will receive her bachelor's degree from Connecticut College this month as a return-to-college student, has a husband and two small sons, and was elected to Phi Reta Kappa. Third daughter, a Boston College grad, is in a doctoral program at Harvard. Youngest daughter is a graduate of Central Connecticut State University, and is an accountant for a legal firm in Portsmouth, N.H."

Marian Creveling Zelders: "I took early retirement from my teaching in Allentown three years ago. Isn't retirement wonderful?"

From the Class of 1947:

Mary Pelchar Chamberlain: "Sorry we could not be with you. We wish our classmates a good reunion, good fellowship and good health, and hope we can be with you one of these years."

Robert L. Bunge: "Married while in college. Taught at Millville, Pa. during 1947-48 school year. Attended Bucknell University 1948-49 and received the M.S. in Ed. degree, majoring in guidance. Taught at Catawissa, Pa. from 1949 to 1953. Worked as a junior radiochemist at U.S. Radium's Almedia plant from 1953 to 1956. Transferred to home office of corporation in 1956 to 1960. Taught at Milton Area Schools, Milton, Pa. from 1960 to 1964. Went to B.S.C. as assistant to the Dean of Instruction and Registrar in 1964, retiring in August, 1983. Spent several months during past two winters in Casa Flesta Travel Trailer Resort in Tempe, Arizona. Have two daughters and one granddaughter. Peggy, an R.N., is a coordinator of poison control in the Lehigh Valley. Penny is director of Job Training Partnership Act in Columbia County."

He's still hooked

The following article about Art Luptowski '73 was written by Michael J. Dillon for the Press-Enterprise, Bloomsburg.

He walked into the Bloomsburg State College gymnasium 16 years ago, a 5-10 guard who wasn't good enough to make his high school team.

Four years later, he walked off the BSC basketball court as one of the best guards in the school's history.

His number "10" was retired a few years ago.

Art Luptowski comes back to the university every summer to play basketball with old teammates and the awkward, gangly kids who come to BU coach Charlie Chronister's Husky Basketball Camp.

He also plays with the notion of returning here to coach someday.

He's 33 now, but with his thin frame and hang-jaw grin, Luptowski could pass for a college junior.

Old teammates like John Willis, now a professional star in Israel, come back for the camp. Ex-NBA players like Bob Greelan and Eddie Mast, Luptowski's good pals, also stop in for a few days.

When the camp kids head back to the lower campus for dinner and a night of horseplay and television, the pick-up games start. Luptowski, Greelan and Mast all live within driving distance of each other and play together every chance they get.

Luptowski is the head basketball coach at Kutztown High School — his team posted a 27-3 record this season — and he and his friends will travel a lot farther than Bloomsburg to play ball.

"Once you've played basketball competitively, you're hooked."

Now it's the pure physics of the game that matter, not the crowds or the accolades that filled his life in younger days.

"I haven't reached the age yet where I can't play with good guys and be a factor," he says from his perch on the hood of a car outside the Nelson Field House.

Trading adulation and honors for the asphalt playground and empty echoing YMCA circuit wasn't easy for Luptowski when he left college in 1973.

"When you first get out, it's tough, but now it's so long ago. You just get on with your life. It was once and done."

Luptowski didn't have a chance to go the overseas professional route like John Willis did. "I would have loved to, but there's a limit on Americans and there's a lot of guys in the world who are 5-10.

"They almost always want big guys, they have their own small guys," he laughs.

Even at age 33, Luptowski says that if he got the chance to go overseas, he'd be in good enough shape to play.

During the high school season, he stays off the sandlot circuit and runs with Gomez, the lazy German Shepard stretched out on the floor of the field house.

After that, he's out on tour with Mast and Greelan.

"We went to Brownsville, Brooklyn, for a pick-up game two months ago, and we went to Woodstock to play, too," says Luptowski.

The best part of summer is returning here, to see old teammates and to give the camp kids a chance at the moment he had 12 years ago.

"The younger kids offer tremendous enthusiasm. The older kids you can teach."

Luptowski says his position at guard is a definite teaching advantage because "lead guards have a better knowledge of what everybody does."

He hopes Chronister shares that philosophy when he looks for a new assistant.

"I'd love to come up to the college level," he says. But right now, the afternoon camp session is in full progress, and Luptowski heads back into the gym to teach the older kids and laugh with the youngsters.

When it's over, there will be another pick-up game and after that it's out to the old college haunts for a few beers and a lot of stories.

Art is married to the former Ann M. Boyer '73. Their address is R.D. 1, Box 760, Lenhartsville, PA 19534.

The BU Council of Trustees recently unveiled a bronze plaque honoring six former trustees for their work in making the $6.4 million James H. McCormick Human Services Center a reality.

Located in the lobby of the university's new three-story building, the plaque honors Frank M. Fay of Hazleton, Thomas C. Gordon and Joan C. Ketter of Bloomsburg, Joseph M. Nespoll of Berwick, Kevin M. O'Connor of Plains and Dr. Edwin Welsbond of Mt. Carmel.

