Ready for the next challenge

Former South Carolina Aiken student-athlete Meredith Legg faced her greatest challenges after her collegiate career

Meredith Legg left South Carolina Aiken as the record-holder in a number of categories, including career points.

By Chad Laytham

Although the record books might make it seem otherwise, Meredith Legg did face challenges during her time as a standout student-athlete on the South Carolina Aiken basketball team. However, for Legg, the challenges she experienced during her successful four-year collegiate career on the hardwood were nothing compared to the challenges she would be faced with shortly after that career ended.

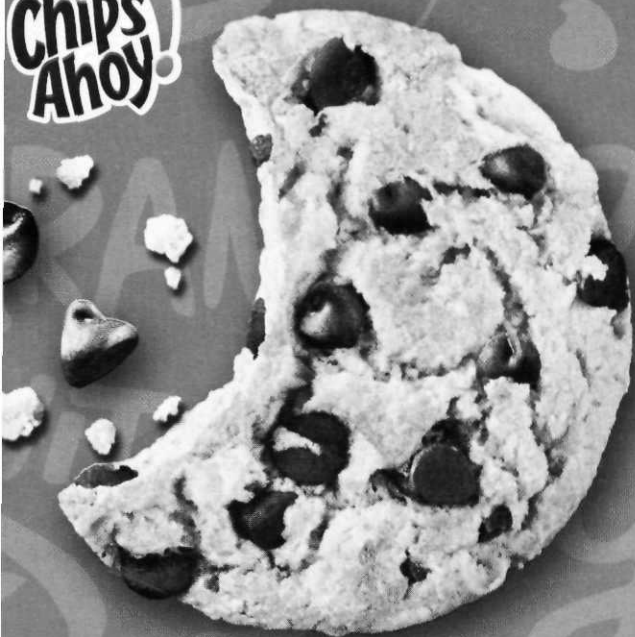

Legg, who is South Carolina Aiken's all-time leading scorer, began experiencing trouble seeing out of her left eye less than a month after her collegiate career ended. In a matter of days, she got the diagnosis that she had ocular melanoma, a rare form of cancer that affects the eye. After undergoing a successful week-long treatment, just more than a year later Legg received more bad news from a routine PET scan: the cancer had now shown up on her liver.

But instead of take on a victim's mentality, Legg has treated this fight against cancer much like she

OVERCOMING CHALLENGES

NCAA Division II Women's Basketball Championship

Since her days as a student-athlete at South Carolina Aiken, Meredith Legg has been active as a girl's basketball coach with Mead Hall Middle School (left), as a speaker at Relay for Life events (middle), and has an award named after her at South Carolina Aiken (The Meredith Legg Inspiration Award, top right).

treated her basketball career — by setting goals and regularly meeting and exceeding them.

Legg decided to play for head coach Mike Brandt in Aiken due in no small part to the fact that she wanted to see action on the court immediately.

"I ended up going to USC Aiken after considering quite a few other Division II and small Division I schools," Legg recalled. "I knew Coach Brandt wanted to get girls in there who wanted a lot of playing time, and I was able to start off my career starting as a freshman, and it just took off from there."

By the time Legg was finished at South Carolina Aiken, she had left her mark on both the Pacer and Peach Belt Conference record books. In addition to the career scoring mark (1,480), Legg holds Pacer records for 3-point field goals made (311) and attempted (764), free-throw percentage (.882) and 3-point field-goal percentage (.407). She holds single-season records for consecutive free throws made (45 to start her career) and 3-point field-goal percentage (.475 in 2006-07). She ended her career holding the Peach Belt Conference records for 3-point field-goals made and attempted, free-throw and 3-point field-goal percentage and most consecutive free throws made, while also tying the conference record for 3-pointers in a game (10 in a 2009 game against Shaw).

The player Brandt recruited was a good scorer, but by the time she was finished, she was much more of an all-around player.

"When she first got here she was a very solid shooter, but as the years progressed she began to incorporate a little defense into her game, became a great rebounder, pretty good passer, became an all-around basketball player," Brandt said. "I was very impressed with the work habits that she had. She was a fantastic player coming in and became even better as she progressed through the years."

According to Legg, it was a matter of setting goals.

"You set personal goals for yourself, but it's really great as your career develops, you're able to surpass those goals, getting to the NCAA tournament, winning conference championships, doing those things with your team that are awesome as well," said Legg, who was named to the Peach Belt Conference All-Academic team after the 2008-09 season. "My playing career was so much fun, it was never work for me. I'm sometimes still shocked at how well I played in college."

But the shock over her success was nothing compared to the shock she got in early April of 2009. What began as vision trouble in her eye would soon reveal itself as something much more serious.

"I wasn't having pain or anything," Legg said. "I woke up one morning, and I could see a shadow in my left eye. I went to my my workout and did my classes that day, but my eye was bloodshot. I went to the school nurse, and they did the vision test, and when I went to close my right eye, my left eye couldn't see my nurse anymore, it was black. She immediately said, 'Oh my gosh, this is not right.'

At first the doctors believed she had a detached retina, but a trip to a retina specialist on April 10 of that year proved otherwise.

"He said it was definitely not a detached retina, you have a growth or a tumor, we're not real sure, and that I needed to go to Philadelphia right away, to the Wills Eye Center.

"By Monday, I had (the) cancer (diagnosis). It happened really quickly."

The two-time all-Peach Belt Conference selection took the news as pretty much anyone getting such news would — she wondered what she might have done to cause this.

