SCOTS HOST DEFENDING PC CHAMPS

Coming off their heartbreaking loss to Slippery Rock last weekend, the Fighting Scots are preparing for the invasion of the defending Pennsylvania Conference champion IUP Indians this weekend in an early must win situation for the Plaid.

Kick-off is set for 1:30, as Edinboro (2-2, 0-1 PSAC West) hosts the Indians from IUP (2-1, 0-0) in the key conference matchup at Sox Harrison Stadium.

Edinboro opened the 1987 season with a setback against Liberty (VA) (8-13), then rebounded to down Mansfield (21-10) and Central Connecticut (14-7) before bowing last week to the Rock (35-36).

Today is the conference opener for the Indians as they opened their season on a down note 7-31 to West Chester, but have rebounded to defeat I-AA opponent Towson State (MD) (10-7) and American International (33-10).

With today's encounter being only the Scots' second conference game of the 1987 season, it may be unfair to call it a must win for the Plaid. But head coach Steve Szabo knows that his squad can ill afford another western division loss at this stage of the year.

"It is always tough to prepare yourself and your team after a tough loss," Szabo said. "But this will be a true test of our character as a ball club. We cannot catch ourselves thinking too much about the loss last weekend, we have to prepare for the defending champions this week. We are well aware that IUP is the division favorite, so what better way to get back on the winning track than to defeat the front runner," he added.

Leading the offensive parade for the Scots again this weekend will be sophomore quarterback Jim Ross. For a player who has started just five games in his college career, Ross is quickly developing into one of the top passers in the PSAC. In '87, Ross has completed 63 of 104 (61%) passes for 725 yards and four touchdowns. He is coming off his top effort as an Edinboro quarterback, as Ross connected on 17 of 29 for 225 yards and a touchdown against the Rock. The sophomore signal-caller has led the Boro offense to an average of 353.3 yards per game, 172 on the ground and 181.3 through the air.

Looking to get back on track this weekend will be senior runningback Floyd Faulkner. The 5-9 scatback from Coraopolis, PA, opened the season with 150 and 113 yards respectively, but has been slowed the last two weeks against Central and Slippery Rock. Running mate Elbert Cole took up the slack last weekend, tallying 90 yards and two touchdowns and has grounded out 263 on the season for second highest on the club. A healthy John Georgiana will likely see action at fullback, while halfbacks Chris Conway and Ed Simpson are expected to see playing time.

Hoping to clear the way for the Scots up front this weekend will be Joe Brooks at center, Dean Gallagher and Andy Cline at guard, Mark Courtney and Ron Hainsey at tackle and Brian Ferguson at tight end.

The Scot receiving corp should be healthy against IUP, led by Cleveland Pratt (11 catches for 96 yards), Daryl Cameron (9 for 201 and 1 TD), John Toomer (5 for 86 and 2 TD), Faulkner (team high 13 catches for 101) and Cole (9 for 101).

Place kicker Darren Webber, from nearby McDowell High School in Erie, rounds out the Plaid's offense for this weekend. Webber is 10 for 10 in conversions this season and has been successful on two of six field goal tries.

Defensively, the Scots must rebound from their showing against the Rock. Having surrendered just 30 points in their first three games of '87, the defense could not stop the Rock's running game last weekend and it seemed to be the difference.

Leading the charge for the Scots today will be middle linebacker Scott Brown (team high 46 tackles) and strong safety Mike Wetherholt (36 stops, including 18 against SR). Free safety Mike Willis (41) and cornerbacks Mikel Green (19 stops) and Scott Anderson (19) will likely join forces with Wetherholt in the secondary. Nickel back Steve Franklin (15 stops and 2 interceptions) will see plenty of action as well. Franklin is coming off a great effort against SR, where he registered five tackles and picked off two passes including an 84 yard return and touchdown.

Linebackers John Williams (24 tackles and 3 passes broken up) and Al Donahue (30 stops and 2 INT), along with linemen Chip Conrad (23 tackles including 3 for loss), Mark Josefov (23), Rob Lewis (19) and Bill Clark (14) round out the Scots hit parade.

One of the Scots best defensive members this season has been punter Mike Raynard. He enters today's encounter with a booming 43.1 yard average on 22 punts, including a 77 yard boot against the Rock.

The Scots biggest test this weekend will be handling a rugged IUP defense. Spearheaded by Associated Press Honorable Mention All-American Troy Jackson at linebacker, the Indian defense has obviously rebounded from their setback to West Chester. They have given up just 17 points in their last two outings.

Also returning for the Braves on defense in '87 are all conference performers Dean Cotrill (linebacker) and Paul Thompson (nose-guard) as well as secondary mates Frank Cignetti and safety Tom Fedkoe. Rounding out a very talented defensive squad will be outside linebacker Kevin McMullan, who registered 120 tackles (71 solo) a year ago for the Indians.

McMullan leads the Indians defense in '87 with 45 tackles including 21 solo stops. Darren Cotrill, cornerback, is next for IUP with 33 stops. Cotrill was named ECAC "Defensive Player of the Week" for his efforts in the opener to West Chester. Jackson (17 tackles and team high 2 sacks) and linebacker Dean Cotrill (26 stops) have been solid as expected.

Cignetti, Fedkoe and Jim Hostler (team high 3 INT) round out a very good defensive secondary. Although the Brave secondary has been solid against the run, they have been a bit vulnerable to the pass in their three games this season. In all, the IUP defense has surrendered 221.3 yards per game through the air as compared to just 82 ypg on the ground.

Offensively, the Indians are steady with plenty of skill people. Wide receiver Tony Trave, a second team all PSAC pick a year ago, leads the Indians with nine catches for 176 yards and three touchdowns in '87, while 5-5 runningback "Pudgy" Abercrombie seems to be coming into his own. Abercrombie rushed for 112 yards on 21 carries last week against AIC. For the year, he has gained 194 yards on 52 totes for a 3.9 ypc average.

Joining Abercrombie in the IUP backfield will likely be fullbacks Steve Girting (16 carries for 71 yards) and Paul Palamara (21 for 43 and 1 TD). Palamara was the difference in the 28-10 IUP win over the Boro last season, as he rushed for all four scores. Quarterback Jim Pehanick will call the shots for head coach Frank Cignetti. In three games, Pehanick has completed 28 of 54 passes for 449 yards and four touchdowns. He has thrown three interceptions.

In all, the IUP offense is averaging 105.7 ypg on the ground, while tallying an average of 156.7 ypg in the air.

"It should prove to be a very interesting football game," Szabo stated. "We are expecting a strong, physical football team in IUP. We are going to have to be ready. We are a young team, but we are going to get better each week. From here on out, the schedule demands that we be ready to play," Szabo concluded.

EDINBORO UNIVERSITY

After 125 years of service to the tri-state area, Edinboro experienced its most significant change in history on July 1, 1983, when the College became Edinboro University of Pennsylvania. Founded as a private academy in 1857, Edinboro University has continued its surge to the forefront as one of the leading educational institutions in western Pennsylvania. Situated on a sprawling 585-acre campus in the scenic resort community of Edinboro, the University is within 100 miles of the educational and cultural centers of Buffalo, Cleveland, and Pittsburgh. It is just 15 miles south of Erie, the third largest city in Pennsylvania, and easily accessible from all directions by interstates 79, 80 and 90.

Edinboro has the distinction of being the second normal school established in Pennsylvania and the 12th in the United States. It has grown to more than forty buildings including the 400,000-volume Baron-Forness Library, a modern seven-story structure which serves as a focal point for the spacious campus. Nearly 6,100 students representing almost every county in the Commonwealth, as well as numerous states and foreign countries attend Edinboro. Its tradition of educational service and research is matched by a distinguished faculty, more than two-thirds of whom have earned doctoral degrees.

The University now offers more than 100 undergraduate, graduate, and associate degree programs, a diversity unmatched by any other college or university in northwestern Pennsylvania. While seeking to meet the educational needs of its region from both a professional and cultural standpoint, Edinboro now makes contributions in the fields of education, government, environmental improvement, urban and rural problems, crime prevention, and service to business and industry. Recent program developments include those in the high-demand areas of allied health, business administration, communication, computer technology, nursing, and various pre-professional offerings such as law, dentistry, medicine, pharmacy and veterinary science. Numerous student internships provide additional examples of the University's efforts to create a close working relationship with the people it serves while, at the same time, offering students intellectual and career opportunities.

Edinboro has initiated the University Honors Program to provide challenging and enriched learning experiences for academically gifted students. Undergraduate students are encouraged to strive for academic excellence both in their major fields and in other disciplines. Honors students pursue studies that are greater in depth and scope than those required of other undergraduates.

Although the costs for attending Edinboro rank among the lowest in the Commonwealth, over $10,000,000 in financial aid is available annually to eligible students.

Students are admitted to the University in September or January and are considered for admission on the basis of their general scholarship, nature of secondary program, and SAT or ACT scores.

PRESIDENT — FOSTER F. DIEBOLD

President Foster F. Diebold is a recognized leader in higher education. Prior to assuming the presidency at Edinboro University in 1979, he was president of the University of Alaska Statewide System. These leadership positions involved successfully overcoming a variety of serious problems which faced both the University of Alaska Statewide System and Edinboro University.

President Diebold played an active role in the development of the State System of Higher Education in the Commonwealth of Pennsylvania by supporting the legislation which created it and serving on the transition team. In addition, he served on search committees for the Chancellor's senior staff.

President Diebold also chaired the Pennsylvania State Athletic Conference from 1983 to 1985. He now serves on the Capital Facilities and Appropriations Sub-Committee of the Chancellor's Executive Council and on the Commission of the Universities Ad Hoc Committee on Public Higher Education in Pennsylvania. President Diebold also serves on the Committee on Governance of the American Association of State Colleges and Universities (AASCU).

At Edinboro University, the president has undertaken new initiatives to promote excellence in education. During his presidency, the Honors Program has expanded both in course offerings and in scholarships made available to high achieving students. In 1985, Edinboro University received a grant from the Exxon Education Foundation to sponsor a special Summer Honors Program for students and faculty drawn from the fourteen universities of the Pennsylvania State System of Higher Education. President Diebold has initiated and encouraged the expansion of the program which serves disabled students, and, under his leadership, the University is now 99% wheelchair accessible. The President's commitment to disabled students led the University to host the 29th Annual National Wheelchair Games in the summer of 1985. Also, he initiated an athletic study table designed to help improve the academic progress of student athletes.

President Diebold is committed to strengthening current academic programs at Edinboro, and to developing new academic programs which respond to student needs. As a charter member of the World Future Society, he believes that the study of the future should be an important element in the undergraduate curriculum. In various ways, President Diebold has encouraged open dialogue and collegiality within the University community through various groups, such as the University Senate, the Faculty Advisory Group, and the Department Chairpersons Group.

President Diebold supports and encourages international education programming. Greater diversity in the representation of students from other nations has been achieved, and, currently, there are nearly 100 international students representing over 25 countries. Also included in the University community are visiting scholars from abroad.

President Diebold resides in Edinboro with his wife, Patricia, daughters, Jessica and Stacey, and son, Wesley.

COMPETITION TOUGH FOR CROSS COUNTRY TEAM

Doug Watts, coach of last season's NCAA Division II national champion cross country team, approaches the 1987 season with a great deal of appreciation and apprehension for his Edinboro runners.