The plaque's inscription notes that they worked "diligently to make this educational facility a reality."

Fay, who served on the BU council from 1971-1981, is proprietor of an insurance agency. Gordon, who was a student trustee during 1980-1982, recently graduated from law school and is working with the Columbia County Court System. Mrs. Ketter is a housewife who served as a trustee from 1975-1981. Nespoll, a jeweler, served during 1971-1983. O'Connor, a regional school administrator, was a BU trustee from 1976 to 1983. Welsbond, an optometrist, was on the board from 1971 to 1983.

Special guests were Chancellor McCormick, for whom the building was named, and former BU administrators Boyd F. Buckingham, Frank Davis, Kenneth Hoffmann and Phillip Krause.

The McCormick Center houses laboratories, radio and TV studios, classrooms, conference rooms, the health center, faculty offices and several academic departments, including nursing.

Radio equipment for an FM station transmitting 25-50 miles, a satellite TV receiving disk for 120 stations, and an electronic signal distribution system have been installed in the building.

The class of 1955 held a truly memorable reunion in the Hotel Magee University Room on June 15.

John and Barbara Hoch were guests of honor along with Burley Grimes who graduated in '48, '49, '50, '51, '52, '53, '54, '55 and '56.

Jan Ference Kwiatkoski created framable cartoon prizes for the following winners: came the furthest — Al Walburn from San Diego; most children — Ruthie Paul Jones; most education — Dr. Tom Persing; grown the most, Arnie Garinger (119 pounds to 185 pounds). Ardell Zeigenfuss won something which slips my mind but he deserved it. Joanie Christy Connelly looked the best for her age.

As each graduate spoke of his or her family, we all were amazed that nearly every offspring of every graduate had completed four or more years of higher education.

Eulogies and silence were offered for Dick Hорт and Lynda Bogart.

Rudy and Nancy Bangs Holtzman created a written test called "Trivial Pursuit 1955." No one knew all the answers but we amazed ourselves with names of mascots, dieticians, nurses and old lovers.

Revelry proceeded well into the wee hours again reminding Bloomsburg that without the class of 1955, Hess's Bar would only be a memory.

In attendance were: Mary Ellen Henning Poe and her husband, Dale; Tom Persing and his wife Marie; Allan Walburn and wife Lois; George Schell and wife Becky Ellis Schell; John Sibley and wife Charlotte; Mollie Haas Harter and husband Dick Harter; Reida Rohrbach Scott and husband John Scott; George Derk and wife Vera; DePalma Student Orthopaedic Award, Lindbach Faculty Award for Outstanding Student, and the Lange Publications Award. He received the Thomas G. Simonton Award for Outstanding Resident at the Pittsburgh Academy of Medicine in 1973. The following year he was awarded a North American Traveling Fellowship by the American and Canadian Orthopaedic Association. The Western Pennsylvania Track Council presented him with its Service Award in 1978, and the Children's Hospital of Pittsburgh gave him the Outstanding Teaching Award for his work in pediatric orthopaedics in 1979.

Dr. Stanitski and his wife, Kufhryn, are the parents of four children: Michael, Ann, John and Kate. Their home is in Pittsburgh.

Conrad L. Stanitski, Ph.D., executive assistant to the president of Franklin and Marshall College in Lancaster, assumed his current position on August 1. During the 1984-1985 academic year, Dr. Stanitski was on leave from Randolph-Macon College in Ashland, Va., where he was a professor of chemistry, to serve as an American Council on Education Fellow in Academic Administration at Franklin and Marshall.

In commenting on the appointment, F&M's president, Dr. James L. Powell, said "I have the highest regard for him as a professional and as a person. It will be important to have one of his caliber representing my office as I travel increasingly on behalf of the College."

A Shamokin native, Dr. Stanitski earned a Bachelor of Science degree in science education at Bloomsburg in 1960. He subsequently received a Master of Arts degree in science education (chemistry emphasis) at the University of Northern Iowa (1964) and a Ph.D. in inorganic chemistry (minor in analytical chemistry) at the University of Connecticut at Storrs (1971). He also took six graduate credits in chemistry at the University of Pennsylvania in 1962.

His teaching career began at Lower Dauphin High School in Hummelstown, where he taught chemistry and coached basketball and track from 1960 to 1963. After a year in graduate school, he taught at Goshen (N.Y.) Central School for one year. From 1965 to 1967 he was an instructor of physical science, chemistry, and methods of teaching in secondary school science at Edinboro State College.

From 1967 to 1971, Dr. Stanitski was at the University of Connecticut in Storrs, first as a teaching fellow in honors chemistry and then as a NASA pre-doctoral fellow. After receiving his Ph.D. in 1971, he joined the faculty of Georgia State University in Atlanta as an assistant professor of chemistry in the School of Urban Life. He was also coordinator of chemistry for nursing and allied health students and advisor to Ed.D. and MAT candidates.