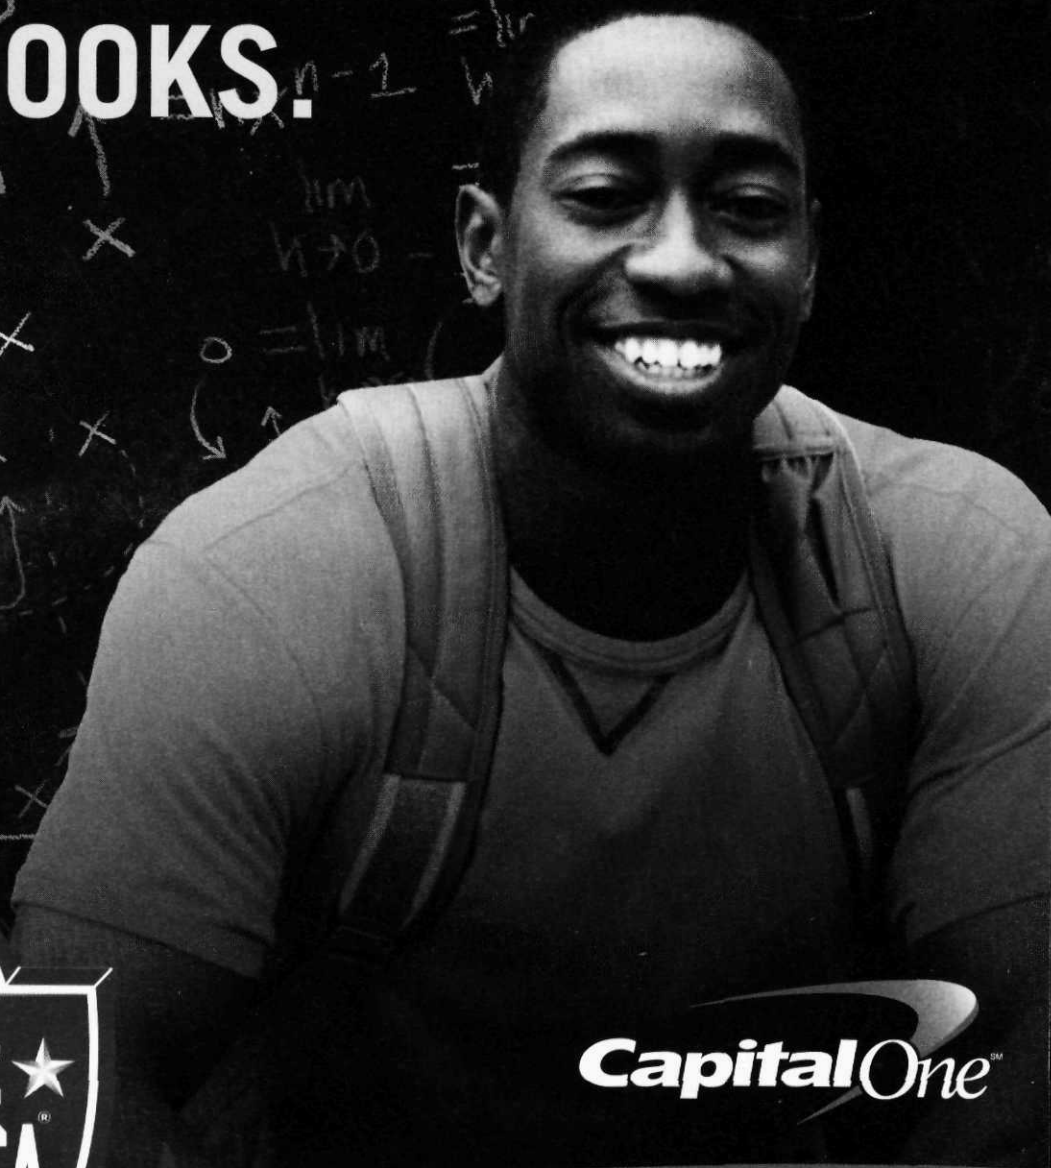

"That was my first question — was this something I've done to myself, I've worn contacts and glasses since high school, did I have an infection or something?," she recalled. "You just never know. You start asking all the questions."

It was a shocking diagnosis for a healthy soon-to-be college graduate.

"You're in the best shape of your life, coming off a successful career," Legg said. "My academics were great, my basketball career had been great, I was just in a really great state of mind. When those words came out of my oncologist's mouth, I was shocked, because I'd just turned 22 years old."

As it turned out, her cancer was a type that is genetic — and the fact that this was out of her control was another tough pill to swallow for someone who was used to finding success on a basketball court.

"They didn't really know how long it had been there," she said. "They do know that the chromosome mutations on my third and sixth chromosome are normally associated with this type of cancer. Sometimes people have this mutation and it never leads to cancer.

"That was the hard thing to deal with at first. You're just born this way; there's nothing you can do to fix it."

But after the initial diagnosis, Legg attacked it much the same way she had prepared for the next opponent or season during her basketball career — by setting goals.

"Being a disciplined athlete, having things in your life that are not always so easy, you do have to work," she said. "College basketball is a job; you're a full-time student and a full-time basketball player. Going into doing my treatments and wanting to get well, I'd had a few injuries in college, so I knew I just needed to take my doctor's advice and just do whatever they said and work my hardest.

"I set goals; I wanted to get back for my college graduation, and I got to do that. You just get up every day and do what they ask you to do and hope for the best."

Legg did indeed manage to graduate on time in May of 2009, and it seemed like she had held the cancer — which affects only one eye, and is not known to "spread" to the other eye — at bay after her initial bout with it. However, in May of 2010 came more bad news.

"There's a 50 percent chance that it's going to spread and a 50 percent chance that it's not," she said. "I would go and get scans every four months, PET scans, CT scans, MRI, and everything was clear until May of 2010, and they found a few lesions on my liver."

What has occurred over the last few years for Legg is a regular regimen of varying kinds of treatment under the care of Dr. Takami Sato at the Thomas Jefferson University Hospital in Philadelphia. Since her cancer is a rare form — approximately six in every one million people will get it — there isn't a set course for treatment.

"It's really complex procedures that they do, because they really don't have a cure," she said. "Everything they do is experimental."

In addition, Legg is far from the stereotypical victim of the disease.

"Men generally get it when they're 55 years old or older, and if they have fair skin and blue eyes," she said. "I have brown hair and brown eyes, I'm female and young. I'm just not the cookie-cutter patient for this type of cancer."