"We ran just great last November, a performance I have ranked as the best ever by an Edinboro team," said the veteran mentor. "This year everyone will expect us to perform as good or better...and that expectation produces pressure that can be insidious to season long development."

Certainly there is reason to suspect that Edinboro could repeat, however. The Boro returns a solid nucleus from last year's success story, and possesses capable replacements for the graduated harriers. Except for Luke Graham, that is. Graham was a six-time All-American and the mainstay of the cross country program for the past three years.

"Luke Graham is simply irreplaceable," said Watts. "No runner I've ever coached has performed as consistently on the upper level of competition as Graham."

Still, Edinboro has a trio of runners who could finish as high or higher than Graham has ever done at nationals. Emerging star Mike Platt (Holley, NY) is expected to hold the number 1 spot for Edinboro. Platt was the third fastest American at nationals last fall in his first cross country season for the Scots. Continual improvement saw him smash former Edinboro national champ Greg Beardsley's school record in the 5,000 (13:56). Platt also had the fastest 10,000 time in Division II until a freak pulled calf sidelined him. A 3.8 business/economics major, Platt is a diligent trainer who runs well when it counts and has the ability to provide the leadership necessary to mold a championship squad.

Another runner who needs to assume leadership qualities is Gennaro "Jim" Manocchio (Parma, OH). A two-time cross country All-American, Manocchio was 13th in the country in 1985. The senior was in the top 10 last year when a side stitch dropped him way back into the pack. He regrouped and worked his way up into All-American status by the end of the race, however.

"Certainly Jim is one of the real keys to another title," says Watts. "When he runs well, he can compete equally with any American in Division II."

Another study in championship meet performance is senior Tim Dunthorne (Sudbury, Ontario). Rarely does Dunthorne impress anyone with his regular season performances. But in the big races the tall Canadian certainly has proven his real ability. Tenth in last year's cross country championships, Dunthorne also has a pair of national runner-up finishes in the steeplechase to his credit in track.

The other returning veteran, Mike Tonkin (Brookville, PA), will be expected to find a degree of consistency. As a freshman, Tonkin showed flashes of brilliance in a few races but was not in contention at the nationals.

"Mike ran very well for a freshman, especially at states and regionals," said Watts. "I'm pretty sure he will be in it for an All-American award this year."

Scott Burns, Edinboro's other 1986 All-American, has graduated but Watts thinks he has the personnel to replace him even up. Freshman redshirt Chris Rauber (Pittsburgh Central Catholic) is tabbed a future running star for Edinboro. Watts believes Rauber would have earned one of the starting spots on last year's team had he not been sidelined with an injury.

"After seeing him run so well in spring track, Chris might be Edinboro's first freshman cross country All-American this season," said Watts.

Watts adds another name from his squad who he feels could be the coveted honor of All-American, sophomore Mike Renninger (Oil City, PA). Renninger qualified for the track nationals in the 10,000 last spring, and is labeled by his coach as one of the toughest, guttiest competitors he has ever coached.

The probable seventh man this year is yet another national qualifier, sophomore John Kralisz (East Aurora, NY). A 3:50 1500 meter man, Kralisz possesses the leg speed necessary for continual improvement as his confidence and endurance develop.

"I said last year that it would take five All-Americans to win the championship and I was correct (both Edinboro and runner-up South Dakota State had five All-Americans). It should be no different in 1987," predicts Watts, the recipient of the 1986 national Coach of the Year Award.

The All-American performances will have to come from Watts' top seven harriers. Freshman George Lukert (Edinboro), Eric Walsh (Sparta, OH), and upperclassmen Bill Brown (Titusville, PA) and Walt McLaughlin (East Aurora, NY) could step in if anyone falters.

As usual, the Running Scots will embark on a tough schedule highlighted by early season Division I tests at Kentucky and Notre Dame.

ATHLETIC DIRECTOR — JIM McDONALD

Athletic Director - Jim McDonald

Edinboro University's athletic program was placed under the talented and aggressive leadership of Jim McDonald in July of 1981. Increased emphasis on fund raising to provide a sound scholarship foundation has become his top priority while numerous changes and innovations have also keyed the Scots' athletic program under his direction.

Through his efforts more than 2.1 million dollars has been raised during the past five years. The funds generated by the energetic athletic director's efforts will be used to assist Edinboro's men and women athletes who compete in the Scots sixteen intercollegiate sports.

"EUP has outstanding coaches and facilities. With these ingredients, there is no reason we could not be competitive in the PSAC and Division II."

In addition to maintaining Edinboro's respected winning tradition in intercollegiate athletics, the former health and physical education professor has vastly expanded the University's summer activities.

Forty-four camps were sponsored by the Fighting Scots Booster Club this past summer on the University's campus which also was the sight once again of pre-season drills for the Pitt Panthers football team. Sox Harrison Stadium is the site of the Cleveland Browns vs. the Buffalo Bills annual rookie scrimmage, which has been a yearly mid-summer highlight.

The personable athletic director also introduced Edinboro's Hall of Fame program which has evolved into an annual year-ending event to honor present and past athletes.

McDonald has been at Edinboro since 1962 and for 12 years served as the Fighting Scot basketball coach (1962-1975) and never experienced a losing season while his teams compiled an impressive 181 wins against only 89 losses. During that span, his cagers won four Western Division Pennsylvania Conference crowns, the PC state championship and two District 18 titles that netted trips to the NAIA National Tournament. His teams set 27 University records and made 19 post-season appearances while four of his players were named All-Americans.

Prior to accepting his position at Edinboro, McDonald served as assistant basketball coach in Erie, Pa. He is a 1956 graduate of Bridgeport High School in his home town of Bridgeport, West Virginia.

In 1960 he received a degree in chemistry and physical education from West Virginia Wesleyan College and he also holds a master's degree in health from the University of Buffalo.

As an undergraduate, he set nine school records at Wesleyan and was twice voted both AP and UPI basketball All-American. In 1960, he was the second leading scorer in the United States, averaging slightly over 33 points a game, and led his team to the national basketball tournament in Kansas City, Missouri. He was named to the NAIA's All-Tournament Team in 1959 and 1960.

In 1966, McDonald was selected Area Eight Coach of the Year by the eastern seaboard coaches and that same year was honored as one of the top ten finalists in the Coach of the Year national poll. McDonald's honors also include selection to the West Virginia All-Time College Basketball Team and membership in the West Virginia Sports Hall of Fame. He served four years on the NAIA's All-American selection committee and was chosen by the NAIA to coach an All-American team of NBA-bound cagers who won the Gold Medal in Israel's Hapoel Games.

In addition to his classroom and basketball coaching duties, McDonald was Edinboro's golf coach for 17 years during which his teams won over 40 tournaments and finished as high as 3rd place at the NCAA Division II National Tournament.

As a resident of Edinboro, McDonald has a record of extensive community involvement. He was Little League Baseball Director for four years and also held a four-year post as a member of the General McLane School Board. He and his wife, Mary Lou, have three sons - Mark, Mike, and Matthew.

SCOTS SET SIGHTS ON PA. CONFERENCE TITLE

The Edinboro University football team will carry a five-game win streak into the 1987 season with sights geared to a western division title. The Fighting Scots are well aware that the task at hand is dethroning IUP in order to travel to the state championship game this November.

"In order to accomplish our long range goals, we have to start right here in the western division," third-year head coach Steve Szabo stated. "Indiana will once again be the team to beat on our side of the state. It is nice to know that our two toughest opponents (IUP and West Chester) will be played in Sox Harrison Stadium," he added.

Since Szabo started in 1985, the Fighting Scot mentor has made a conscious effort to improve the Edinboro schedule and in '87 he has done just that. "The first thing is that we are playing an eleven game schedule this year. We dropped Wayne State and Fairmont and picked up a rugged Division I-AA opponent in Liberty University. We also play Central Connecticut, which hired a new coach that took Salisbury State (MD) to the Division III national finals a year ago; and Shepherd College (WV) which finished in the NAIA top ten last season," Szabo commented.

Coming into the '87 campaign Szabo calls it "guarded optimism" as he approaches the Scots' initial test on the road September 5. "Taking into consideration the ability and physical size of our athletes this could be the best football team Edinboro has had since I came here three years ago. But I am a bit cautious due to the fact that we are so young," Szabo added. "We have only seven seniors on the entire squad so once again we are going to be relying on young talent in the big games."

Szabo feels that the center of any good football team must start with the quarterback. "It is a very sensitive position. In order to be successful a team must have a solid foundation at quarterback," he added. It is obvious that the Scot mentor is concerned.

The Plaid is likely to start sophomore signal caller Jim Ross, a Euclid, Ohio, product with only one collegiate start under his young belt. "Physically there is no question that he has the ability to lead this team," the head coach said. "But like I said, there is far more to it than just the raw ability to throw the ball. Once Ross learns the system and becomes more comfortable with it I feel he can develop into as good a quarterback that Edinboro has ever had."

Indeed, Ross is a bit green but he has shown the leadership qualities and ability to lead the Fighting Scot squad. In his lone start last season, Ross completed 8 of 16 passes for 118 yards and 2 touchdowns in leading the Plaid to a 24-14 win over Slippery Rock. The remainder of the season Ross threw just 4 more passes but gained valuable game experience in 4 other contests and feels he got his feet wet. "I was pleased with my performance against the Rock," Ross said. "But I was not happy with my overall performance for the year. The experience helped. I just hope I can carry over the knowledge I gained last year and help us win some football games this fall," he added.

If any one position can take the heat off of Ross in '87 it will be the wealth of talent the Scots possess at halfback. Returning for his senior season will be scat-back Floyd Faulkner. Coming off an all-conference season Faulkner will be relied on to carry the bulk of the offensive load for the Scots this year. He rushed for a team-high 824 yards on just 127 carries and 11 touchdowns last season and ended the year with 84 points scored. Out of the backfield Faulkner grabbed 17 passes for 142 yards and a pair of scores while he also returned 22 punts for 302 yards for a 13.7 yards per return mark. One of his runbacks covered 80 yards and a touchdown against California on the road.

Joining Faulkner in the backfield will likely be Elbert Cole and fullback John Georgiana. Cole, just a sophomore, gained 290 yards on 52 attempts last season for a 5.6 YPC mark and a pair of touchdowns. He also caught 11 passes for 170 yards and 3 scores out of the backfield. One of his grabs was a game winner with two seconds left against Wayne State. "We have three people at the halfback spot that can break a game open," commented Szabo. "Floyd, Elbert and Chris Conway give us a solid foundation in the backfield." Anchoring the fullback spot will be co-captain John Georgiana. "Georgy" carried the pigskin 40 times for 125 yards in '86 while helping clear the way for Scot backs to run for over 200 yards per game. "We are a bit slim at fullback as far as depth is concerned, but with someone as solid as Georgiana back there we should be all right," Szabo said. One concern of the Scots is that Georgiana is coming off knee surgery in the off season and whether he will be able to go at full strength for an entire season.

No matter how good the skill people are in the backfield, a solid offensive line is a must for a successful offense. In '87, Szabo feels the squad could be as good as ever. "Physically we will be a much bigger line than in years past," said the head mentor. "We should average around 240 pounds up front with players who have game experience."