During the 1975-1976 academic year, Dr. Stanitski was an associate professor of chemistry at Kennesaw College in Marietta, Ga. The following year he joined the faculty of Randolph-Macon College, where he was chair of the chemistry department from 1978 to 1984. He has been director of general chemistry since 1976. He has also been extremely active on several important standing committees.

During the summer of 1981, he was an invited professor of chemistry at Dartmouth College in Hanover, N.H. In addition, he has presented papers at several national meetings of the American Chemical Society and at numerous other conferences throughout the country. In March 1984 he was an invited lecturer in France at the Universities of Lille, Toulouse, Poitiers and Paris.

Dr. Stanitski has been involved in a number of research-directed or research-assisted projects and has written or co-authored at least 12 abstracts, articles and papers. He has also co-authored seven textbooks.

He is a member of the American Chemical Society, Society of the Sigma Xi, American Association for the Advancement of Science, Phi Sigma Pi honorary education society, Phi Lambda Upsilon honorary chemistry society, Omicron Delta Kappa honorary leadership society, and the American Association of Higher Education.

He has received numerous awards and honors, including the Samuel Nelson Gray Distinguished Professor Award at Randolph-Macon (1983), the Thomas R. Branch Award for Teaching Excellence at Randolph-Macon (1977), the Gustav Ohaus-National Science Teachers Association Award for Creative Innovations in College Science Teaching (1973), Outstanding Young Men of America (1972), American Men of Science (1972), and Who's Who in the South and Southwest (1975).

The Stanitskis are the parents of two daughters, Susan and Beth, and their new home is at 705 Scarsdale Circle, Lancaster, Pa.

Richard S. Benyo, a native of Jim Thorpe, is the first recipient of the "Young Alumnus of the Year" award.

The award was created to recognize alumni under the age of 40 who have demonstrated potential and promise in their respective profession. Also considered are professional achievements to date, outstanding service to the university, and/or contributions to mankind.

Benyo's successful writing career extends back to his years on the student newspaper at Bloomsburg University. Beginning as a feature writer, he advanced to feature editor and then editor-in-chief prior to graduation. Benyo received his B.A. degree in English literature in 1968 and then accepted the position of managing editor of the Times-News in Lehigh, Pa. He served in that capacity until 1972. During that same time period (1969-1972), he also was program director for PTV-TV in Palmerton.

Meanwhile, Benyo's interest in auto racing was growing, not only as a writer, but as a driver. In 1972 he moved to Alexandria, Va., to become editor of STOCK CAR RACING magazine. While covering the NASCAR circuit during the next five years, he also wrote his first book, THE GRAND NATIONAL STARS, followed by THE BOOK OF RICHARD PETTY in 1976, and SUPERSPEEDWAY in 1977.

An interest in running which began as a cross country runner at Bloomsburg led to a new job in 1977. Through another car racing writer, he learned of a position on the staff of RUNNER'S WORLD magazine. He won the job and subsequently moved through the ranks to become executive editor of the magazine which has a large international readership.

First-hand experience in physical fitness and running marathons resulted in four books: RETURN TO RUNNING (1978), THE INDOOR EXERCISE BOOK (1980), THE ADVANCED INDOOR EXERCISE BOOK (1981) and SEXERCISE (1982).

Then last fall, Benyo decided it was time for a change: "(After) seven and a half years as an executive in a magazine conglomerate where I've annually been kicked farther and farther upstairs until I was more MBA than journalist, I resigned my position on November 30 in order to dive deeply into writing and journalism, where my heart dwells. The move has been coming for the past several years, and although for a year or two I won't be making anywhere as much money, I suspect that once I get rolling, I'll be okay. At least I'll be doing what I was trained for at BSC."

A book that Benyo has written with Elaine LaLanne (Jack's wife) will be published by The Stephen Greene Press and will be distributed by Viking. He's also co-authoring a book on fit lifestyles for people reaching 40 which will be published by Atheneum next year. He is also under contract with The Stephen Greene Press to do a book on how to train for and run your first marathon. In addition, he is working with AMERICAN HEALTH magazine on an on-going basis and is doing occasional work for POPULAR COMPUTING magazine. At the same time, he is working with SAN FRANCISCO FOCUS magazine to put together a Silicon Valley edition, something rather revolutionary for the typical city magazine.

For the national stature he has gained as a writer and editor, and for his creative promise and potential, Benyo was recognized as the first recipient of the Young Alumnus of the Year Award.

CAPTAINS' REUNION — The Class of 1935 apparently had some healthy athletes. Included among the record number of men (20) attending the 50-year reunion on Alumni Weekend were four team captains (from left) Jack Beck, baseball; Charlie Blackburn, basketball; Gerald Doc Harter, football; and Francis Doc Sell, track.

Mary Anne (Majikas) Klemkosky '59 was honored as "Outstanding Woman of the Year" by the Schuylkill Branch of the American Association of University Women at a dinner meeting held at the Pottsville Club on June 20.

Selected by the membership, the "Outstanding Woman" award is presented to a member of the branch who has provided notable service to the branch, the community, and/or her profession.