The cancer again seemed to have been held in check until February of last year, when it showed signs of advancing again, leading to 12 straight treatments, one every four weeks. After her checkup in December 2011, it was decided she would get "time off" until February 2012, after her induction into the South Carolina Aiken Athletics Hall of Fame in mid-February.

Obviously, Legg is fighting the cancer for her own well-being, but she also sees another value in her fight. While some might see her as a bit of a guinea pig due to all the varying types of treatments she's receiving, she doesn't mind.

"I'm OK with that, because my body has responded well to the treatments," she said. "I do want to be a breakthrough for other patients who have this kind of cancer. I tell (the doctors) all the time, 'If you want to try this, or talk about this type of drug, change my doses, go ahead.' They know what they're doing, they only deal with this type of patient, I really trust them completely."

She also has taken her message to others in trying to raise awareness for melanoma.

"I've done a YouTube video called 'Dear 16-year-old Me,'" she said. "That's gotten huge attention, they've done it in five or six different languages. That just kind of got the ball rolling."

Legg also does a lot of speaking engagements, including one as the keynote speaker for the Relay for Life Survivors' Dinner and one in Toronto last January to promote melanoma awareness for young people.

Not surprisingly, Legg has involved her alma mater in the awareness campaign, as the basketball team hosts a "Black Out" night each season.

"I do the Black Out night because I want to raise awareness for all people who have ever had melanoma, those who have passed away from melanoma," she said. "We just use USC Aiken basketball to promote awareness."

The 2007-08 CoSIDA/ESPN The Magazine Academic All-District Three team member is employed at URS Corporation as a financial analyst in the government compliance department. In her spare time she has taken an active role as a girl's head basketball coach, leading the Mead Hall Middle School team in Aiken to a championship last year and again in late January of this year, and also coaching the Aiken Elite AAU girl's basketball team during the summers.

Legg continues to have a positive influence on South Carolina Aiken basketball even three years after graduating, according to Brandt.

"She's been a fixture in our program and a great representative not only in the years in which she played, but afterwards," he said. "We're very fortunate to have her around, having her working locally here. We've been able to watch her prosper, not only being able to fight through this cancer ordeal, but besides that in her work and in the coaching aspect.

"She's just a great representative of our program, and we're very pleased to have her around here. She does a great job in all aspects of her life, she's very positive, and I think it's important for our new players coming in here seeing someone like that, see the attitude and work ethic in spite of all the difficulties she's had to overcome."

With her active lifestyle despite the fact that she's battling cancer, Legg understands sometimes people have trouble realizing just how serious her form of cancer is.

"Some people are like, 'Should we still be praying for you?,' and I'm like, 'Absolutely, I'm still getting treated,'" she said. "That's why I always am out trying to speak to groups, reiterating the fact that I'm sick — but thanks for telling me I look healthy."

As for her long-term prognosis, Legg doesn't get caught up in looking too far down the road at such things.

"Generally we don't talk about it; it's not about being scared," she said. "They just don't have a lot of cases, there's not a lot of experiments and research being done on it because it is so rare.

"Survival rates and percentages are all based on people who are older. So they don't really know what to tell."

In the meantime, Legg is going to keep getting her message out to people any way she can.

"The best thing I can do is get out there and tell people that there is hope," she said. "Just because you have cancer, your life doesn't stop.

"You need to get your eyes and skin checked, no matter how old you are. Some people are like, 'I'll just get it checked next year.' I just want to tell people, 'hey, I was in the best shape of my life when I was diagnosed.' It doesn't matter. I try to get out there as much as I can and tell people that."

NCAA Division II Women's Basketball Championship

Showdown in Fargo

Delta State and North Dakota State title game matchup from 21 years ago still stands out

Delta State's Leslie McKiernon (33) and Shelly Murrell (44) got the best of North Dakota State's Nadine Schmidt (14) on this night.

By John Stegeman

The last 10 years have seen just one school reach the NCAA Division II Women's Basketball Championship game more than once.

Twenty years ago, however, a pair of teams that would each claim numerous titles in short periods faced off in a championship contest in Fargo, North Dakota, that still stands as the second-highest attended NCAA Division II women's final of all time.

North Dakota State, defending its 1991 championship, faced off with 1989 and '90 champion Delta State in a game that was a battle of dynasties, and it did not disappoint.

The victory that day went to Delta State, but the impact both teams had on the sport goes far beyond any victory or defeat.

Setting the stage

The 1980s were a time of growth for women's collegiate basketball. In 1982 the NCAA held its first Women's Final Four and its first Division II championship.

The early years of NCAA Division II postseason basketball were marked by coach Darlene May's Cal Poly Pomona dynasty, as well as a revolving door of other schools looking to make their marks.

GREAT MOMENTS AND GAMES

NCAA Division II Women's Basketball Championship

The Broncos won the initial title in 1982, and then won again in 1985 and '86, defeating North Dakota State in the latter. Cal Poly Pomona finished as runner-up in 1987, and when the Broncos reached the finals again in 1989, they were still the only team in Division II history to have claimed more than one championship.

On the other side of the court that year was head coach Lloyd Clark and Delta State. Clark was in the sixth of what would become 19 years at the helm of the Lady Statesmen ship. The game was played in Cleveland, Mississippi, home of the Lady Statesmen, and with a convincing score of 88-58, the torch was passed from Cal Poly Pomona to Delta State.

Delta State won again the next year, this time on Cal Poly Pomona's home floor with another definitive win over Bentley, 77-43.

Delta State managed a solid 23-7 record and an appearance in the South regional in 1991, but it seemed that year the torch was about to change hands again.

That year, North Dakota State was coming off five straight 20-win seasons. In 1990 it had been eliminated by rival North Dakota, but the Lady Bison were no strangers to success. Head coach Amy Ruley had led the program to the final in 1986, but the Cal Poly Pomona dynasty wasn't ready to give way then.

In 1991, the Lady Bison defeated Southeast Missouri State in Cape Girardeau, Missouri, to claim their first title with an eye on starting their own dynasty.