In the middle of the line will likely be sophomore center Joe Brooks (6-1, 235) and guards Andy Cline (6-4, 240) and Dean Gallagher (6-3, 225). Sophomore Brad Powell (6-2, 260) and freshman Jeff Jacobs (6-4, 240) will give the Scots depth at guard. Looking to start at tackle will be a pair of returnees in Ron Hainsey (6-4, 260) and Mark Courtney (6-3, 225) who were not in the starting lineup on opening day last season. "Both Courtney and Hainsey developed into solid offensive tackles last season," Szabo commented. "They worked hard to earn their spots and performed well to keep them. I hope there will be more pleasant surprises like those two this season." Anchoring the interior this season will be a trio of tight ends which Szabo feels can all help the squad. Brian Ferguson, Randy McIlwain, and John Tintzman all bring game experience into the '87 season with equal talents. Ferguson caught 4 passes for 37 yards and a score last season, while Tintzman's lone reception went for 10 yards and a score. McIlwain was used strictly on special teams a year ago but had an outstanding spring and is expected to battle for the spot.

At wideout the Scots are very solid. Ernest Priester (36 catches, 507 yards), Cleveland Pratt (18, 225, 3TD), John Toomer (11, 103) and Daryl Cameron (8, 91, 1TD) return for the Plaid and all offer deep threats when called upon. Priester, in just his freshman year last season, was the squad's top possession receiver and will likely play the same role in '87. Pratt and Toomer both have sprinter speed, while Cameron will be used in the shorter passing game.

If the Fighting Scots are going to contend with the western division heavies this fall, the defense is going to have to make great strides from last season. Coach Szabo feels that coming off a successful spring, the defensive side of the ball has come a long way. "Coach Greg Quick (defensive coordinator) has his feet on the ground and has done a great job of pulling the defense together," Szabo stated. "With the influx of new personnel and the development of our veterans the defense should be a much better squad this season. We must minimize the mistakes and play as a unit. The personnel will not be my concern, it will be the ability to make the proper adjustments."

The secondary should be the Scots' stronghold in '87, led by all-conference performer Michael Willis and co-captain Mike Wetherholt. Willis returns with 77 tackles to his credit last season including 2 fumble recoveries, 1 fumble caused, 3 passes broken up and 1 interception. Wetherholt led the squad with 8 deflections in '86 and was the fourth leading tackler with 56 stops. Rounding out the secondary will likely be returnee Mikel Green (35 tackles, 1 INT) and Michael Churn (47 stops and 2 INT). Also expected to see time in the defensive backfield will be vet Claude Webb (21 stops and team-high 3 INT) and first-year players James Anderson, Mark Ferguson, Joe Thomas, Rod Thompson, Cornell Barber and Bill McNally.

Linebacking seems to be the biggest question mark for coach Quick's defense in '87, but with the addition of middle linebacker Scott Brown who moved from offense, and the experienced pass rush of John Williams the Plaid should have the talent to compete. The problem is the depth. Williams returns from a freshman season where he recorded 51 tackles and 2 quarterback sacks. He also was credited with 3 stops behind the line of scrimmage, while Brown is adjusting to the inside spot. "Brown was the pleasant surprise of the spring session," Szabo stated. "He has the ability to play the position as well as anyone has since I have been here. He is a former tight end with a good nose for the football."

At the other outside spot is likely to be a pair of sophomores battling in Jose Regus and Tony Simpson. A variety of freshmen are going to have to produce for the Plaid in '87 led by newcomers Brian Keaton, Al Donahue, Cary Braxton, John Constantino, Mike Cunningham and John Holmes. Returnee Dave Meholic, the squad's most valuable special teams player in '86, gives the squad the proven depth but he's likely to play the middle behind Brown.

Up front the squad has some proven players but depth could be the problem here again. Coaches Rick Browning and Quick have made some adjustments and feel that the defensive interior is ready to go. Starting at defensive end will likely be veterans Bill Clark (14 stops, 2 sacks) and Rob Lewis (24 tackles, 2 sacks), while the tackle spots are anchored by Chip Conrad and Mark Jozefov. Returnee Scott Pierce (28 stops and 2 sacks) gives the Plaid depth at end but that is the extent of the proven players. Freshmen Kurt Schmidhamer, Andy Fulton, Al Caldwell, Ray Haley, and John LaRocca are going to be looked at for help.

The kicking game also has its share of question marks, having to replace the school's all-time leading scorer Jim Trueman. A realm of freshmen will battle for the placekicking spot as Jason Benham and Terry Buckley seem to have the inside track. The punting chores will be solid with the return of second team all-conference player sophomore Mike Raynard. He finished his freshman campaign with 38 kicks covering 1,456 yards for a solid 38.3 mark, best in the western division of the Pennsylvania Conference.

STEVE SZABO — DIRECTION FOR THE FUTURE

Head Coach Steve Szabo

In 1985, Steve Szabo became the tenth head football coach in Edinboro University's 55-year gridiron history, and has led the Fighting Scots to a 12-7-1 mark his first two years. Last season, Szabo was tabbed small college “Coach of the Year” by the Pittsburgh Post-Gazette for leading the Scots to a 7-3 mark and a second place finish in the Pennsylvania Conference.

A native of Chicago, Illinois, Szabo graduated with honors from the United States Naval Academy in 1965 with a B.S. degree in physics and a minor in mathematics and electrical engineering. In addition, Szabo completed graduate work in aerospace engineering and pursued doctoral work on a fellowship at John Hopkins University.

From 1979 to 1981, the Fighting Scot head coach served as a defensive line coach at Ohio State under Earl Bruce, during which time the Buckeyes ranked in the top 20 and played in bowl games all three years. In 1979, he directed a standout defensive unit that ranked third in the nation in total defense.

“Steve is very disciplined, hard working and responsible,” offered Buckeye coach Earl Bruce. “I wouldn't hesitate to rehire him on my staff,” added the Ohio State mentor.

In addition to his three years at Ohio State, Szabo spent 1977 and 1978 as a defensive line coach at Iowa State. From 1974 through 1976 he was a defensive line coach at Syracuse University, and the three previous seasons he coached the offensive line, defensive line and linebackers respectively at the University of Iowa. He was also an assistant at the University of Toledo and John Hopkins University. Before joining the Edinboro staff, Szabo was offensive coordinator and quarterback/wide receiver coach at Western Michigan University.

As a player Szabo was an offensive and defensive halfback at the Naval Academy. He also earned All-America honors in lacrosse and was named to the All-Time Middie team. Following graduation from the Academy, Szabo served a 13-month tour of duty in Vietnam and was named to the All-Service football team with the Quantico Marines.

Szabo, who describes himself as a “very goal-oriented person,” has set some goals for the future of Edinboro football. First, he said he wants to produce a winning team starting with the PSAC title, with long range hopes of a national championship at the Division II level. Second, Szabo hopes to establish a program which is meaningful to his players, and ensure that above all they get an education. Third, Szabo hopes to create a positive football atmosphere at Edinboro which will involve the faculty, student body and the community. Finally, Szabo said he would like to instill an attitude of pride and togetherness within the team unit stressing, “a team program will transcend any individual greatness.”

The Scot coach has two children, Christine and Michael. Szabo resides in Edinboro with his wife, Patti.

ATHLETIC STAFF

Kathleen Lipkovich

Todd V. Jay

Harold "Hal" Umbarger

George Roberts

ASSOCIATE ATHLETIC DIRECTOR DR. KATHLEEN LIPKOVICH

Dr. Kathleen Lipkovich was named Edinboro's first associate athletic director at the outset of the 1981 school year to help administer both the men's and women's athletic program.

Originally from Youngstown, Ohio, Dr. Lipkovich has had teaching and coaching experience at West Virginia University, Central Connecticut State College, and Trinity College. The Ohio native, who graduated from Chaney High School, began her teaching and coaching career in 1972 with the Howland Local School District in Howland, Ohio, and then held a similar position from 1972 through 1975 at McDonald High School in McDonald, Ohio.

The 1972 Youngstown State graduate received her M.S. degree in 1975 from West Virginia University and was awarded a doctorate from that same institution in 1977 after majoring in educational administration and physical education. She completed a post-doctoral fellowship at Harvard in educational administration prior to her arrival at Edinboro.

SPORTS INFORMATION AND PROMOTIONS DIRECTOR TODD V. JAY

Todd Jay begins his third year of publicizing Edinboro University's athletic program and assisting in sports promotion for the Fighting Scots. A graduate of Clarion University of Pennsylvania, Todd received a bachelor of science in education in 1982 and a master of science in communications in May of 1985. The New Castle native served as assistant to the sports information director at Clarion.

During the past two years, Jay has written releases for 15 inter-collegiate sports, edited and produced athletic programs and brochures, and compiled statistics at all events. In addition, Todd hosted a weekly television show on local cable, featuring Fighting Scot football and basketball. He also did the promotion for numerous EUP all americans and received an award from the Amateur Wrestling News for his publication on the USA-Cuban meet held last March.

A three-year letterwinner in baseball at Clarion, Jay served as news-sports correspondent for the New Castle News, while also serving as assistant basketball coach for Neshannock High School during his teaching stay in New Castle.

On radio, Jay has hosted weekly shows in Clarion and Edinboro featuring intercollegiate athletics and assisting in overall sports promotion. The voice of the Fighting Scots for home football games, Todd is single and resides in Edinboro.

ASSISTANT TO THE ATHLETIC DIRECTOR HAROLD "HAL" UMBARGER

Harold "Hal" Umbarger joined Edinboro University's athletic staff four years ago as assistant to the athletic director. He brings a wealth of talent and experience to the administrative level of the athletic program and plays a vital role in overseeing the academic progress of student athletes as well as coordinating the on-going functions of the athletic director's office and the summer programs which involve the department. The West Newton, Pa., native is a 1954 Slippery Rock University graduate and also owns his masters degree from Penn State. After a three-year stint with the U.S. Army Security Agency in Europe, he coached basketball and baseball at Moshannon Valley (Pa.) High School before accepting a guidance position in the West York Area School District in 1961. He became a member of Edinboro's admissions office a year later and in 1967 was named director of admissions. During his tenure more than 40,000 students were admitted to Edinboro University.

TEAM TRAINER - GEORGE ROBERTS

George M. Roberts of Titusville, Pa., is beginning his third year as athletic trainer at Edinboro University.

A 1972 graduate of Titusville High School, Roberts received a bachelor of science from Edinboro in 1976. He completed the NATA (National Athletic Trainers Association) curriculum at West Chester University and earned a master of education degree from Slippery Rock University.

In his most recent position, the newest addition to the Fighting Scot athletic staff was employed as athletic trainer at Hamot Medical Center in Erie, Pa. He served as student trainer during his college career and from 1976 to 1984, Roberts was a teacher, trainer, and assistant football coach at Titusville High School.

Since 1980, Roberts has spent much of his time as a trainer for the National Sports Festivals (III, IV, and V), for the World University Games in Edmonton, Alberta, and for the United States Olympic Team during the 1984 Summer Olympics in Los Angeles.

Roberts is a member of the National Athletic Trainers Association, the Eastern Athletic Trainers Association, the Pennsylvania Athletic Trainers Society, the National Education Association, and the Pennsylvania State Education Association.

George and his wife, Penny, have a five-year-old daughter, Kristin.

Football's Fateful Force

MOMENTUM

by Ron Reid,
Philadelphia Inquirer

How a team reacts to changes in momentum can directly affect the outcome of a game.

Webster's New World Dictionary defines momentum as the impetus of a moving object, or a force that keeps growing.