Mrs. Klemkosky is currently chairperson of the Business Education Department at Pottsville High School. She studied both as an undergraduate and as a graduate student at Bloomsburg University and holds a master's degree in education. In addition she has attended many educational seminars and workshops related to business education.

Besides her professional responsibilities, Mrs. Klemkosky is active in numerous civic and social organizations and currently serves as vice president of the Alumni Association of Bloomsburg University and as legislative chairperson of the Pennsylvania Business Education Association.

As a member of the Schuylkill Branch of AAUW for nine years, she has served in the past as recording secretary, legislative chair, and editor of the branch bulletin, The Scoop.

Mrs. Klemkosky was born and raised in Girardville. She is married to Ronald R. Klemkosky '67 and lives at R.D. 2 Box 2056, Orwigsburg, PA 17961 with her husband and two sons, Gregory and Mark.

SID wins awards

The following article about Jim Hollister '78 was written by Gary Smith for the Press-Enterprise, Bloomsburg.

Reclining back at his desk browsing over the morning paper, BU sports information director Jim Hollister said it was nice to be recognized by his peers as the best in the nation.

Hollister, completing his fifth year as Bloomsburg's SID, was awarded three citations for excellence at this year's conference of the College Sports Information Directors of America in Boston.

The certificates were given to Hollister for his work on the women's swimming and men's tennis brochures and the men's basketball poster put out by his office.

The two brochures and poster were selected as best in the nation against publications from other NCAA Division II and NAIA Division I schools.

"It's nice to be recognized by your peers," Hollister said. "Judging was done on content, layout, how it looks and the use of color. It was a nice honor for me and the students, especially since we are working on a somewhat limited budget."

The cost for printing the brochures was footed by the BU Community Government Association, Hollister said. "We don't have the money like some of the big schools to just go out and print the brochures."

Hollister, who also spoke at the convention on the topic of working with a limited budget, put together a package of six brochures and three posters of sports teams at BU.

He did not do all the work alone, however, as he was assisted by three undergraduate students — Jerry Ganz, Mike Albright, and Troy Sellers.

The winning poster, "A Winning Tradition," featured a schedule of the 1984-1985 basketball season and photographs of various Husky teams throughout the years, including the school's very first basketball team.

"I liked the way that it came out, with the idea behind it being 'A winning tradition.' With the posters, we try to provide a schedule while at the same time promoting the programs."

These were not the first awards Hollister has received. Since starting in August of 1980, Hollister has won 12 awards for similar publications. Seven of those awards were for being the best in the nation.

"It's nice to get a little recognition for the office," he said. "We do put in a lot of time preparing these things, and to be named the best among the other SID's is nice."

"It also gave us the opportunity to be recognized within the national organization because our brochures were on display at the convention."

While an undergraduate at BU, Hollister played tennis and gained All-America status.

Carison, assistant vice president for academic affairs.

BU grand champ

During the Pennsylvania Hall of Fame Champions for Older Workers competition held in Harrisburg recently, Bloomsburg University was named grand champion for its role in gaining national publicity for America's older workers in a special television documentary, "Rural America: Coming of Age."

Narrated by veteran actor Lorne Greene, the film was aired nationwide on PBS-TV in preparation for the White House Conference on Aging. The film explored five major problems as identified by the nation's older rural citizens: employment, energy, health, housing and transportation. To acknowledge the value of the film, the university was awarded a bronze medal by the International Film and Television Festival of New York. Competing with over 4,000 entries from 30 different countries, only 10 percent won awards.

According to Orville Carver, state director of the Pennsylvania Green Thumb Program and co-chairman of the event, the award was "warranted because of Bloomsburg's commitment and efforts to further the goals of senior employment and to work diligently toward mainstreaming senior citizens into the work force."

The university began a partnership with Green Thumb in 1978. Through this program, funded by the U.S. Department of Labor and sponsored by the National Farmers Union, the university has provided temporary part-time employment to about 75 low-income older workers who have experienced difficulty in locating employment in the private sector.

BU was also cited for its role in a disaster training program to provide a strike force of older citizens to be of assistance in times of disaster. Pilot tested in Columbia County, with the aid of the local Red Cross agency, the program is being considered for nationwide implementation.

To further the publicity about the nation's older workers, the university also arranged for the "Over Easy" television program, hosted by Hugh Downs, to air a segment about Title V of the Older Americans Act (Senior Community Services Employment Program). The program has been aired eight times on PBS television.

The university was nominated as a Champion for Older Workers by the Pennsylvania Farmers Union, and the award was presented by the American Legion.

BU's project, one of the largest in the state, is directed by Peggy Bailey in the Development Office.

'MS Father of Year' named

The following article about George Cook '67 was written by Peggy Schmidt for the Sunday News, Lancaster.

Five years ago, when George Cook was told he had multiple sclerosis, he was glad to hear it.

An unusual reaction, perhaps, but Cook explained that the symptoms he'd been experiencing were suspected to be the result of a brain tumor.

