Buumps victimize faculty no cure exists at present

by STINKIN' OARLOFF

Recent outbreaks of Buumps, otherwise known as Nogginis fallofficus, have occurred on the Bloomsburg State College campus. At press time the death toll has risen to 57, with the majority of fatalities occurring among BSC faculty. The rare disease is almost always fatal, has no warning symptoms, and no cure exists.

The history of the disease dates back to the days of the 17th century, when Pirates carried the Buumps organism back from exotic ports to European population centers. Once in Europe, the microbe began affecting various villages and towns. The most notorious outbreak occurred in the little German village of Wein-am-Rhine, in 1796. During the course of the epidemic it was discovered by a certain P.D.Q. Bach, a child of the musical genius, Johann Sebastian, that alcohol increases one's resistance to the disease.

Following this discovery, alcohol consumption rose by 35 per cent in Europe. In time the Buumps outbreaks were so few that no one paid any attention to them. Today Buumps accounts for at least 20 per cent of all infant mortalities in underdeveloped countries, such as Biafra, Uganda, and East Stroudsburg. Despite the complete lack of warning signs, there is one major property which sufferers of Buumps exhibit: sloughing off of the head.

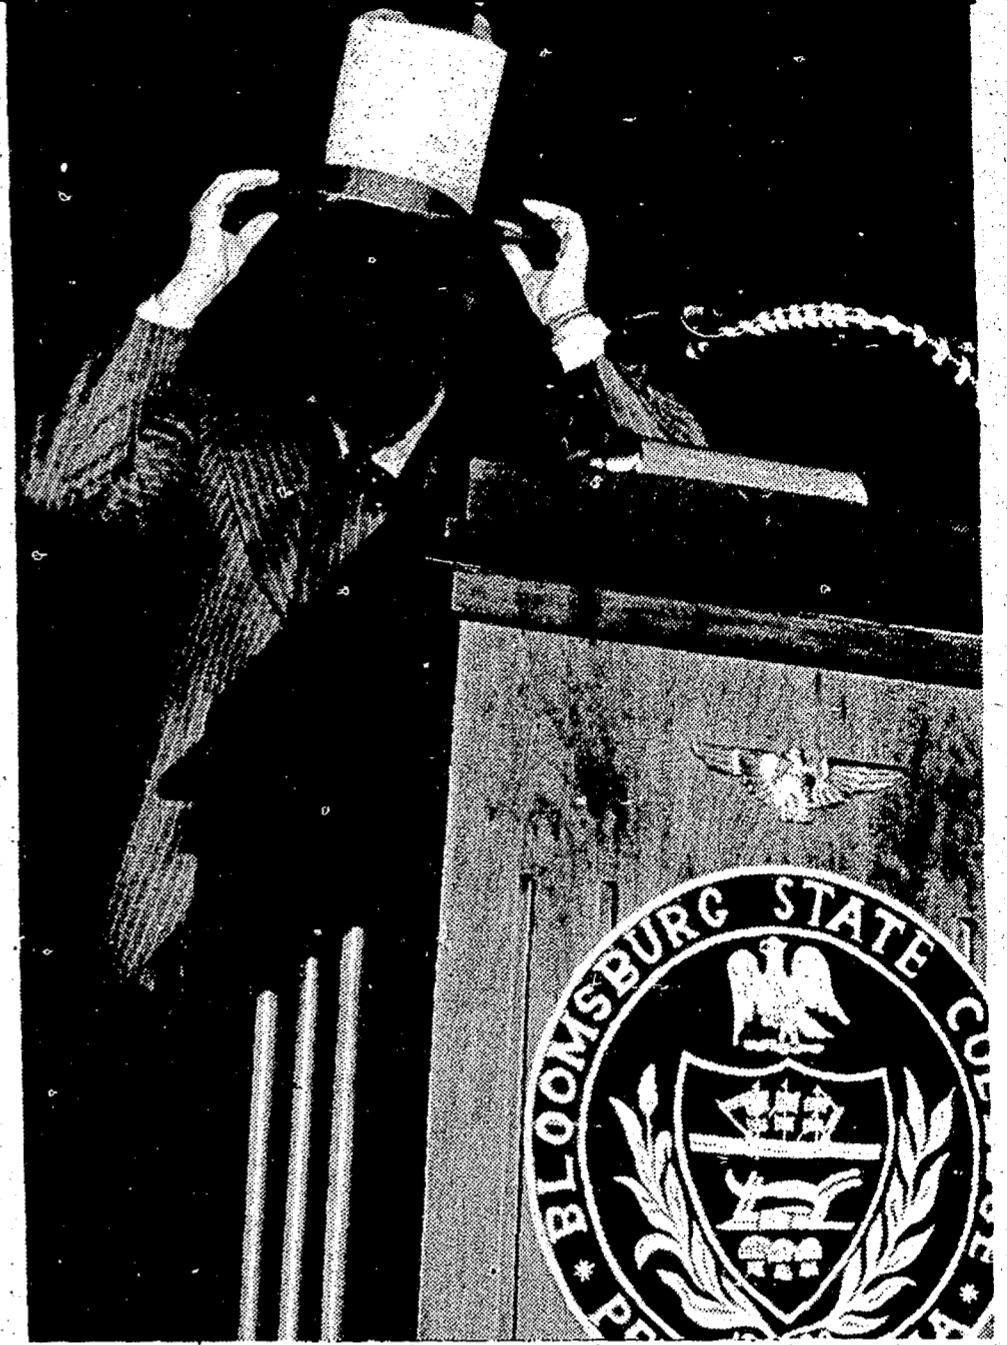

This spontaneous decapitation is due to the fact that the Buumps microbe feeds on the tissue of the brain, and weigh on the average of fifty pounds each. You can imagine the effect that twenty thousand Buump germs would have. The weight of even ten of them would cause heads to roll, so to speak.