The laws of physics say momentum is the product of mass times velocity.

But football people find momentum as hard to define as it is easy to recognize, and consider it not so much a constant, but a fateful force consistent only in changing sides, sometimes with 180-degree finality.

Coaches, players and fans are all familiar with momentum—that impelling power going for a team that is on the move and going against a team that is struggling to hold on.

Momentum is an almost mystic result of someone's good fortune or crushing disaster, a mood swing that upsets the tone and often the very outcome of a contest. Momentum is a succession of plays that affect competitive balance, and ultimately, the outcome.

"Momentum is very important," said Lou Holtz of Notre Dame. "It's strictly a state of mind. It tells you how to proceed. The one thing about it, it's going to swing back and forth. You can't get caught up in it or it can be disastrous.

"Momentum happens because somebody is lucky," he added. "Something they hadn't counted on goes their way, or goes against them. It could be anything—an official's call, a great play or a bad play. Something unexpected and out of the ordinary. Maybe dictated by the shape of the ball."

"What's important is the ability of your team to have momentum and maintain it," said Stanford coach Jack Elway. "It's an intangible thing that is a unique characteristic of a team sport. Success depends on how long you can maintain momentum and how you can take it away from your opponent.

"It's a cumulative effect of executing within your position, making the big play at the right time, second effort," said Elway. "A lot of positive things happening for you—luck, fumbles, officials' calls—those things create momentum."

Holtz also pointed out that assessing momentum is none too easy.

"Say the score is 7-7, and we score to go up 14-7," Holtz said. "I'll ask our players, 'Where's the momentum?' and they'll say, 'It's with us.' Then they score, and they'll say, 'It's with them.' But the situations are almost identical—the only difference is that in one we kick off, the other we receive. So momentum is state of mind."

Even so, momentum is often linked with time, making its dramatic impact at predictable junctures of the game.

"It's an interesting part of the game," said Bruce Arians, head coach at Temple. "There are critical [time] areas to have momentum. We always tell our team we want to start fast and finish strong, and we want to finish the half with a big play. The most important time of any game is the first five minutes of the third quarter and the last five minutes of the fourth, whether we're ahead by 20 or trailing by 20. With the first situation, you've got to set the momentum, the tempo, for the second half. With the second, you may set it up to win the game."

For those who believe momentum is a result rather than an effect, it may be surprising to know that some coaches drill their players in the proper psychological response to momentum changes, including the bad turn of fate.

"Momentum is something every coach believes in," said Jerry Berndt of Rice, "but I'm not sure most coaches practice how to deal with it. Somewhere along the line, you have to create that scenario, because the worst feeling in the world as a coach is to have something happen in a game you did not prepare your squad for. So we put our kids in those [momentum-changing] situations. Like, 'They're moving the ball on our defense, how do we react?' Or, 'We just scored and they just fumbled, let's take advantage and try to create momentum.'"

"We try each week to set an attitude of facing up to adversity," said Don James of Washington. "We tell our players that, 'In every game you'll fall behind or turn the ball over,' so you set the players up beforehand to expect some change."

It is James' contention that coping with a capricious change of momentum is tougher for a defensive squad than it is for an offense.

"Say the defense goes out after having a good series," he explained. "They go to the bench expecting rest and good things to happen—for the offense to get them better field position. So when the offense turns the ball over and the defense has to go right back in, that's the time they've got to be alert. The opponent's offense will try to capitalize on that, with a reverse, or maybe a flea-flicker. So we try to break down the sudden-change tendencies of our opponents and tell them [our players] to be alert."

To minimize the momentum of your opponent, Arians suggests a quick departure from the conservative tactics coaches have been accused of from Boston to Berkeley.

"You can take risks," Arians said. "Defensively, on a team that has been moving the ball on you, you might try to blitz. You try to wreck their momentum, cause a bad play. Offensively, against a team that has been stopping you, you might try a trick play, a reverse, or some misdirection that will make them overpursue. That can result in a big play to swing it back in the other direction."

"You've got to minimize it," said Holtz. "When momentum happens people say, 'Here it comes, something bad's gonna happen now.' But I can say just the opposite. You've got to. You can't just sit there and say, 'Well, let's see what's going to happen.' That's why we talk to our players about the mental aspect."

"You minimize momentum by continuing to execute what you're supposed to do," said Elway. "Having poise. That's where experience comes in. You keep playing hard to take momentum away."

Examples of favorable momentum changes make up the happiest moments in coaching memory and a sizable part of the game's history. Of such moments legends are made, and retold, season after season.

"When it [a favorable momentum change] happens, everybody on your team has a good feeling," said Holtz, recalling a Fighting Irish comeback against Southern California last season.

"We were behind, 37-20, and they had a fourth-and-one on our five," said Holtz, "and they didn't make it. So we take it and drive down and score, and wound up winning, 39-37. There was a single play that turned it around. When that happens it makes you say, 'Hey! We got life! We've got a chance!'"

"The first time we beat Pitt, three years ago," said Arians, "we had gone back and forth, back and forth, and they had dominated us defensively the entire fourth quarter. They had us in third-and-20 and we threw a bomb in double coverage. Willie Marshall caught the pass. We kicked a field goal two minutes later to win, 13-12—the first time we beat Pitt in 45 years. That one play in the last five minutes of the game switched the whole game around. When things like that happen, your team gets the feeling, 'We can beat anybody.'"

Berndt, who coached Pennsylvania before moving on to Rice last season, recalled an example from his Ivy League experience that is heavy with psychological impact.

"In our last year against Princeton," said Berndt, "we were losing, 20-0. But near the end of the first half, just before intermission, we intercepted a pass and scored. You could feel at that moment, that it all had changed and we were going to win." Indeed, the Quakers did just that.

James said, "I think probably the game I remember most was Stanford in 1977. We'd gone up, 17-0, but [Cardinal QB] Guy Benjamin threw two touchdown passes to James Lofton in the third quarter.

"Then as the fourth quarter began, we said, 'Are we going to let them take the momentum in this game or are we going to get it back?' And we scored five touchdowns in the fourth quarter. I'd never seen anything like it. We had guys taking punts back, everyone trying to do whatever he could to turn it around."

And for those who believe momentum is a force contained in a single contest, Berndt begs to differ.

"We won our last two games last season," said Berndt. "That was the first time in 17 years that Rice had closed out a season with back-to-back victories. The kids felt so good about it, the momentum carried over into our spring practice this year. Everyone was working so hard. It was a totally different attitude than that of the year before. So momentum doesn't only carry over from one play to the next, or from week to week, but sometimes even from year to year." □

A shift in momentum is often caused by a big play, such as a blocked punt.

NAME YOUR TERMS

Every sport develops a unique language to describe its plays and players. Test your skill in naming some of football's terms.

1. A roving linebacker who can line up in any position and play the ball rather than operating with a fixed area or assignment is called a _____.
2. An offensive lineman uses the _____ block to trip up a defender by throwing himself at the tackler's ankles or knees.
3. In the _____ formation, the quarterback lines up several yards behind the center and receives the ball from him on the fly.
4. A _____ defense calls for players to guard specific areas of the field rather than specific players.
5. On a _____ pattern the receiver sprints toward the goal line trying to outrun his coverage.
6. A _____-style kicker approaches the ball from an angle and kicks it with the side of the foot rather than the toe.
7. The space between scrimmage lines, approximately 11 inches (the length of the football), is called the _____ zone.
8. When a linebacker rushes the passer it is a _____.

ANTHONY BISCOTTI

9. Kick coverage units are nicknamed the _____.
10. The _____ play permits a defensive player to penetrate a hole quickly, only to be blocked from the side by a pulling guard or tackle.

11. A _____ is a change of possession of the ball due to an error like a fumble or interception, instead of by a kick or by running out of downs.
12. When a quarterback decides to change a play at the line of scrimmage, he uses an _____.

TOUCHDOWN

There's only one other way to enjoy so many thrills for so little money.

Fast rides. Lots of excitement. A day at the amusement park is a great way to get your adrenalin going. For the money, there's nothing quite like it.

Unless, of course, you're clever enough to buy Jensen® Classic car speakers or a JS car receiver.

Classic speakers give you big sound for a little price.

All the Jensen Classic speakers are compact disc ready, a feature you'd normally expect to find only on higher priced speakers. Although they're short on price, they're not short on power. Dynamic cone tweeters, long throw woofers and 2½" dynamic cone midranges (on our 6" x 9" model) give you up to 150 watts peak power. What's more, they're made in the U.S.A. and there's a model to fit any installation.

JS receivers give you features you can really use.

Any car receiver gives you plenty of features. The Jensen JS receivers have features you'll use plenty. Like Auto Reverse. Dolby "B." Seek. Scan. And 40 watts system power.

Two JS receivers even have compact disc player inputs. So, adding a CD player to your system is as easy as plugging it in.

If you're ready for thrilling car sound, but not prepared to spend a lot of money, there's only one thing to do.

Put a Jensen in your car. Turn it up. Then hang on for the ride of your life.

Do you have any Famous Grouse?" asked one good friend of another. "No, I don't," he lied.

Of course, it was shameless. But consider the circumstances.

Until recently, most Americans couldn't lay hands on a bottle of The Famous Grouse. Visitors to Scotland learned in a sip or two why this deluxe Scotch ranks first in the land of Scotch. So, they would lug home their limit.

Others discovered it in London clubs and would dash to the duty-free shops for a private supply. Which, sadly, they kept private.

Now, of course, this rare bird is in America in quantities to share.

With extremely good friends, of course.

"We have lost the Homeric thrill of human action, the zest of out-of-doors, the contest of speed, of strength, of human intelligence, of courage. Old Main,
 University of Arkansas

The towers of "Old Main" at the University of Arkansas, Fayetteville, are almost as recognizable across the state as the Razorback hog mascot of the school's sports teams. The building was erected in the early 1870s, and generations of UA students have believed that the north tower was intentionally built higher than its southern mate by pro-

Union workmen who wanted to rub in the North's then-recent victory over the South.

Studies of the building's plans have discounted that myth, but can't explain another mystery. Old Main was built from the same plans as those of a building that used to stand on the Urbana campus of the University of Illinois. But the plans were reversed, so that Old Main is a mirror image of the original building. Nobody knows why.

 Temple University

Doubling as a meeting place and timepiece for the students of Temple University, the Bell Tower stands 100 feet high and is visible from most points on campus. The five bells, crafted in Heiligerlee, Holland, weigh almost 4,000 pounds and ring out the Westminster Chimes. The bells are 80 percent copper and 20 percent tin. (The tin prevents cracking, and Philadelphians are very familiar with cracked bells.)

Built in 1965, the Bell Tower was born out of the Samuel Paley Memorial Library Foundation, which stands alongside the Tower. Aside from its aesthetic beauty and timekeeping skills, the Bell Tower is also the site of University concerts, lectures, pep rallies and numerous other events.

The QB Who Turns
Disaster Into Success

SCRAMBLIN' MAN

by Rick Smith,
Middlesex (Mass.) News

College football fans love scramblers. Unless of course they happen to be wearing the opponent's colors. In that case, the fans tense when the quarterback goes back to pass, his protection breaks down and he scrambles to turn near disaster into success. Or worse. Into six points.

Boston College coach Jack Bicknell, who had a pretty good example of what we're talking about in Doug Flutie, doesn't like the scrambler label. "I prefer to call them escape artists," said the man who watched Flutie scramble—or escape—his way to the 1984 Heisman Trophy.