"When you think you have a brain tumor, you think you've had it. With MS, you can live a fairly normal, or at least a productive life. Under the circumstances, MS was . . . easier to take."

Because of his positive attitude and his ability to "project cheer and sunshine with his lite-style," Cook has been named MS Father of the Year for 1985 by the Lancaster County Chapter, National Multiple Sclerosis Society.

A resident of Stevens R. D. 2, Cook is employed as a teacher of business subjects at Ephrata Area High School. He "carpools" to work, he said, although he no longer takes his turn at driving.

Smiling, he said, "I can drive. I don't. MS cuts down on reaction time and, for me, it's not at a safe level. I think the guys in the car pool got nervous when I drove!"

Confined to a wheelchair, he claimed the chair is "no problem at school." Because state law provides for an elevator in the school for students who are handicapped, he is able to travel from one level to another. He has had to adjust to the fact that he must sit during classes, which was not his custom, he said.

"I don't particularly enjoy sitting down all the time. I liked to move around a little bit — and it presents a few problems like swelling of the feet.

"But it's a good group of kids in Ephrata," he continued. "I think the students are great. A problem like this is a little hard to accept . . . teenagers have a neat way of handling it."

When he was first diagnosed, Cook decided to "keep his mouth shut" about his problem. "But a couple years ago, I thought I'd tell it all . . . I have MS. And the kids treat me no differently than anyone else, no greater or no worse. I think I'm in the right profession if you have MS."

In fact, the students at EAHS have treated Cook differently, in a sense. According to Jere Scott, executive director of the Lancaster MS Society, "The students are so impressed with George's courage and determination that they sponsor a Type-a-Thon periodically, on behalf of George, for our chapter."

In addition, the teachers and students once raised $5,000 so Cook might avail himself of an experimental mode of treatment designed to retard the progression of his illness.

"Everybody — students and teachers — knew I have MS," Cook said, "and they wanted to do something. They are wonderful . . . It's a real tear-jerker, I'll tell ya!"

It helps his own situation, he noted, that his wife, Karlene, is a nurse and is very supportive. His two daughters, Allssa, 15, and Carrie, 12, "are great. They help, if Dad needs his shoes tied or his shirt buttoned. And they pack lunches — they take care of that."

The teacher said he was vacationing in 1979 when he realized there was, indeed, something wrong with his health. He had noticed fatigue and numbness in the fingers, legs and face, and while walking on the beach, his wife noticed his gait was faulty.

"It's very difficult for a person to walk on the beach," he said. "You're on an incline, and the surface gives — and I walked a little crooked!"

After a full neurological work-up and numerous tests, the diagnosis of MS was made. MS is caused by the breakdown of the myelin, the fatty sheath that covers the nerve fibers of the brain and spinal cord. Symptoms included, but are not limited to, visual problems, fatigue, dizziness, weakness and lack of balance.

Because Cook has what he called a progressive form of the disease, he said the treatments he seeks are those that will retard progression. "Sometimes it works, and sometimes it doesn't."

The latest of the treatments he has used is a form of chemotherapy. "I don't think it worked that well," he said, "but they say sometimes it takes several months."

Cook said that when he was diagnosed as having MS, he began immediately reading and securing any information he could find about the disorder, starting with the materials available at the Lancaster Chapter office. His nomination by the chapter for MS Father of the Year was "a pleasant surprise. It's a very nice honor."

Jan competes in Rome

The following article about Jan Prosseda '66 was written by Bob Black for the Patriot-News, Harrisburg.

When Jan Prosseda travels to Rome next week, he will be accompanied by a fistful of addresses of friends and relatives his family would like him to visit.

But, despite the trip to a site 50 miles south of his grandfather's birthplace, Prosseda's visit to Rome is not a social call.

The 41-year-old Harrisburg resident will be going to Rome to compete in the World Masters Track and Field Championships from June 25-30. He will be leaving Harrisburg Sunday.

Prosseda, who will compete in the 5,000-meter run on June 25th and the 3,000-meter steeple chase on June 27th, says this will be his last competitive race.

The meet will be held in Olympic Stadium, site of the 1960 Rome Olympics, and is for athletes 40 and older.

With more than 50 nations competing, some of the former Olympians and world record holders include Peter Snell of New Zealand and Al Oerter, Ed Burke, John Carlos, Parry O'Brien, Willie Davenport, Bob Richards, Thane Baker, Josh Culbreath, Boo Morcom and Earl Young.

A graduate of Milton High School in 1961, where he lettered in five different sports, Prosseda was a state college record holder in the one and two-mile runs and set a course record while winning the 1964 state college cross country run at Bloomsburg.

But, after finishing up at Bloomsburg, Prosseda left that area and a rigorous training program and became sedentary for the next 12 years.

In 1977, however, he was talked into entering the Harrisburg Marathon, and within four years was doing the same things he had done in high school and college — winning races.

By 1983 and 1984 he had set national age group racing records — 4:24 in the mile and 9:21 in the two mile.