The game

On paper, it was hard to pick a favorite. Though Delta State failed to even win the Gulf South Conference in 1992, it boasted a talented lineup led by All-American junior forward Latanya Patty's 20.6 points and 10.8 rebounds per game. Junior Shorlone Crockam averaged 13.7 points and 5.2 assists per contest and sophomore Shelley Murrell averaged more than 10 points per game. The tallest player, 6-foot-3 junior center Leslie McKiernon, averaged 12.9 points and almost eight rebounds per game.

North Dakota State's All-American, 5-foot-10 small forward junior Nadine Schmidt, averaged 14.8 points and 6.3 rebounds per contest. Teammate Jackie Parsley averaged 11.3 points and 1.5 blocks per game. Susan Faus chipped in an average of 10.1 points per game and Jody Buck averaged 10.8 points.

Delta State averaged 80.7 points a game, while allowing 66.4. North Dakota State averaged 81.9 points, while allowing 62.5.

Neither team put on a scoring clinic in the final, a 65-63 victory for the visiting Lady Statesmen. That may have been a result of Clark's game plan.

"In 1991, (North Dakota State) won it in Southeast Missouri State, they beat them in the finals that year and I could see how good they were," Clark said. "That was really the start, to me, of their dynasty. The fact that we beat them in '92 is an amazing feat because they were so good, and they were playing at home. I don't think anyone had done what we did to them and slowed everything down."

North Dakota State had scouted Delta State. The report said the Lady Statesmen were likely to press and play man-to-man all game long. Clark had other plans. Aside from slowing the game down, he had his team play zone.

"We weren't a good three-point shooting team, and that would have helped," Ruley said. "We didn't anticipate seeing that zone. We all kind of felt after that game that it was one of the most miserable performances we had, so I think we all remember it to be much worse."

North Dakota State was burdened by a stomach bug and the pressures of playing at home. Add to that a strong game plan by Clark, and their task was daunting.

The game plan by Delta State head coach Lloyd Clark (right) gave head coach Amy Ruley's North Dakota State team trouble.

The Bison did have one thing on their side, however, a roughly 7,000-to-100 fan-to-fan ratio. North Dakota State had a serious sixth man in the stands.

"It was something that I had always dreamed about," said Schmidt, who scored 12 points in the loss. "There were (more than) 7,000 fans there that night. Home crowd, home floor. You couldn't have asked for a better setup ... and that's how it ended. It turned a dream into a nightmare. It couldn't have been a better crowd, but we had one of our worst shooting nights ever. I contributed to that."

Clark's plan to slow things down worked. At the half, underdog Delta State was beginning to look like a favorite. Their 100 fans, seated just behind their bench, began to seem louder while the other 7,000 faded into the background.

"We could hear our little 100 people there, because we were doing so well and the more they cheered for us the more we wanted to win," said Amy Carroll (now Hudspeth). "It's such an unbelievable experience to be in that position at any given time, and we fed off of them and coach Clark."

The Lady Statesmen led 36-29 at the break, which only increased their confidence.

"I told our kids, the pressure is really on (North Dakota State), because they were the defending national champions," Clark said. "And then they were playing at home too, and the crowd was right there on top of them, and they felt pressure as long as they stayed behind. I told them as long as this game goes along and they're behind, it's going to get tougher and tougher on them."

Late in the half, the Bison mounted a 10-2 run to close the gap to 57-49. Down the final stretch, North Dakota State trailed 63-55 but a putback by Schmidt and a three by Faus made it 63-60 with 15 seconds to play.

A foul sent McKiernon to the line for her fifth and sixth free-throw attempts of the game. She sank both, making the last-second three by Lynette Mund inconsequential.

The free throws pushed McKiernon's scoring total to 29, a career-high that earned her Most Outstanding Player accolades for the tournament. Her final line was 29 points, eight rebounds and three assists. She and Patty each played the full 40 minutes.

"By far it was the best game of my career," said McKiernon (now Jenkins). "It was a game that the crowd was definitely into it. We just were able to block it out and stick with our game plan. I remember scoring the first two points that I scored and after that it was just more of a game. I really don't recall a whole lot. Sometimes they say you get in that zone and you can't get out of it. Lucky for me, that one time just happened to be at the right time."

Buck scored 13 to lead North Dakota State. The Bison shot just 34.5 percent for the game.

"We couldn't get the ball in the ocean that night," Ruley said. "Delta State had a nice team. They were a seasoned team too and had national championships in those years before. Lloyd Clark had done a tremendous job with that program."

The legacy

The legacy of the 1992 game is hard to pin down. It was close, but there was no buzzer-beating defining moment. It involved high-profile teams, both of which were recent champions, but that too would become more common in Division II in the ensuing years.

Rather, what made this contest stand out among others was the atmosphere. When the game was played, it was the highest-attended NCAA Division II women's final of all time. The record stood only three years (North Dakota state drew 7,138 to see the Bison defeat Portland State in '95, also in Fargo, North Dakota) but it showed that Division II women's basketball could be a major draw.

The game was televised on ESPN, via tape delay, but still it helped bring exposure to a sport that has grown by leaps and bounds.

The profile of the teams, and a mix of iconic coaches in the semifinals, helped contribute to the crowd and atmosphere.

"You look at the coaches that were involved in that," said Jeff Schwartz, Director of Athletic Media Relations at North Dakota State. "You had Greg Bruce at Portland State, Barb Stevens at Bentley College and Lloyd Clark at Delta State along with Amy — that was an all-star cast of coaches right there."

Schwartz was the women's sports information director at North Dakota State in 1992, and he's seen the growth of the sport first-hand as the Bison transitioned to Division I in the 2004-05 season.

"You could look at (the 1992 participants) as being the pioneers when you take a look at that group of coaches and the young women who participated at that time," Schwartz said. "All those coaches brought a great deal of class and integrity. That was displayed through the basketball that was exhibited on the court at that time."