Actually, Bump infested heads do not roll. They simply fall, striking the ground with that characteristic "BUUMP". When asked about the Bloomsburg outbreak, U.S. Health Officials were quite dumbfounded.

"We thought that the only modern day victims of Buumps were children and infants, but it only stands to reason that college faculty would be next."

Modern day practices of playing dirty drinking songs in the delivery room, and baptism in beer have greatly reduced the Buump death rate among American and European inants. The BSC epidemic creates a new and challenging problem, however. The official recommendation of the U.S.

Health Service is for everyone to head down to Hesses or the Good Old Days, and tie one on. See you there—BUUMP!

CGA

Nudist colony begins

by JACK FURNACE

At Monday nights CGA meeting, held at Hess's Tavern, the council voted in favor of the Investment Committee project and the Campus Voice-New York Times merger, but denied funding to the BSC football team.

Paul Reardon, Investment Committee Chairperson, approached CGA with a proposal to purchase and renovate a vacant camp located near the BSC campus. Reardon's project involves the formation of a weekend nudist colony with facilities exclusively available to both students and faculty.

Mr. Reardon also emphasized the importance of a rigorous sports program including touch football, handball, and basic instruction in pole valuting. The sports program is designed to relieve the academic and physical frustrations that plague all college students. The initial investment of $564,000 is to be appropriated from the Husky Contingency Fund.

The general council also witnessed a plea from Dale Myers, Executive Editor of the Voice, for $1,783,000 to make possible the merging of his bi-weekly and the widely known N.Y. Times. Myers received the bid, but only after a long discussion by some council members who were more in favor of the Washington Post as the recipient of such a prestigious honor.

CGA denied, by a unanimous decision, to allocate $50 for the purchase of three football helmets and a new pigskin. President Mulhern emphatically urged the general council to be wary of the indiscriminate use of the student's money for worthless proposals such as the football team put forth tonight.

In announcements and discussion it was noted that the Campus Beautification and Landscaping Committee is busy working on the purchase of 25 peyote plants, 15 of which would be used to accent the landscaping work being done around the historic Carver Hall. President McCormick was so delighted by the project that he convinced the committee to plant the remaining 10 in a flower bed close to his study so he could show off the little babies to visiting dignitaries.

Biology Professor Tom Manley, also a member of the committee, through intense research, has developed a man eating mutation of the iguana lizard. In the interview, Manley, acutely obsessed by his discovery, implied that the monsters would be employed as guards to the new peyote plants. CGA is urging students to write letters to the editor to put an end to this man's insane ideas.

Because of a lack of funds the group formerly known as the Overpass Committee is now called the Underpass Committee. The Underpass Committee, working to insure the safe travel of students under Lightstreet Road, is incurring its share of problems.

Due to the lack of a better outlet, the tunnel as planned starts at the cliff above the road and comes out in the morgue of the Bloomsburg Hospital. Matthew Legge, the student in charge of the project, was asked whether he thought the route was feasible, to which Legge replied, "Yes, well, I think that maybe it'll be ok."

Pig vaccination revealed as a capitalist plot

by BILL FOXHOLE

WASHINGTON, Dec. 12 The most recent government rage encouraging people to obtain a Pig flu vaccination was discovered to be a capitalist subversive measure to undermine the people of the United States.

A reliable source told a DAILY MYERS reporter that certain confirmed, capitalist, high government officials, who are now in the custody of the CIA, plotted to end the lives of unpatriotic Americans.

It all began about three years ago during a top secret research project in biological warfare, when a highly dangerous Uranium byproduct escaped into the town of _____, killing several people.

These certain officials decided to capitalize on the occurrence by endowing with a cute name like "Swine Flu", and blowing the whole thing out of proportion, thus scaring avid American patriots into becoming inoculated while the other citizens, and probably commies, did not.

Subsequently, if they had not been nabbed, the Pig germ would have been released into the nations water supplies, thus affecting all those not inoculated with the vaccine. The officials thought this would have a coercing affect on those not afflicted to follow any future government suggestions.

It is not yet known whether some of the germs have been released, so the Department of Health, Education and Welfare in conjunction with Bloomsburg Hospital have listed several symptoms to watch for. Extreme drowsiness followed by insane attempts to commit rape. Those who succeed in resolving their provoked hornies, will seem to think that they are cured. In fact they are, temporarily, but within two weeks the same act will be provoked or their privates will drop off or fall out.

If you are worried about contracting the Pig flu it is suggested that you should immediately be inoculated. You may want to wait until after you enjoy the early symptoms for a while. Do watch out!