Last August he received All-America status by placing second in the 3,000-meter steeple chase in the National Masters in Eugene, Oregon.

Prosseda, who teaches business courses at the Harrisburg Steelton-Highspire Vo-Tech, runs three times a day, lifts weights, swims and keeps himself in the kind of shape it takes to compete in a national track and field event.

According to Prosseda, however, he is concerned about his condition for going to Rome.

"This year I ran three times a day instead of the usual two and increased my lifting weight," he said. "Unfortunately, because of the increase in my training, I'm afraid I've overtrained and lost leg speed."

One of the reasons Prosseda is getting out of the competitive world following the meet in Rome is a personal change in philosophy.

"There is nothing as fulfilling as winning when you have worked very hard for it," he said. "But right now the cost benefit is way out of proportion for me. My priorities and ideals have changed.

"I feel athletes are over-valued, just like movie stars, rock stars and other celebrities."

But, although Prosseda says he is unwilling to take the time and effort it takes to continue training for events such as the world championships in Rome, he has no second thoughts about the amount of time he has spent concentrating on that trip.

"I've trained this whole year strictly preparing for Rome, hoping the desire to win will help me," he said. "I would never forgive myself if I didn't go out and give it my best effort."

Although Prosseda will give his all in the Rome meet, he realistically concedes that a high finish isn't likely, due to the class of competition.

"I'll be going against guys who have dedicated years of hard work into getting ready for meets such as this," he said. "I can't put myself in that same category.

"I feel good about the amount of time and effort I've put into running and attempting to stay physically fit, and when the meet is over I'll continue to run for fitness. I just won't do it competitively."

And, when the meet in Rome is over, he will spend some time visiting in Italy, which is something he couldn't have done without making the trip to compete in the World Masters competition.

So how did Jan do at Rome? We received the following letter from Jan after he returned home:

"Italy was great, but the racing was a Three Stooges Act: In the 5,000-meter race, I had run a time of 15:04 which would have placed fifth in this world championship. I was kicked in the ankle on the first turn and didn't run as well as I could have and finished seventh in my heat. I don't know my overall place. There were 100 entries in the race.

"In the 3,000-meter steeplechase, I was the only American qualifier in the race and had run a time that would have placed in the top ten. At the second barrier, the runner in front of me fell on the barrier and I had to dive over him. On the next lap, my shoe came off after clearing the same barrier. Two laps later my toenail caught on the stitching in my shoe and was ripped up. (The reason for my shoe coming off and my toenail catching was that my shoes expanded after becoming wet from the water in the jumps pit.) I had to land on the barrier and the track with the same foot (like hopscotch). I was 26th out of about 50.

"It's not the ending that I would have written to my competitive career, but I have had so many good things happen that I can't let it bother me. I never lost a dual meet in high school or college (76-0), had state records in the one and two-mile runs and cross-country, qualified for the Olympic Trials, was All-American and beyond college I was Harrisburg Runner of the Year, set three national age group records, was All-American Master, and ranked fifth in the world.

"I was second in National Collegiate Championships in college because I had no one there to advise me, and I carried the thought that I had failed for many years after. It's foolish. I ran the best race I could run then, and I ran the best races I could in Rome. I trained as hard as I could over all the years that I was involved in running. Why count the negatives?

"I don't like pressure, pain or being nervous. That's why I'm retiring from competitive running. I'll still run five miles a day — which is fun, but running 20 one-quarter mile sprints or ten half-mile sprints with a 100-yard jog between isn't.

"While in Rome, I saw the Pope, visited Venice, Florence, the Isle of Capri and my relatives — which was the best part of the trip. They didn't know me from Adam, but treated me like a son."

FRANK RADICE

Frank Radice retires

(The following story was written by Denise Werner and edited by Debbie Barnes.)

BU's most senior professor is about to turn in his cap and gown for the last time.

For Dr. Frank Radice, professor of finance and business law, this month's commencement will be his last as a university professor.

Not only has Radice taught here for 28 years, he also matriculated here for four years, receiving his bachelor of science degree in business education. He also holds a master of arts and a doctorate in business law at Pennsylvania State University.

Throughout his years at BU, Radice has seen a lot of changes take place. "When I first came to work here in 1957, it was primarily a state teachers' college. Three years later, it became an all-purpose school, though we still mainly trained teachers for the Commonwealth. Today, there are so many different degrees that we never thought would be here. This is the best change we've made."

Radice recalls the formality of the '50s when faculty dressed semi-formally and class attendance was essential to passing grades.

"We also had compulsory attendance at assembly twice a week," he recalls. "Dr. Harvey Andruss, the college president, read the announcements, and attendance was taken. Andruss was a formal president. I guess you might call him autocratic, but very effective. It worked for him, as did the other rules, because it was all so relative to the times. When the country was more conservative, so was the college."