Clark and Ruley had storied careers, both winning multiple titles. They concurred that it was one of the more exciting atmospheres they had experienced.

"They fed off of that crowd, and that crowd had their pulse," Clark said. "They were right there on them. They'd start yelling 'Defense, defense,' and you could see them turn it up a notch. We'd watched that against Portland State (in the semifinal)."

"It was tremendous," Ruley said. "With the collection of our team with many of our athletes from around the area and the region, there was a lot of interest. The fact that we were having repeated success, that drew more interest. It really did create an exciting environment for the teams that were competing, just to be able to play in front of an electric charged crowd."

Attendance in more recent years has remained strong, but in the 20 years since, it has rarely approached the level seen in 1992.

North Dakota State was basically playing a home game in the Bison Sports Arena.

"I think it speaks highly of the support that both teams and programs have for their women's athletics," McKiernon said. "They love their Lady Bison, and Delta State, when we won it, we maxed our coliseum out with 4,000-plus in 1989. Our fans truly loved us, and we loved them right back."

The aftermath

The 1992 final was a lot of things, but it wasn't the end of the story for either team.

Delta State's dynasty was winding down, though the team would reach the finals again in 1993. For the Lady Statesmen, 1992 was the pinnacle. They had won three NCAA championships in four seasons.

North Dakota State took the two-point loss as motivation. Day after day in 1993, the Bison remembered what happened in 1992. And they may have had an eye on Delta State, hoping for an unlikely rematch.

They got their rematch in the 1993 final, and they sent Delta State home after a 95-63 victory — they even had the word "revenge" engraved on their championship rings.

The Bison's dynasty would run for a total of five championships; 1991, '93, '94, '95 and '96.

"I think for us (the loss) was a disappointment, but it may have helped in preparation for the next four," said Ruley, who retired from coaching in 2008 and now serves as associate athletic director for development at North Dakota State. "We came back with a lot of intensity having had a taste of victory and defeat. I think it really motivated our team to want to be the best they could every night. And the crazy thing was having the opportunity to beat Delta State in the championship game. It was kind of a dream come true."

Delta State is still awaiting its next berth in the title game, but the memories of that 1992 season will remain with them forever.

"We weren't expected to win it, and we did," Clark said. "The kids just gained confidence in the playoffs, and they just believe in what we were going to do that night to North Dakota State. I sold them on the idea that if we do it this way, we can beat them in their gym. It was a very satisfying win for us."

And 20 years later, it remains a satisfying moment in the history of Division II women's basketball.

And while it may not show up in the box score, we understand the challenges of balancing athleticism and academic excellence. That's why we're proud supporters of NCAA® student-athletes.

Given the school's Catholic and Marianist mission, students often complement their academics with community service. Some 70 percent of St. Mary's students volunteer a total of more than 140,000 service hours annually, which has led to several national recognitions. Last year, The Carnegie Foundation awarded St. Mary's its Community Engagement designation, and the Corporation for National and Community Service named the university one of just six colleges and universities to receive the 2011 Presidential Award, recognizing St. Mary's as a top institution in the nation for volunteering, service-learning and civic engagement.

Students also spend their downtime playing on or cheering for the school's 12 varsity sports teams, which compete at the NCAA Division II level and in the Heartland Conference. The men's baseball and women's softball teams have won the NCAA Division II national championship in 2001 and

SAN ANTONIO, TEXAS

Host city of the 2012 NCAA Women's Elite Eight

For 28 years, San Antonio Sports, the local nonprofit sports commission, has worked to attract premier events to the Alamo City, delivering fantastic experiences for student-athletes, fans and the community as a whole. The NCAA Women's Elite Eight is no exception.

Premier events

San Antonio Sports pursues major sporting events for San Antonio, and in 1998, the city hosted its first NCAA Men's Final Four. San Antonio quickly became a favorite destination of college basketball fans, student-athletes and coaches.

San Antonio has hosted three NCAA Men's Final Fours (1998, 2004 and 2008), two Women's Final Fours (2002 and 2010), two NCAA Division I Women's Volleyball Championships (2005 and 2011), six NCAA basketball regionals, and now two NCAA Women's Elite Eight tournaments (2009 and 2012).

In 2008, the NCAA bestowed on San Antonio its "Championship City" designation. The Championship City program features multiple host opportunities for NCAA Divisions I, II and III men's and women's championships through the year 2014.

Other major sporting events pursued and hosted by San Antonio Sports include the Rock 'n' Roll San Antonio Marathon and 1/2 Marathon, the state's largest marathon. In 2008 and 2009, the city hosted the TAAF Games of Texas and welcomed 8,000 athletes competing in 18 events and participating in the largest multi-sporting event in the state of Texas.

San Antonio Sports' All Can Ski is the largest water skiing clinic for people with physical disabilities in the United States. Conducted at SeaWorld San Antonio, more than 80 individuals of all ages participate in All Can Ski, including wounded military men and women, many of whom are being treated at San Antonio's Center for the Intrepid. And for 14 years, San Antonio has been home to the Big 12 Women's Soccer Championship.

Kids programs

Aside from hosting major sporting events, San Antonio Sports creates sports and fitness opportunities for San Antonio youth. In 1993, San Antonio Sports established Dreams for Youth, which targets children in underserved neighborhoods and provides training in nontraditional Olympic sports. Today, hundreds of children are enrolled in Dreams for Youth volleyball, diving and fencing programs.

San Antonio has been the site of 15 championship events

Based on San Antonio Sports' success with Dreams for Youth, San Antonio was the first city to gain national recognition from the U.S. Olympic Committee as a Community Olympic Development Program site, bridging the gap between grassroots programs and the Olympic pipeline for talented young athletes. The Dreams for Youth concept has been expanded to after-school training programs in two inner-city school districts, providing sport, fitness and character training to hundreds more elementary students.

San Antonio Sports also hosts several school- and community-based fitness programs including the Valero Go!Kids Challenge™, ING Kids Rock marathon training program, and Fit Family Challenge. All are designed to combat the obesity epidemic by inspiring children and families to embrace active, healthy lifestyles.