He goes on to explain how Flutie was a scrambler when he first came to BC, but left a full-fledged escape artist. "When Flutie first came here, he would scramble out of the pocket when things started to break down but as he became more sophisticated, he would run around and buy more time. He was an escape artist."

Call them scramblers or escape artists, but the college game has had any number of gifted quarterbacks who used their nimble feet to make their arms all the more deadly. Fran Tarkenton of Georgia. Joe Montana of Notre Dame. Steve Young of Brigham Young. John Elway of Stanford. Those are just a few of the college quarterbacks who became dangerous animals when cornered.

The typical scrambler goes into action when the offensive play doesn't develop as diagrammed. Someone misses a block. Someone fails to pick up a blitzing linebacker. Or all the receivers are covered. With the defenders closing in, a quarterback who lacks mobility is a sitting duck. Nothing worse than a quarterback sack to thwart offensive momentum.

But with a scrambling quarterback, the tables can quickly turn. What looked like a sack only moments before can have the defense backpedaling and breaking out in a sweat.

Stanford's John Elway combined a rifle arm and running skill to shred opposing defenses.

"Scramblers can create a lot of problems," said Jerry Sandusky, defensive coordinator for Penn State. "It's not bad enough that your people have to cover their pass zones or cover the receivers man-to-man, but then a quarterback breaks containment and you've got more troubles."

"From an offensive standpoint, a scrambler will buy your offense time when all else fails," said Washington's Don James. "The combination of a hard, accurate thrower and someone who can run puts so much pressure on a defense."

Obviously, defensive people would prefer things cut and dried. Passes are hard enough to defend against when you know they're coming. The same goes for runs. So you can imagine what it's like to be a defender who has a guy running around who might tuck the ball away and run or who might pull up and throw the ball if the defense commits to the run.

Lou Holtz of Notre Dame feels that the importance of a scrambling quarterback can't be overemphasized. "If you have a quarterback who can turn a five- or seven-yard loss into a gain, who can maneuver instead of taking a sack, its importance at any level can't be minimized."

Holtz throws some caution into the equation before coaches everywhere start transplanting halfbacks behind center. "The good scrambler has to be able to throw," Holtz said. "If he isn't a good thrower, we'll play run against him."

Brigham Young's LaVell Edwards points out that the life of a scrambler isn't all glory, cheers and end zones. "A scrambler pays a bit of a price when he's tackled," said Edwards. "He isn't used to the pounding."

Is it difficult on the offensive linemen to have a quarterback who is fading back to pass one second and sprinting downfield the next? Bicknell doesn't think so. "It happens so fast that an offensive lineman is just trying to get his hat on someone," said Bicknell. "Most of the time, the lineman has no idea of what's going on behind him. He knows it's a big play when he hears the crowd roaring."

"I'm sure it's difficult for an offensive lineman to change directions and go from one mental mode [pass blocking] to another [run blocking], but I think a scrambling quarterback presents more problems for a defense than it does an offense," said Boston College offensive line coach Mike Maser.

Later when the team is watching the films, the lineman who missed his block knows what happened. Or rather didn't happen. "The quarterback has taken the pressure off that lineman," said Bicknell. "Instead of a sack and all the coaches looking at the film and knowing which guy missed his block, you might be looking at a 25-yard gain. The quarterback has taken the heat off that guy, bailed him out."

Obviously, having the added dimension of a scrambler gives a defense something extra to think about. "When we play someone with a scrambler," said James, "we work on it all week long. We run what we call a rabbit drill. We take the littlest, quickest guy we have and tell him to run around at quarterback. We tell our defensive linemen to stay in his face. We tell them that they might not get a lot of sacks in the game, but if they stay in his face they're going to cut down on his completions."

"We tell our players to be patient," pointed out Edwards. "We tell them to stay in the quarterback's face. We keep telling them that he isn't going to be able to make a living out of scrambling."

Nebraska coach Tom Osborne makes sure his players remember an important fundamental of a good pass rush: stay in the proper rushing lane. "There isn't a whole lot you can do to prepare for a scrambler other than to tell your players to concentrate extra hard on containment on the rush. Tell them to funnel things to the middle."

Bicknell feels that a scrambler or escape artist can cause a defense to play more conservatively than it might normally. "Some teams will go strictly with a four-man rush. I honestly think that a steady diet of blitz against a scrambler is going to get you burned more than you're going to guess right," said Bicknell.

Holtz thinks the key to stopping a scrambling quarterback is to admit that you're not going to stop him completely and go from there. "We try to keep him contained," said Holtz. "It's like we have a fence around him. We try to keep it so he has as little of the field as possible. We'd rather he has 17 yards of the field to work with and not something like 53."

Notre Dame's Joe Montana could turn near disaster into success.

Fatigue is one of the problems a defensive lineman faces when playing against a scrambler. "Playing a scrambling quarterback does change your substituting patterns," pointed out Penn State's Sandusky. "You have to have fresh people rushing the passer and rushing is one of the most exhausting things you ask your defensive linemen to do."

Edwards agrees. "Playing against someone like that tires out your defensive linemen," said Edwards. "You've got to keep talking to them, keep reminding them of that discipline they need to keep going."

Receivers don't have it all that easy with a scrambler running around. They have to run their routes, but they have to also know when to break off and become a blocker as the scrambler heads downfield. Or when to start running an improvised route to get in the open while the scrambler is buying time.

There is also a psychological side to these pesky, waterbug-type quarterbacks. Imagine being a big, beefy defensive lineman who finally breaks free from his man. He has the quarterback in his sights and can almost hear the slap of plastic as he sends the signal-caller flying. In a flash, the quarterback sidesteps the rush. As the big lineman is picking a clump of turf out of his facemask, the crowd—the part of it that likes the other guys—is cheering madly. From elation to frustration in seconds.

"The scrambler is usually beating rushers one at a time," said Holtz. "Sometimes that can make your pass rushers a little hesitant in their rushing."

Nimble feet aren't the only thing that a scrambling quarterback needs. A quick thinker with the ability to run or pass usually tips things in favor of the offense. That obviously makes things even more difficult for the defense, which has to think just a little bit quicker or pay the price. The price can often be six points at its very worst or a loss quickly turned into a gain at the very least.

Coaches aren't immune to the effects of a scrambling quarterback when he doesn't happen to be on your side. "It isn't just a matter of keeping the players up when things go bad," said Sandusky. "The coaches have to be careful about not letting it get them down. It's demoralizing as a defensive coach when you've called the right defense, guessed right. You're in the right coverage for the play they run and then one of those scrambling quarterbacks causes everything to break down. As a coach, you go from the right defense to no defense at all. It's very demoralizing for everyone concerned. Players and coaches

Obviously, college coaches everywhere would like to have a Flutie running around back there. Or a Tarkenton. Or a Montana. A Young. An Elway. But the point is that that combination of throwing ability, running ability and the gift of being able to make quick decisions when people have malice in their hearts and you in their sights is rare. More often than not, throwers can't run and runners can't throw. Those are the football facts of life.

So these scrambling quarterbacks are like works of art. Part of their value is in their rarity. Which is a good thing if you make your living trying to plot how to stop them. Those beleaguered defensive coaches know they only have to put up with this nightmare every once in a while. □

COLLEGE FOOTBALL LEGENDS

JACKIE JENSEN

by Nick Peters,
The Oakland (Calif.) Tribune

Jensen, California's "Golden Boy," was considered one of the most gifted athletes of his time.

The University of California is best known for its academic excellence, priding itself more on its Nobel Prize winners than on its All-Americans.

Yet the Golden Bears also have a rich athletic tradition, one which includes an inordinate number of two-sport superstars who commanded much more attention for their brawn than for their brains.

The legendary Brick Muller, for instance, was the West Coast's initial All-America as a Wonder Team end nearly 70 years ago, and doubled as an Olympic high jump medalist.

In the late '30s, Sam Chapman gained distinction as an All-America halfback on the Thunder Team and later became a solid, if not spectacular, major-league outfielder.

Of more recent vintage, All-America quarterbacks Craig Morton and Steve Bartkowski rejected opportunities to play professional baseball and later starred in the NFL.

But the greatest athlete in Cal history unquestionably is Jack Eugene Jensen, alias The Golden Boy, a 5-11, 190-pound blond, blue-eyed Adonis who was the Frank Merriwell of his day. Only he was for real.

At Cal, Jensen was selected to play in the East-West Shrine game as a freshman. The following spring he pitched the Bear baseball squad to the championship of the first College World Series. He received All-America honors as a senior, leading the Bears to the Rose Bowl. As a major-league baseball player, Jensen appeared in the 1950 World Series with the New York Yankees and was named the American League MVP playing for the Boston Red Sox in 1958.

Following his remarkable career as a football and baseball star, Jensen received attention for his failures in marriage, business and coaching, yet those lapses don't diminish the fact he was among the most gifted athletes in American sport.

Jensen was a coed's dream in his undergraduate days, a campus hero in every sense of the word during that period of innocence immediately following World War II. He broke hearts when he married Olympic diver Zoe Ann Olsen in a celebrity-style wedding in 1949.

But Jensen was as tormented off the field as he was gifted on it. He was obsessed by a fear of flying, an apparent outgrowth of his anguish over being separated from his family.

He also had difficulty adjusting to real life following a storybook athletic career, failing to understand why the adulation and the cheering stopped. His marriage crumbled, investments turned sour and he was reminded of his mortality with a heart attack in 1969.

Not until he met and married Katharine Cortesi in 1968 did Jensen start placing his life in order. They were together almost 15 years, a tranquil and rewarding relationship that ended abruptly when he died of a second heart attack, July 14, 1982, at 55.

TOUCHDOWN

Today, former teammates remember The Golden Boy with god-like reverence. It's as if he competed on a different plateau. Perhaps he did.

Dr. John Najarian, a renowned brain surgeon and head of the University of Minnesota Medical School, met Jensen during their schoolboy days in Oakland.

"I knew him since we were 12," Dr. Najarian said. "We played on the same high school championship team at Oakland High. He was the whole team. The rest of us were just along for the ride.

"In those days, he would pitch a shutout and hit three homers. I was throwing the shot put one day, and he came over and asked me how to throw. His third throw exceeded my best. He could have been a superb decathlon athlete. Nobody came close to his proficiency.

"Jackie was a natural," Dr. Najarian added. "I can't give him a peer as an athlete. The two closest in our day were Herman Wedemeyer and Bob Mathias, but I would put my money on Jensen. There was nothing he tried that he couldn't do well."

Jensen was a legendary prep performer. He was all-city in baseball and football twice, earning honorable mention in basketball though he only played half a season. He also was student body president, a role model for Oakland boys and a heartthrob for girls.

Following 15 months in the Navy, he enrolled at Cal, 20 pounds heavier than his high school weight and ready to make an impact on the college gridiron. Najarian, a tackle, steered him to Berkeley. There were no recruiters beating down the door.

"I enrolled at Cal one year earlier, and I talked Jack into coming, too," Dr. Najarian recalled. "Those weren't the days of pressure recruiting. Today, he'd be a blue-chipper with every college in the country after him."

It didn't take long for Jensen to show the fans and his teammates that he was something special. In 1946 the postwar rush filled classrooms and football rosters, yet Cal coach Frank Wickhorst didn't take long to realize Jensen was no ordinary freshman.