Dr. Robert Nossen became president in 1969 during the latter Vietnam era and there was some unrest on the campus. "We had some protests," Radice says, "but not many. I think that's mostly because our students come from hard-working, professional families and their education was primary. We had a good cross-section of students, so we didn't have many rebels. That's one thing that hasn't changed."

From the late '60s to '70s, Bloomsburg had a tremendous period of building growth. Radice got involved on the committee to name some buildings. "My favorite is the Kehr (pronounced care) Union Building." It was named for Dr. Marguerite Kehr, dean of women for many years. "She was a real friend to the women on campus - a real jewel of a lady," he recalls.

"My other favorite name is Centennial Gym because it was built during the 100th anniversary of the college," Radice notes.

When it comes to the business department, Radice feels the department has gone through many changes. "The business department has been good since about 1930.

Many of our graduates went on to become Certified Public Accountants and are now working at 'Big Eight' firms, and a number have gone on to law school.

"In 1960, we started a master's program for business education. In 1969 we added business administration. Today the departments have evolved into the College of Business."

With all the changes that he has seen, the most recent is from state college to university. "I like the change. It sounds broader and more prestigious. In addition, there is more unity. We have our own chancellor, which means we can control our destiny."

From his college days through today, he will no longer be the professor who has been around the longest. After this summer, Frank Radice is retiring.

"There are four things I really want to do when I retire - update my book TODAY'S BUSINESS LAW, read, travel and fish. Regrettably, I sold my boat a few years ago, but I kept my engine. With teaching, I haven't had much time to use it, but let's just say I'm keeping it oiled."

Zimmermans enjoy BU Elderhostel

The following article about Ray and Dorothy Zimmerman '39 was written by Susan Brook for the Press-Enterprise, Bloomsburg.

It wasn't that old college tie that brought graduates Ray and Dorothy Zimmerman, Class of 1939, back to Bloomsburg University for an update on their college educations.

"No, we just wanted a course in Introduction to Computer Science," said Ray, a retired school administrator from the Bethesda-Chevy Chase, Md., district. "We're just trying to keep the world from going by."

"But being at a familiar college didn't hurt," added wife Dorothy, a former school teacher.

The two are only the second Bloomsburg University alumni couple included in the 700 older students who have participated in the Elderhostel program over its five years, said program coordinator George Turner.

This summer, five Elderhostel sessions were sponsored at Bloomsburg, with 200 enrolled. Most of the students come from the New York area, said Turner.

Coming back is quite a surprise, said the two retired educators.

"Well, it's a big university now. Then it was a small college," said Ray. "Now there are all kinds of groups here" using the campus for the summer, said Dorothy.

Dorothy grew up on Market Street in Bloomsburg. Her father, the late John Calvin Engelhart, was a supervisor at Magee Carpet. The couple came back here for visits until 1975, when her late sister, Beatrice, retired from the BU faculty.

As a student, Ray commuted from his home in Nuremberg and was president of the Day Men's Association during his senior year.

This time around, the Zimmermans received their first taste of dormitory life, which suits them fine. "Of course, we were both day students, so we can't compare," said Dorothy.

They have had such a good time in their classes and in afternoon trips to a coal mine and Centralia that they've vowed to enroll in more sessions.

"We just got rid of our summer cottage in Delaware, so we'll have more freedom to travel and take more of these courses," said Ray.

The two, who were members of the school's 100th anniversary class, said the campus has undergone radical changes since their graduation. Only three buildings — Carver Hall, Old Science Hall and Benjamin Franklin — were standing when they were students.

The Zimmermans have enjoyed their renewed taste of the classroom, and they gave a rating of "excellent" to all of their professors: James Sperry, William Sproule, Martin Gildea and Harold Bailey.

They may have been lured here by computers, but said they found courses in Response to the Holocaust, the American Presidency, and physical fitness equally fascinating.

Probation officer takes Denver job

The following article about Michele Melnick Murphy '83 was written by Vince Piscopo for the Press-Enterprise, Bloomsburg.

Put a new Murphy's Law on the books. "Things could be worse" is what Montour County Chief Probation Officer Michele "Micki" Murphy tells those who come under her jurisdiction.

Murphy, 23, left her post on June 28 to take on a new challenge in Denver. With her resignation, Montour County lost the first female chief probation officer in the state and probably the youngest in the country.

"I love my work, and I think I've helped to turn this office around," she said. "Our whole concept is to keep people out of jail. That's my attitude, anyway."

When she joined the office in January 1984 she thinks many of the people on probation may have wondered, "What's this little girl going to do for me?"

"I don't come off with a big whip and chain thing. I'm willing to help you with anything."

But she added, "I've used (hand) cuffs many times, and I'm not afraid to do it."

"The bottom line in my job is to protect the community."

Although she concedes there are some people who do not want to be or cannot be helped, she said there are many who have just fallen on hard times. She said she has had clients who have made "miraculous turnarounds." When that happens, the person, not the office, gets the credit."

Murphy was an intern in the office before she graduated from Bloomsburg University in 1983. After a stint as an aerobics teacher and social worker in a New Jersey group home for severely retarded girls, she was hired by Montour County to handle domestic relations enforcement and juvenile probation.