Join. Volunteer. Participate.

It is San Antonio Sports' mission to transform our community through the power of sport, and we invite everyone to join our team as a member, volunteer or program participant. Visit SanAntonioSports.org for complete information about events and programs.

 NCAA Convention

The past year has been challenging for intercollegiate athletics. Yet the American love affair with college sports grows stronger with each point scored and every milestone achieved. We may come from different backgrounds and areas of the country, but we still gather in cheering crowds to follow our favorite teams and alma maters. At the heart of it we are captivated by young men and women whose playing fields are extensions of their classrooms and whose successes are athletic, academic and lifelong.

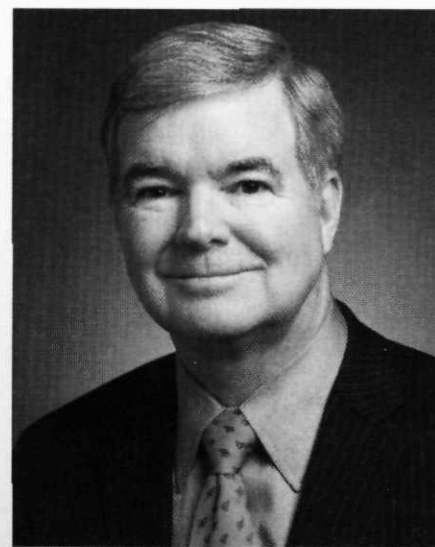

Our love of sports begins at an early age — if you drive past a soccer field in any town in America, you'll find children as young as three years old chasing a ball. If you visit a neighborhood gym, you'll see their older siblings developing leadership, teamwork and fairness.

If those young people join the ranks of the more than 400,000 NCAA student-athletes, they'll discover the many benefits of college sports, most of which are off the field. Independent research confirms what those of us who love sports hold true: participation as a student-athlete leads to better grades and graduation rates, higher self-esteem and more fulfilling preparation for life.

The power of intercollegiate athletics in preparing leaders is, without a doubt, the reason this enterprise has lasted more than 100 years. But college sports are more than iconic American pastimes. They develop better-educated and more involved Americans.

Intercollegiate athletics provides access to education for student-athletes who may otherwise face limited opportunities to obtain a college degree. More than 13 percent of current student-athletes are in the first generation of their families to attend college. And that's important because obtaining a bachelor's degree can increase lifetime professional earnings by $1 million or more as compared to those with only a high school diploma.

If those young people join the ranks of the more than 400,000 NCAA student-athletes, they'll discover the many benefits of college sports, most of which are off the field. Independent research confirms what those of us who love sports hold true: participation as a student-athlete leads to better grades and graduation rates, higher self-esteem and more fulfilling preparation for life.

For many student-athletes, college sports literally changes the course of their lives and the lives of those around them. For instance, Division III student-athletes partner with Special Olympics athletes to build physical fitness and experience the joy of sharing skills and friendship. Division II student-athletes raise significant funds to help the Make-A-Wish Foundation reach more kids with life-threatening medical conditions each year and grant them life-changing wishes.

What do those of us who work in intercollegiate athletics love about our jobs? Well, at some point in our lives, each of us decided to go pro in higher education. With this opportunity comes the responsibility to create an environment where student-athletes learn as much in classrooms and on campus as they do during competition.

Student-athletes often identify coaches as among the most influential people in their lives. Former student-athletes have told us their participation in college sports was vital in preparing them for life after graduation. Intercollegiate athletics shapes tomorrow's lawyers, doctors, engineers and military leaders as well as the next generation of educators.

As I interact with student-athletes, they consistently tell me there is one thing driving them to succeed: their passion for the game. As educators, it must be our passion for the enterprise of intercollegiate athletics — and the benefits it provides student-athletes — which drives us to excellence.

To that end, values-based legislation is being adopted across all three of our divisions so our rulebook reflects the outcomes we're striving to attain: a fulfilling, well-rounded college experience for each student-athlete. Simply put, we know when those invested in college sports behave in ways that deserve to be modeled, student-athletes achieve beyond anyone's expectations.

As we continue to elevate the student-athlete experience, I am confident 2012 will be a more positive year for intercollegiate athletics and provide a much richer educational experience for us all.

BEHIND THE BLUE DISK

All things being equal

The goal of Title IX is equal participation opportunities for both genders. With that in mind, the law requires male and female student-athletes to receive athletics scholarship aid proportional to their participation opportunities. But it does not require equal dollars to be spent on men's and women's sports. It also requires equitable treatment for:

- Equipment and supplies
- Scheduling of games and practice times
- Travel and daily allowance/per diem
- Access to tutoring
- Coaching
- Locker rooms and practice and competitive facilities
- Medical and training facilities and services
- Housing and dining facilities and services
- Publicity and promotions
- Support services
- Recruitment of student-athletes

Factoids

- In 1902, the first women's college basketball game was played at Smith College behind locked doors. No male spectators were allowed.
- In 1981, the NCAA* started administering women's sports. The first NCAA women's basketball championship was played in 1982 and won by defending AIAW (Association for Intercollegiate Athletics for Women) champion, Louisiana Tech University, over Cheyney University of Pennsylvania.

- In 1981-82

female student-athletes on 4,776 teams.

169,800

male student-athletes on 6,843 teams.

- Today

186,460

female student-athletes on 9,660 teams.

249,307

male student-athletes on 8,530 teams.

Examining Title IX

What is Title IX? Title IX of the Education Amendments Acts of 1972 is a federal law that states: "No person in the United States shall, on the basis of sex, be excluded from participation in, be denied the benefits of, or be subjected to discrimination under any education program or activity receiving federal financial assistance."