The first time he touched the ball in the season opener against Wisconsin, Jensen returned a punt 56 yards for Cal's only touchdown in a 28-7 defeat. Since 230 players turned out for football that fall, many of his teammates didn't know Jackie. In fact, most of his blockers were startled by that dramatic debut. They'd never blocked for him.

"Jackie was all over the field, dodging and leaping over guys," recalled quarterback Boots Erb, a friend of Jensen since grammar school and later his partner in an Oakland waterfront restaurant.

"The rest of us just stood on the sidelines with our mouths open. Somebody asked, 'Who in the hell is that guy?' It didn't take long for the guys to find out. Jack was one of the greatest athletes I've come across. He could master any sport."

The Bears were 2-7 in 1946, costing Wickhorst his job, but Jensen was a beacon in a fog of despair. He fired a 47-yard touchdown pass in a 14-13 loss to Oregon. He caught a 29-yard TD pass in the 13-6 setback against UCLA.

Jensen caught a 58-yard TD in a 20-6 loss to Washington and scored on a 56-yard run to help down Washington State. Those dazzling runs were only a glimpse of what was to come, triggering a big-play career and football success enhanced by the arrival of Coach Pappy Waldorf from Northwestern in 1947.

But first there was baseball, where his maiden college season was even more impressive than his gridiron debut. Jensen posted a 0.95 earned run average in conference play and he was at his best under pressure as Coach Clint Evans' Bears won the first NCAA title in the sport.

There was the championship game of the Pacific Coast Conference, where Jensen defeated future pro Wally Hood and USC, 5-3. In the Western Regional, Cal confronted Texas' Bobby Layne and his 24-game winning streak. Jensen outpitched the budding quarterback and the Bears earned a trip to the College World Series at Kalamazoo, Mich.

With professional scouts drooling, Jensen hurled in both games as Cal swept Yale, 17-4, 8-7 for the title. The Bulldogs' first baseman was George Bush, now vice president.

That fall, Waldorf's emergence created new enthusiasm for Cal football and Jensen was the sophomore sensation of a 9-1 team which lost only to USC. After turning down offers to turn pro in baseball, The Golden Boy showed why.

A record 83,000 spectators showed up for the second game of the 1947 season at Cal's Memorial Stadium. Jensen rushed for 113 yards in only 13 carries, zipped for a 64-yard TD and intercepted a pass in a 14-7 victory over Navy. Wisconsin was clobbered, 48-7, while he contributed a 23-yard TD pass and a 22-yard scoring sprint.

In the season-ending Big Game with Stanford, Cal was a 10-to-1 favorite, but the game didn't match the odds. In fact, the winless Indians delighted a home crowd of 88,000 by holding an 18-14 lead in the waning moments of play with the Bears on their own 20.

JACKIE JENSEN continued

On the sideline, injured halfback Paul Keckley was begging to return to the lineup. Waldorf agreed, and the rest is history. Jensen took a lateral from quarterback Dick Erickson and started to run.

Suddenly, he spotted Keckley 15 yards downfield and heaved a wobbly pass. Keckley caught it and eluded virtually the entire Stanford defense, completing an 80-yard scoring play with seconds remaining for a 21-18 victory.

"Jackie unquestionably was one of if not the greatest athlete Cal has ever had," Erickson said. "He could have been a pro in anything. He fooled around with tennis, and within a week was beating everyone on the court."

Jensen concluded his sophomore season with 434 yards rushing and a 5.1 average. He passed for 271 yards and two touchdowns. His forte that season, however, was defense. As a back with great instincts, he intercepted seven passes, a school single-season record which still stands.

But there was trouble ahead. Classroom problems ruled him ineligible for baseball in the spring and it was feared he might miss football as well. "I had one helluva defense planned," mused a rival coach. "It was based on Jensen flunking out of school."

That never happened, to the joy of Cal fans who were about to witness the greatest single-season performance by an individual in the school's history. It began in the season-opening 41-19 romp over Santa Clara.

Jensen that day scored on runs of 61 and 62 yards, accumulating an amazing (for that era) 192 yards in only 12 carries. He added 112 yards the next week against Navy and the Bears were well on their way to a 10-0 regular season in 1948.

"If Jensen learns to run well up the middle, he'll be one of the best backs I ever coached," Waldorf declared, apparently to prod his all-purpose fullback. In a crucial 13-7 victory over dreaded USC, Jackie scored both touchdowns and rushed for 132 yards in 27 carries, a workhorse indeed.

In what was to be his final Big Game, Jensen bowed out of Memorial Stadium with yet another heroic performance, one which included a record 67-yard punt. Late in the game, with Cal clinging to a 7-6 lead, Jensen was back to punt in a seemingly hopeless fourth-and-31 situation.

Stanford, closing in for the kill, applied a heavy rush and seemed certain to block the kick. Jensen, using his cat-like instincts, averted disaster and eluded several Indians on a 32-yard run that earned a first down.

"Jackie had the greatest athletic ability of

In this 1948 game against USC, Jensen scored both of Cal's touchdowns and rushed for 132 yards in a 13-7 victory.

anyone I've ever been associated with," said teammate Frank Brunk, who also was Jensen's fraternity brother and roomie. "He had pure coordination. His dexterity was unbelievable. He was an amazing athlete.

"His football talent was incredible. Nobody could run the ends like he could. He'd make all the right cuts. He was the perfect tailback, and it was Pappy's system to let the fullback do it. Jackie put everybody to shame."

Northwestern felt his sting in the Rose Bowl. With 93,000 looking on in Pasadena, Jensen broke through the line and scored on a 67-yard run that created a 7-7 tie with the help of Jim Cullom's conversion kick.

"Jackie was a truly phenomenal athlete," Cullom recalled. "He embodied everything in an athlete, but was a gentleman who never lost his perspective. He was in a different category than the rest of them."

Jensen suffered a cramp on his first carry of the third quarter and had to leave the game. Brunk replaced him and scored the tying touchdown, but the Bears were beaten, 20-14, on a controversial call.

The Golden Boy finished the season—and his college football career—with 1,080 yards rushing, shattering the previous Cal single-season mark of 622 yards by Vic Bot-tari in 1938.

That record stood for 27 years, until

Chuck Muncie surpassed it in 1975. Jensen also held the career rushing mark of 1,703 yards, averaging 6.0 yards per carry. "Jackie was as good a back as I've ever coached," Waldorf concluded.

Following a two-year absence from baseball, Jensen played for the Bears and impressed the scouts more with his power than his pitching. Jackie smacked eight home runs for a new school single-season mark that lasted until Bartkowski bettered it in 1974.

That raw power also produced a tape-measure, 535-foot homer on the Bears' diamond, the drive soaring some 470 feet before landing. Skipping his senior year, Jensen signed with the Oakland Oaks of the Pacific Coast League, launching a successful career as a homer-hitting, base-stealing outfielder.

Baseball's gain definitely was football's loss. The likes of Jensen have never been seen on the California gridiron again, simply because nobody ever did it better as a multifaceted back with unlimited potential.

Jensen returned to his alma mater as baseball coach in the mid '70s. Dissension among his players led to his dismissal. The Golden Boy was gone from Cal for good, but the image of his prowess as an athlete never will be tarnished. □

Shooting the Action

Action is what sport is all about. Our memories of the great moments in sports are freeze-frames of action: a tight end leaping for a pass that just touches his fingertips, a quarterback being sacked, a punt being blocked.

As photographers, we want to make those memories permanent by capturing the event on film. It's not always easy, but there are some tips that will help you make memorable action photographs.

The first rule of sports photography, of course, is to know the sport. . . really know it. Before you pick up your camera, you should know what's happening—and what's going to happen—out there on the field. You can't photograph action unless you can anticipate it. As one expert pointed out, if you see it in your viewfinder, it's too late. . . you've lost the shot.

But you could teach Tom Landry a thing or two about football, you say. Fine. . . that's a start. Now you've got to think about the game in photographic terms. Where is the action most likely to take place? Where should you position yourself to have the perfect shot when things start happening? Where is the sun going to be when you start shooting? What's going to be in the background?

Once you've resolved these questions, you're almost ready to start shooting. First, though, you need to control all the variables you can before the action starts. It may be too late to focus when the touchdown pass is in the air, so think about how you want to handle the situation before it happens. If it's bright and you're using a fast film, you can choose a small aperture (like f/16 or f/22) that will give you great depth of field while still having enough shutter speed to freeze action. Focus in the middle of the area where you think things are going to happen, and then check the depth of field by pressing the preview button. Now you'll be ready when the ball's in the air! (Of course, if you've got an autofocus camera, this kind of anticipation isn't necessary.)

Even owners of autoexposure or program cameras need to think ahead about the proper lens settings. If you've got an aperture-preferred automatic system, in which you select the aperture and the camera picks the proper shutter speed, you may find that the camera's picks are too slow to freeze action. Take a reading on the area before you start shooting, and base your aperture selection on the shutter speed the camera selects. If you've got a shutter-preferred system, chances are you'll freeze the action with your setting, but focus could become a problem because of shallow depth of field. Again, anticipate: take a reading and either select a speed that will give enough depth of field, or be prepared to do some last-second focusing. If you're using a nonautomatic camera, set both shutter speed and aperture early so you won't have to worry about them in the heat of the action.

Play the angles if you want to freeze action. If your subject is coming right at you, speeds as low as 1/125 can stop the movement, but if your subject is at a 45-degree angle, you may need to go to 1/500. And if the subject is at right angles to you, 1/1000 will probably be necessary. There are some tricks you can use if light and film speed don't cooperate. Panning—moving the camera to track a moving subject—lets you get away with a lower shutter speed: 1/60 is about right. If you're planning to pan, a tripod or a single-legged unipod is almost a necessity. And remember that a panned shot will give you a clear subject but a blurred background. . . not a bad idea, since it just about shouts "speed"!

When I was a young man, I was often warned about the dangers of mixed marriages. "Take my word for it, Son," Dad used to say, "mixed marriages don't work."

Dad was wrong, of course. The best marriages are between men and women—and if that isn't mixed, what is?

But Dad was talking about marriages that crossed racial, cultural, ethnic or religious lines, and he was pretty hardheaded about it.

As it turned out, I, being hardheaded myself, ignored Dad's advice and wound up marrying a lovely woman of a different ethnic and religious background. And that has never caused a single problem in our 18 years of wedded bliss. Well, maybe one, but that was resolved when Joy learned to cook Mexican food.

Our marriage was mixed in yet another sense: I am a Sun Devil married to a Wildcat. That's right, I am an alumnus of Arizona State University and my wife graduated from the University of Arizona. And that simple fact has created more friction in our marriage than anything else, save my infatuation with Bo Derek.

Every year, on the eve of the "Big Game," Joy and I get our annual divorce. When we go to the games, we often go with another couple. I sit with his wife; he sits with mine. After the game, we swap back and go home with our own mates.

Ann Van Slyck is also a graduate of ASU and a rabid Sun Devil football fan. Her husband, Tom, is also a devoted fan, but his loyalties lie with his alma mater, Arizona. Despite his affliction, we are close friends. (Though he has tried our friendship on occasion by forcing me to ride in his truck, which bears an "Anywhere but ASU!" bumper sticker.)