After the chief probation officer resigned last August, Murphy handled all the administrative functions and the juvenile and adult caseloads. This past March she was named acting chief probation officer.

The move to a probation officer's position in Denver represents a chance for Murphy and her husband, Pat '83, a newspaper photographer, to work in a metropolitan environment.

"This is a good move for us," she concluded.

Teacher describes life in Australia

The following article about Linda McCorkie Bates '74 was written by Kathy Good for the Royersford (Pa.) Reporter.

Last Christmas, the temperature in Linda Bates' kitchen registered 106 degrees Fahrenheit before she started cooking. That's the way most Christmases go south of the equator, where December means summertime as well as a visit from Santa.

Life in Australia has been an adjustment, albeit a pleasant one, for Linda. A 32-year-old former Royersford resident, she was home visiting her family along with husband Bob.

They met in 1976 as Linda was finishing a two-year teaching exchange program. Australia had a need for teachers, and Linda, fresh out of Bloomsburg, decided to take the challenge.

School systems in Australia are set up in basically the same manner as the United States. The curriculum contains similar material, although some subject matter may be a bit behind the U.S.

"They pick up things from the United States," Linda explained.

She added that parents play a major role in their children's learning process. They have parents' organizations similar to our parent-teacher association. One mother in particular, Linda remembers, became very involved in what her daughter was learning.

"Her daughter came home speaking with a bit of an American accent," she said, with a new accent of her own. "I was teaching kindergarten children at the time, and they were picking up my accent, and I was picking up theirs. Her mother was concerned about that."

Any other differences lie in the amount of time spent in school. The school year is divided into three terms instead of two, with a six-week break. That vacation time is supplemented with two smaller breaks within the terms.

The rugged countryside that makes up a majority of the land down under was something else to which Linda was not accustomed. Upon her arrival, she said her first impression was one she least expected.

"Once we landed, we had to take the train to our location," she recalled. "The train went through Royal National Park, which is in the outback. All we saw was the brush, so we thought the whole country looked like that."

Fortunately, Linda found that there was more to Australia than tall grass and trees, and she eventually developed a great appreciation for the outdoors. She said the wildlife is "tremendous" and the birds are very colorful.

The government has provided a number of national parks, including some in which the visitors can actually hold the animals. And the kangaroo, of course, is a very popular and interesting creature for the Australians as well as Americans. One of their less commonly known characteristics, according to Bob, is the kangaroo's ability to camouflage itself.

"We went rabbit hunting and I could see the kangaroo," he said, "but Linda couldn't."

"As soon as they moved," Linda added, "it looked like the entire mountain was moving."

Linda and Bob live in Baulkham Hills, a town just outside Sydney. It is located on the southeastern side of Australia, allowing them easy access to both the city and the country. They enjoy hiking and walking, something that Bob was surprised to see very little of here in the United States.

"Australians are more outdoors type people than Americans," he observed. "Everybody walks in Australia."

"Yes," Linda added, "you see old ladies walking to the grocery store, and you know they have cars, but they like to walk."

Something else Australians enjoy are sports. Bob said the most popular are football, played in the winter, and cricket, their summer sport. The style of football played in Australia follows the Scottish version of the game.

There is just one team, and only the person with the ball gets tackled. And without padding, it can become quite a rough activity. Linda and Bob prefer to play a more sportsmanlike game of squash.

Another of the stumbling blocks Linda had to face was the weather. Although a change of seasons is hard to detect, with snow falling mostly in the mountains, the weather can alter drastically during the day. She said the temperature can be 40 degrees Fahrenheit in the morning and reach 70 degrees by the afternoon.

"You learn to wear layers of clothes," Bob said. "Then you just peel them off as the day gets warmer."

A final adjustment Linda had to master was driving. She knew how to drive before she moved to Australia, but not on the left side of the road. That, she said, took a lot of getting used to.

Being a native of Australia, Bob has an interesting outlook on the United States. Australians see Americans as having huge ears. If someone mentions that they live in a three-story house, as Linda did, the Australians think the person must be very wealthy.

Otherwise, Bob said that expenses there are comparable to those in the U.S. He said the country is influenced both by the U.S. and Great Britain, which is most evident in the government. Their legislature consists of a Parliament and a House of Representatives. Queen Elizabeth is still considered the nominal head, but with less importance than in Britain.

Coming back to her native area, Linda remembers the quiet, peaceful, hometown atmosphere of Royersford. Both she and Bob are impressed with the development surrounding the community, most noticeably the expressway and the enlargement of the King of Prussia area. Bob was especially awed by the size of the shopping center, saying that there is nothing to match that in Australia.

Linda and Bob have been married for two and a half years. She is still teaching primary education, but has been unable to obtain a full-time position. She said that with the influx of teachers now, the market is flooded with them, so she fills in different places each term.

Despite all the changes, Linda still accepts this area as her home.

"No matter what," she said, "home is always home."