Who does Title IX affect? It applies to all educational institutions, public and private, that receive federal funds. Almost all private colleges and universities must abide by Title IX regulations because they receive federal funding through federal financial aid programs used by their students. Schools comply in athletics by (1) providing equitable participation opportunities, (2) providing athletics financial aid equal to student-athlete participation, and (3) providing equitable benefits to participants. It affects all educational programs in schools. Since athletics programs are considered educational programs and activities, Title IX requires women and men be provided equal opportunities to participate in sports.

What are the benefits? Title IX benefits everyone. Historically, females have faced more gender barriers to education, but Title IX was written to ensure the under-represented gender – male or female – has equal access and opportunity. In fact, male participation continues to increase.

"Title IX is rather simple: don't discriminate on the basis of sex."

GREAT MOMENTS AND GAMES

NCAA Division II Women's Basketball Championship

Central Missouri swept two championship games in one night in Springfield, Massachusetts, in 1984.

One night, one court, two titles

Central Missouri's championship doubleheader sweep still stands out in NCAA annals

By Todd Krise

The energy, as Robin Scully described, was too much for him and his fellow Pine Street business owners to handle. So the inevitable happened.

Thousands of crazed Central Missouri State fans began pouring onto Warrensburg, Missouri's, famed downtown road.

The date was March 24, 1984, and 1,342 miles away in Springfield, Massachusetts, the university's men's and women's basketball teams had just completed the most unlikely doubleheader sweep in the history of college basketball.

It was the first and only time two teams from the same university won national titles on the same night and on the same court. Police were forced to shut down the three-block stretch and had no choice but to allow public celebration, which lasted until nearly sunrise.

"It was the only time I ever remember them doing that," said Scully, who opened the doors to his Heroes Restaurant and Pub in 1981. His ex-wife, Katie, is now the owner. "One of the best nights in my memory as far as business, too."

Memorabilia from that season still dons the walls of the 31-year-old restaurant. Plaques and pictures surround an autographed game ball, which Robin purchased at a university auction. They serve as a constant reminder to townspeople of the most prolific night in the school's (which is now called the University of Central Missouri) rich athletics history.

GREAT MOMENTS AND GAMES

NCAA Division II Women's Basketball Championship

"Everyone came together," Scully said, "and it started a long-term love affair with Central Missouri sports."

High expectations

The blueprints for the Central Missouri men's and women's basketball teams were laid out well ahead of their 1983-84 campaigns.

Both were still licking wounds from deep postseason defeats the year prior. Each had dynamic senior players, Ron Nunnally and Carla Eades, who finished their careers with a combined 4,566 points. The two squads also had complementary players who proved to be priceless contributors down the stretch.

"I think both teams were expecting to do well," said Bill Turnage, who was the Central Missouri sports information director from 1981-2002, "because they each had a pretty good nucleus back. I don't know if they were expecting to win the national championship, because we were in a pretty tough league at the time. But they were expecting to do well."

The Mules and Jennies took their time coming out of the gates. The men's team began its season 4-2 with tough losses to Division I foes Oklahoma — which sported the strength of Wayman Tisdale — and Oklahoma State. The two defeats were by a combined 55 points. Despite the losses, the Mules finished the regular season on an 18-1 tear.

The Jennies also had a tough nonconference slate, going 7-3 against programs that are now Division I. Three of their five losses on the year came to Kansas State, Nebraska and Ole Miss. Following back-to-back conference defeats at the end January, the Jennies rattled off eight straight wins to finish the regular season. They steamrolled over their competition, scoring more than 100 points four times in 32 games.

Luck still remains a key ingredient to both squads' successes. The men won seven regular-season games decided by five points or fewer — a trend that would continue in the postseason. One of those contests was a sloppy 26-24 affair with Missouri-Kansas City early in the year. "Both teams were just horrible that night," Turnage recalled.

The women finished 10-2 in conference play and found themselves in a three-way tie in the Mid-America Intercollegiate Athletics Association standings. A coin toss between Northwest Missouri, Southeast Missouri and Central Missouri gave the Jennies a bye and homecourt advantage in the winner-take-all finals. After Southeast Missouri defeated Northwest Missouri, the Jennies took the postseason crown with an 88-65 victory.

"We lucked out on that one," Turnage said.

Favorable bounces continued to fall Central Missouri's way as both teams hosted all of their NCAA tournament games at the school's Multipurpose Building up until the Division II semifinals. The Mules went 19-0 at home in 1983-84, while the Jennies went 18-1 at the "Multi."

The national semifinals

In the early 1980s, MIAA men's and women's basketball games were scheduled as doubleheaders. So, having played all 24 conference games together, on the same courts and in the same buildings all season, it only seemed fitting that both Central Missouri squads would head to the national semifinals together.

The Mules and Jennies did not go alone, either. A mass following of school administrators, alumni, students and fans followed the teams to Springfield, Massachusetts, the birthplace of basketball. Most patrons flew in to New York or Boston, while a few diehards left on buses the day before the semifinals and drove 24 hours straight to make tipoff. Thousands of Central Missouri fans packed the Springfield Civic Center (now called the MassMutual Center) for all four games.

The Jennies kicked off the semifinals with a close 74-70 victory over Valdosta State. The Mules followed with an 89-85 overtime thriller against North Alabama. Both finals took place on Saturday with the men's bout broadcasted on ESPN. The women's final was on tape delay, but radio stations reported live.

In the men's championship, Central Missouri held a slim two-point lead over St. Augustine's at halftime until Nunnally caught fire. The 6-foot-3 guard, who Turnage described as "160 pounds soaking wet," opened the second half with eight straight points to help widen the Mules' lead to 60-53 with 10 minutes to play. Nunnally finished with 38 points.

The Falcons began concentrating heavily on Nunnally, allowing fellow senior Brian Pesko to ice the game. Pesko came into the semifinals known more as a passer but scored 55 in two games, including an unexpected 25 in the championship.

"They were basically trying to stop everybody else," Pesko said. "They were kind of saying, 'OK, we're going to let this guy beat us.'"

He did by sinking 50 percent of his field goals and nailing 13-of-14 from the free-throw line. It was Pesko's final foul shot that put the Mules up three in the waning seconds, eventually winning the game, 81-77.

