

About the college . . .

The educational program at California State College has come full cycle in the 120-year history of the institution. Having opened as a multi-purpose academy in 1852, the school was chartered as Southwest Normal School in 1865 and continued exclusively as a teacher-preparation institution until 1959 when it again became a multi-purpose college. Today the college continues its leadership in the preparation of Pennsylvania teachers, provides a solid background in Arts and Sciences for students planning professional careers, and affords extensive post-baccal aureate research and study programs in both the Teacher Education and Arts and Sciences divisions.