Last season, after the Sun Devils had clinched a berth in the Rose Bowl but before the big game with the Wildcats, Ann ordered single roses for her husband, his parents and his sister, all of whom are Wildcat fans, and had them delivered on the eve of the game. "A gentle reminder of which Arizona team was going to the Rose Bowl," explained Ann, grinning.

But the grin faded quickly as she recounted what newscaster Paul Harvey would call "the rest of the story."

After the Wildcats beat the Sun Devils, for a mind-blowing fifth year in a row, Ann received roses from Tom. Dead. Dried up. Spray-painted black.

"Just a gentle reminder of which team was the best in Arizona," said Tom, innocently.

Ann took the gibe in good humor, but her eyes had a determined "I'll-get-even" look. Even though she exacted a small measure of revenge in January when she used all her female wiles to persuade Tom to take her to the Rose Bowl—and watched him suffer as the Devils trounced Michigan—Ann has secret plans for further retribution.

"Let me just say that I don't consider the last five years as losses, but rather as a buildup to the real showdown which will happen this November. When the Sun Devils whip the Mildcats, we'll have our revenge," she predicted.

Like ourselves, the Van Slycks are living proof that mixed marriages can work, even between such archenemies as Wildcats and Sun Devils. In fact, they recently celebrated their 10th wedding anniversary.

Romances between people from enemy camps date back to Romeo and Juliet. Through literature and legend we have come to expect these romances to be star-crossed and tragic, but in real life they are not unlike normal marriages—some good, some not so good.

Take Brad and Barbara Bradford. Brad was a high school football coach in Alabama when he met Barbara, the school's cheerleading coordinator. They met, courted and became engaged during the football season and were married a short time later.

Brad, a graduate of Alabama, did not know that Barbara was an Auburn University alumna until just before their engagement.

"We teased each other a little during the Auburn-Alabama games, but we were really more involved with our high school athletes, so the rivalry wasn't a big deal with us," said Brad.

A good thing, too. Because when Ray Perkins was named to replace Bear Bryant, he asked Brad to join his staff as recruiting coordinator. Among his duties, Brad said, was to supervise the athletic dorm at the university—Bryant Hall.

"As dorm parents, we moved into an apartment within the dorm, and Barbara became the first, and only, Auburn graduate to live in Bryant Hall," he said.

The Bradfords have two sons, and there is little doubt where they will go to college when the time comes, asserts Bradford. "Their blood runs Crimson. It should, as they grew up in Bryant Hall with guys like Mike Shula and Cornelius Bennett as their 'big brothers.' We have a picture of the kids, all in crimson and white, with 'Bama all over them. Almost the first words they learned were 'roll, Tide, roll!'"

While Barbara has come to know and love the Alabama football team, a part of her, deep inside, still stirs when she hears the Auburn fight song, and she secretly believes that her sons may just have "a little Tiger blood flowing in their veins."

With all the traditional rivalries between schools in the same state or neighboring states, such as Oklahoma-Nebraska or

Joe Claude and Jake Bradford are the offspring of an Auburn-Alabama marriage, but Dad's ties to Tuscaloosa appear stronger.

Penn State-Pitt, mixed marriages are bound to happen.

Perhaps none of the traditional football rivalries is more intense than the cross-town rivalry between UCLA and the University of Southern California. (With the possible exception of Army-Navy, but until a few more years of female cadets and midshipmen transpire, there aren't likely to be many mixed military marriages.) But even in the fierce Bruin-Trojan rivalry, mixed marriages occur—more frequently than you'd expect.

Pat and Don Caneer are one example. Don is a hard-core Bruin and Pat is a die-hard Trojan. She drives a car with personalized license plates which read "LOVE USC." His car bears plates which proclaim "LUV UCLA."

"I didn't know he was a Bruin until our third date," said Pat, who admits to being the more rabid fan, "and by then it was too late."

The Caneers, like many other such couples, wager on the USC-UCLA games. "Never any money, though," said Pat. "Just things like my washing the car against his doing dishes for a week, or me not being able to use my charge cards for a month, things like that."

Though the Caneers are separated, they maintain that the rivalry has nothing to do with their separation. "Oh, heck no. In fact, the rivalry has kept us close despite the separation. We are still very good friends and enjoy calling each other to rub it in when one school beats the other," said Pat.

Pat admits to gloating when the Trojans beat the Bruins, "but not until we were safely home. When UCLA lost, Don would drive like a maniac getting out of the parking lot—with me and the kids not saying one word."

The kids, two daughters, stayed loyal to USC. Lisa is a graduate of Troy and Robyn is a senior.

But sometimes the children of a mixed marriage insist on traveling their own roads, away from the alma maters of both parents.

Trojan Lucille Stromme named her first-born son Troy, after convincing her Bruin husband, Deloy, that she was naming the kid after Troy Donahue (a teenage heart-throb of the late '50s and early '60s—no relation to UCLA coach Terry) and because Troy rhymes with Deloy.

"I always thought of him as my Trojan warrior," she lamented. "But when he went to college, he balked at going to an 'inner city' school like USC and went instead to La Verne."

Then there's Lucille's co-worker Jean Meyer. Jean, a graduate of the University of Michigan, moved to California 10 years ago. Her husband, Albert, wanted the kids to go to his alma mater, Michigan State. Jean argued for Michigan.

"But all our kids are confirmed Californians. One went to Irvine, another to Cal State Long Beach and the third to Cal State Fullerton," she said. "I guess they just couldn't fathom life without a beach."

While Lucille and Jean have suffered the disappointment of their offspring attending other schools, and Barbara Bradford faces a day in the future when her sons will go to Alabama, their heartaches are minor compared to Virgie Gonzalez.

Virgie, another Arizona State grad married to a Wildcat, admits that dashing UA football hero Wil Gonzalez swept her off her feet 29 years ago. Wil and Virgie have been arguing for years as to which university their son would attend.

"For a while, I thought ASU would win out," said Virgie, "but now it seems Wil Jr. has decided on the U of A. His father, of course, is busting his buttons, but it just breaks my heart."

Wil Jr. is a fine athlete in his own right, and it is conceivable that he could be playing against Arizona State in a year or two. What will Virgie do then?

"I guess I'll have to cheer for my son's team while he's there, but I'm not getting rid of my maroon and gold," she sighed. "I've put up with one Wildcat for so long, I guess I can handle another."

Hang in there, Virgie. Maybe he'll meet a nice Sun Devil cheerleader and continue the tradition. □

W I N N E R S

Winners. Some people think of them as overnight sensations. Instant stars. The truth is . . . the climb to the top usually is the result of years of hard work. Dedication. A commitment to excellence.

Ricoh is celebrating its 25th Anniversary in America. During this quarter century, we have dedicated our talents and resources to providing the highest quality products for the office and home. Copiers . . . facsimile machines . . . printers . . . and cameras. We stand by our commitment to excellence. Every step along the way.

Send for a "Winners" poster. Include your name, address, and zip . . . along with $2.50 for postage and handling. Mail to Ricoh Corporation, Attention: Corporate Communications, at the address below.

ERIE BOTTLING CORPORATION

How the Great Brands get in Erie hands.

P.O. Box 3226 5701 Perry Highway Erie, PA 16509 868-5234

One candle. That's all the light you need with the new Panasonic OmniMovie™ camcorder.

The light of one candle isn't enough light for some camcorders. The new Panasonic OmniMovie VHS camcorder PV-320 can capture the joy and radiance of your kid's smile. And do it by the light of just one birthday candle.

Because special moments happen without a moment's notice, this OmniMovie camcorder focuses and sets exposure automatically. The 6-to-1 power zoom lets you get really close to your kids. And its advanced solid-state CCD (Charged Coupled Device) imaging system makes your kids look brilliant.

To catch those one-in-a-million action shots, this OmniMovie has a 1/1000 second high-speed shutter. It can capture your kids' expression while they're jumping rope, diving into a pool or grabbing for a ball. Just connect the Panasonic camcorder directly to your TV, and you can play it all back in crystal-clear slow motion or still frame.

YOU MAKE THE CALL

TRUE OR FALSE

QUESTIONS

1. A team is lined up in punt formation. When the ball is snapped back, the punter muffs the snap and then picks the ball up and runs with it. After he has carried the ball 10 yards past the line of scrimmage, he is hemmed in by defensive players, so he stops and successfully punts the ball. Ruling: This is a legal kick.
2. An injured player, for whom a timeout has been called, must leave the game for one play or else his team is charged with a timeout.
3. In an offensive formation, a tailback starts in motion backward, and then just before the snap, the quarterback steps backward with one foot. Ruling: This is an illegal shift.
4. During a free timeout, only one player at a time may confer with the coaching staff at the team area.

5. All replaced players must leave the playing field only at the sideline of their team area. Leaving the field by the end line is a foul.
6. On a scrimmage play the runner is hit, he stumbles, and to regain his balance he puts his hand on the ground. He regains his balance and continues to advance the ball. Ruling: The ball is dead where the runner's hand touched the ground.

7. On an extra-point attempt, the quarterback who intends to hold the ball for the kicker has one knee on the ground, and he fumbles the snap from center. He rises up, retrieves the ball and runs it into the end zone for a two-point conversion. Ruling: The ball is dead when the quarterback fumbled the ball since he had a knee on the ground when he first had possession of the ball.

8. On a kickoff starting the game, the kicker kicks the ball before the referee has blown his whistle and has declared the ball ready for play. The opponents return the ball for a touchdown. Ruling: The opponents have a choice of refusing the penalty for putting the ball in play before it is ready or taking the touchdown.

9. On an extra-point attempt the ball is blocked by a defensive player and bounds laterally, where the kicker picks up the ball and runs it into the end zone. Ruling: This is a successful two-point play.

10. On a scrimmage play the runner intends to sweep wide, but is hit and fumbles. A defensive player recovers the ball in the field of play on the three-yard line, but he has one foot out of bounds when he recovers the ball that was clearly inbounds. Ruling: Ball belongs to the offensive player.

ANSWERS

1. True. A scrimmage kick may be made by the offensive team before a change of possession, either behind or beyond the line of scrimmage.
2. True. To provide protection for players, the rule makers wisely insisted that if a timeout is taken for any player, he must leave the game for at least one play or else his team is charged with a timeout. Teams like to save their timeouts as much as possible, so almost without exception, the injured player will leave the field where he can be properly checked on the sideline.
3. True. If two players are in motion at the same time, both players must come to a stop.
4. False. There is no restriction on several players coming near the sideline and having the coach communicate with them in the interval during a free timeout, television timeout or a timeout charged to a team.
5. True.
6. False. The ball is dead when any part of the runner's body, except his hands or feet, touches the ground.
7. False. The ball remains alive when it will be held or is held for a placekick, provided a had possession of the ball inbounds.
8. False. The ball remains dead until it is declared ready for play.
9. False. The ball becomes dead when it becomes certain that a scrimmage kick on a try will not score a point. It is treated differently than a field-goal attempt, or a punt on a scrimmage play.
10. True. When a player is out of bounds and touches the ball in the field of play, the ball is dead at the spot of such touching. The ball is awarded to the team which last had possession of the ball inbounds.

TAKING COLLEGE FOOTBALL OVERSEAS

by Ray Franks

Not so many years ago the ultimate road attraction in college football was a matchup with the University of Hawaii in the land of palm trees and soft breezes. Today, Honolulu International Airport serves as a refueling stop for players winging their way all over the world in the name of football.