GREAT MOMENTS AND GAMES

NCAA Division II Women's Basketball Championship

THE PATH TO HISTORY

Central Missouri became the first school in college basketball history to win the NCAA men's and women's basketball championships in the same season. The feat was later duplicated by Connecticut in 2004 at the Division I level and also by Northwestern College (Iowa) at the NAIA level in 2001. Central Missouri, however, is the only school to win both titles on the same court and on the same night. Here are the post-season paths Central Missouri took in accomplishing that feat:

Central Missouri Men

Central Mo. 70, Northwest Mo. St. 65 #
Central Mo. 50, Columbus 47 *
Central Mo. 79, Jacksonville St. 72 *

Central Mo. 89, North Ala. 85 *
Central Mo. 81, St. Augustine's 77 *

The Central Missouri women, in the meantime, were watching the game from their sideline seats. Eades said they entered the locker room with 10 minutes to play, requesting their team managers to give updates throughout their pregame preparation. They eventually came back on the floor with a minute remaining and celebrated with the men's team.

"When the men won, we were like, 'O.M.G.,'" Eades said. "Then we felt like we had to win. We were on the court celebrating their national championship. It was like, 'Oh my gosh, can this be real?'"

Despite the pregame chaos, the Jennies kept revenge on their minds. Their opponent was Virginia Union, which eliminated Central Missouri from the semifinals the previous year. A day before the 1984 championship game, Eades and her teammates saw the Pantherettes wearing a certain type of clothing.

"Virginia Union came walking in with their national championship sweats," Eades said. "We were like, 'Those are our sweats!' We were highly motivated."

The Jennies began the game on a 25-4 run before Virginia Union and its powerful 6-foot-2 center Veta Williams, who had 39 points and 20 rebounds, closed the gap to within 11 at half.

Williams opened the second stanza with 14 straight points, narrowing the margin to three. But a moment later, Central Missouri went into the one-and-one as Virginia Union was called for a tournament-record 42 fouls. Eades' 20 points and the Jennies' clutch free-throw shooting (14-of-20 in the second half) led to an 80-73 victory.

"When they win, we win," Jennies head coach Jorja Hoehn told the Associated Press following the game. "If this is a dream, I hope we never wake up."

Central Missouri took home several postseason awards in 1984. Eades was named Division II Player of the Year and the tournament's most outstanding player. Her teammate Rosie Jones joined her on the all-tournament team. Nunnely was named the men's most outstanding player, while Pesko was added to the all-tournament team. Mules head coach Lynn Nance was named NCAA Division II Coach of the Year by the National Association of Basketball Coaches.

"I do remember after the game Lee Williams, who was the executive director of the Basketball Hall of Fame at that time, grabbed my arm as I was going across the court, and I was 33 years old at the time, he said, 'You're a young man, but you will never see this again,'" recalled Jerry Hughes, who was in his first full year as Central Missouri's athletics director and still holds the position today.

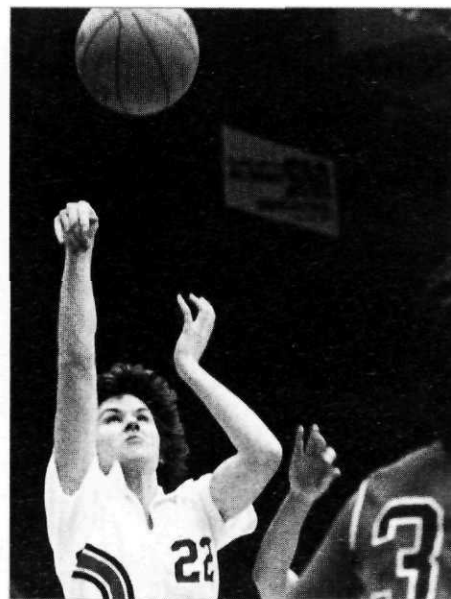

The celebration

Warrensburg is a small town in Johnson County, Missouri, about an hour east of Kansas City. In two days following the national championships, it became the country's basketball capital.

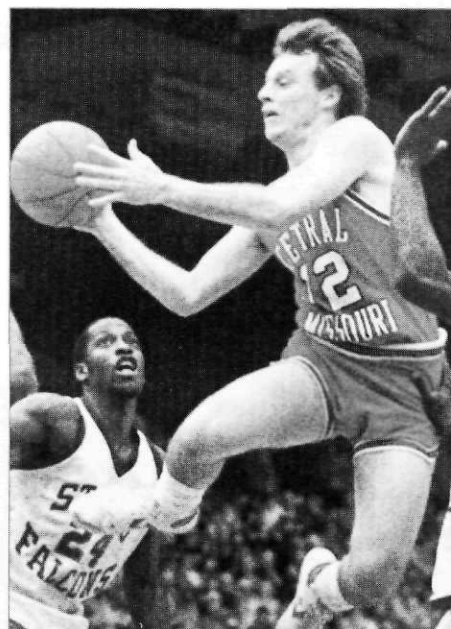

Following a police escort and warm reception upon their return, the university held an Appreciation Day for both teams. Classes from 10 a.m. to noon were canceled and then-Gov. Christopher Bond led a victory parade through town and the 9,000-student campus.

"If you've ever been to Warrensburg, you know it's a basketball town," Pesko said. "If you were a basketball player, everyone kind of knew you. It is a Division II school, but you were treated like a Division I school."

More than 3,000 fans in the Multipurpose

Carla Eades (22) and Brian Pesko (12) were each key in helping their team sweep both ends of the "doubleheader."

Building watched as state and local politicians joined Gov. Bond in proclaiming March 25-31, 1984, as "Jennies and Mules Week."

The same morning, university officials received a telegram from Washington, D.C. ending with, "We wish you the very best for an enjoyable celebration and, again, CONGRATULATIONS! — Signed: Ronald Reagan."

A copy of the president's message can be found right where the celebration was at its craziest: in a glass case at Heroes Restaurant and Pub.