Not since basketball engulfed the world and became an Olympic institution in 1936 has a "Made in the USA" sport crossed so many continental boundaries. In the past three years, American collegians have donned the pads in Australia, Japan, Finland, West Germany, France, Sweden, Holland and Switzerland. On the drawing boards are trips to Great Britain, Scotland, Ireland, Italy and New Zealand.

While the formats in this international competition are as diversified as the destinations, they appear to achieve the same purpose. The travel affords American footballers a chance to see the world and other countries in turn learn how football is played in America.

Sam Ketchman, 73-year-old former coach and athletic director at Ferris State in Michigan, opened the doors to Europe in 1984, and arranges for small U.S. colleges to meet foreign club teams head on. Americans are asked to pay their own airfare and host countries pick up the remainder of the tab. In many cases, U.S. footballers and coaches eat and sleep in their foreign hosts' homes, helping to ease the financial crunch of such an undertaking. For those who experience that relationship, it is a priceless bonus.

Take the case of the Arctic Bowl in June 1985. When Alma College, a Division III NCAA team from Michigan, traveled to Oulu, Finland, players moved in with Finnish families. While it provided a unique insight to that country's customs and mores, the experience was equally rewarding for the hosts.

Lars Nylund, a banker, and his wife, Eija, a teacher, live in Oulu, just 150 miles south of the Arctic Circle. "We especially wanted to have some Americans in our home because of our two boys, Wille, 12, and Johan, 7," they related. "Our sons went on a soccer tour to the south of France last year and lodged in homes. We wanted to reciprocate in this manner. It was a wonderful time our boys will never forget."

Ketchman's company, Athletic Enterprises, asked Alma players to raise $1,300 each for the Arctic Bowl experience. A "lift-a-thon" fund-raiser provided a big chunk of the money. Sponsors pledged funds for each pound a player lifted. With support from friends and family, the players came up with airfare well in advance of the summer trip.

Even though Ketchman tries to find non-scholarship Division III colleges to play European club teams, they still manage to overpower their opponents. Alma pulverized Oulu's Finnish American Football Association representative, 72-0, and it could have been worse. "The experience factor is the big thing," observed Alma coach Phil Brooks. "Football has been played in the United States for 118 years while European club teams have been into the sport only since 1979. You know what happens when we attempt to match up with them in soccer."

While Athletic Enterprises first discovered the European football market in 1984, when William Jewell College played four games in West Germany and Finland, others have since gotten into the act. Finnair Sportours, an arm of Finland's national airline, concentrates on Scandinavian packages, and AML International offers the travel agency approach to "special international sports tours, including American football in Europe and Australia."

"We schedule games, arrange accommodations, and plan guided excursions to important cultural and historic attractions," advertises Jerry Zaborowski, director of sports sales for Finnair's U.S. headquarters in New York. "And that's not all. We help colleges plan fund-raising strategies."

Matt Klir, senior vice president for Florida-based AML, observes: "These kids feel they are playing for America when they go overseas. They are Team USA at that moment, no matter how small the game or the crowd."

While fund raising plays an important role in football excursions to Europe, a completely different concept has been adopted for competition in the Far East. For the past 11 seasons, two U.S. Division I colleges have been invited to play a regularly scheduled game in Tokyo's Olympic Stadium. Flat guarantees are paid much as they are in the states. The same formula was followed for the first Australia Bowl in Melbourne in 1985.

Japanese promoter Atsushi Fujita, who owns a company called Tele Planning, directs the Tokyo fall offering that was labeled the Mirage Bowl in the beginning. It was first underwritten by the Mitsubishi Company of Japan but was renamed the Coca-Cola Bowl last year because of a shift in sponsorship. In '86, Stanford and Arizona met in a regular Pacific-10 confrontation before 55,000 fans.

Fujita, who specializes in sports promotions both in the U.S. and Japan, booked two more Pac-10 teams for 1987. California and Washington State are scheduled to clash in the stadium built for the 1964 Olympics.

"We are working to fill a plane with alums for the trip," said Rick Greenspan, California's director of sports marketing. "Players and fans will spend about a week in Japan and it shapes up to be a great promotion for the school."

A few Mirage Bowls ago, when Southern Methodist engaged Houston in a Southwest Conference game 7,500 miles from Texas, the Dallas school prepared players and fans for the trip to the Land of the Rising Sun. A short course was offered on Japan, giving student-players a taste of the language and customs.

If some American footballers aren't lucky enough to be a part of the Coca-Cola Bowl, they get another shot at playing in Japan each January. For several years now, the Japan Bowl has brought together two all-star teams from the states, reminiscent of the long-standing East-West Shrine and Blue-Gray games.

Australia has been the latest addition to the growing list of countries experiencing "gridiron mania," and the first Australia

Bowl might be the most bizarre of all staged on foreign soil. Following the lead of the Mirage Bowl, Australia's Frontline Communications pitted two Division I teams—Texas-El Paso and Wyoming—in a regular Western Athletic Conference game in December 1985. The Cowboys won the wildly exciting battle, 23-21, before 25,000 fans in Melbourne, but what transpired before and after the event overshadowed the antics at VFL Park.

Spurred on by interest created in satellite showings of NFL football "down under" and a chance to bring two major American college teams to the continent, Aussie promoters got caught up in grandiose plans that quickly expended the original budget. Elegant game programs were printed, Southern Cal's Trojan marching band was contracted to perform and elaborate entertainment arrangements were scheduled.

However, 72 hours before kickoff, a Wyoming and UTEP contingent of 250 players landed at Melbourne and were greeted with the news: "The game's in trouble ... it may not be played." They learned the promoting company had encountered serious financial problems and the president had just collapsed under stress and was hospitalized. The declining state of the Australian dollar and disappointing pregame ticket sales were blamed. The spectacle was $500,000 over budget and the ax started falling in all directions. The Trojan band was told to stay home, and canceled were the welcoming banquet, a barbecue at the zoo and sightseeing tours. UTEP players took a bus to Sydney instead of flying.

Around-the-clock meetings were called, Australian corporate sponsors were summoned and even American boosters accompanying the teams came up with $1,000 by passing the hat. With fingers crossed and officials perspiring, the game unfolded as scheduled. The fans (and a national television audience) were ecstatic with what they viewed and thousands surged onto the field after the game, seeking autographs.

More accustomed to Australian Rules Football, fans had mixed emotions about the style of play.

"It was terribly confusing to start with, but quite easy to pick up once I understood it," said a Melbourne businessman. "I especially enjoyed the long-distance throws."

"I enjoyed it but I would have liked more cheer squads," offered a housewife. "I thought it was great value for the money, and I'd love to go again."

A Melbourne sports reporter ridiculed the use of protective equipment, unheard of in Aussie Rules Football. "I can't understand why you fellows wear all that padding and gear. And those helmets! My goodness, take it all off and I think these players would be 3-foot-6 and four stone [56 pounds]."

An artistic success, financial problems lingered after the smoke had cleared. There was no sequel in '86, but hurdles had been cleared for a 1987 extravaganza. Last spring Brigham Young and Colorado State agreed to a Dec. 5 date in Melbourne. New leadership is on the scene and even a different name—the Melbourne Bowl—has been adopted to help create a new image.

"I think reasonable effort should be made to push ahead for future bowls in Australia," reflected Ted Livingston, assistant athletic director at Hawaii who, on his vacation time, served as game manager at the first one. "I feel the plus factors far outweighed the minuses, and I think it's a great catalyst for strengthening U.S.-Australian athletic relations in general."

While college football overseas has exploded in the last three years, few people remember that Utah State pioneered globetrotting in 1971. While conducting football clinics for U.S. military personnel stationed in Japan the previous summer, Coach Chuck Mills arranged the Silk Bowl game with a Japanese all-star team. Even then several club teams were playing American-style football in Tokyo and Osaka, receiving technical help from Americans stationed in the Orient. That game, attracting 30,000 fans to Tokyo's Olympic Stadium, was won easily by Utah State, which outweighed its opponents by 40 pounds per man.

As then, present American coaches feel the game is incidental to the total experience. "The spirit of international competition was more important than anything else," surmised Alma coach Phil Brooks. "Many of our players had never flown in a plane much less gone overseas. The cultural education and relationships experienced from visiting a foreign country will always be remembered."

What's the future of college football overseas? "Unlimited," believes Ketchman. "Oh, the terrorist scare in '86 caused a couple of games to be canceled but that's behind us. I get calls every week from American colleges wanting to book an overseas game."

There's no doubt American football is helping make the world smaller each day. The time may soon come when Notre Dame will have an afternoon audience with the Pope and take on the Rome Gladiators that night in the Colosseum. The original one, that is. □

SPECTACULAR!

College football can be spectacular... when spectacular people make things happen.

As Dan McIlhany did for Texas A&M against Texas Tech in 1962 when he ran back a kickoff for the winning touchdown with 19 seconds on the clock. Or when Monty Stickles kicked the winning points for Notre Dame over Army in 1957—on the first field goal attempt of his college career. Or when two old friends faced each other for the only time in their college careers, as Doak Walker and Bobby Layne did when SMU played Texas in 1947. Or when Charles "Pinky" Rohn ran back five kicks for LSU touchdowns in 1937. Five, count 'em, five. Spectacular!

1937

Pinky's Great Returns

The true daredevils of football are the kickoff and punt returners. In one play they can go from goal line to goal line by running in a straight line; or they can make the trip through a minefield of flying bodies, where success and failure can be measured by the flick of an ankle or the width of a grasping fingertip.

Few college kick returners ever enjoyed the single-season success of Charles "Pinky" Rohn of Louisiana State, back in 1937. Rohn, a senior that season, returned three punts and two kickoffs for touchdowns, five scores on what most agree is the most exciting play in football.

He was no single-play specialist either—in those days there were no specialists. It was not unusual for the same 11 guys who played offense to run down under punts and kickoffs (and, of course, play defense). Rohn was such a player. When he passed away a couple of years ago he still held the school record of 539 punt-return yards for a single season, coming on 35 returns.

In 1935 and 1936 he played wingback on Coach Bernie Moore's team, when Gaynell

Tinsley was a two-time All-America running back. After Tinsley graduated Rohn moved into his tailback role and finished that season as the team's most valuable player. The Bengals finished with a 9-2 record and were named national champions by the Williamson poll. (LSU also went to the Sugar Bowl after that season, losing, 6-0, to Santa Clara.)

Rohn didn't wait too long to get started. In the second game of the season he took a Texas punt by Charlie Haas at his own 41-yard line and sidestepped every Texas player, sloshing through a muddy field for the game's only touchdown in a 9-0 victory over the Longhorns.

"Pinky was as good a runner as Tinsley," one of his teammates said recently. "But no one really recognized it because Gaynell was such an outstanding player that it was difficult, I guess, to think that we could come up with someone so good, so quickly. But Rohn had done everything the previous two years as a wingback, and that included a bit of punting.

"When he moved into the No. 1 tailback spot we used the quick kick as one of our weapons because Pinky was so good. In those days teams thought nothing of punting on first down to try to get a break deep in another team's territory, or hope for a poor return kick that would give it good field position."

Then Rohn added a 58-yard punt-return TD against Mississippi State, and then one of 95 yards against Louisiana Normal, helping LSU win both games easily.

Walker and Layne— The Texas Twosome

Doak Walker and Bobby Layne will always be considered as a single entry in Texas football history—the state of Texas, that is. For years it seemed that wherever Layne was, Walker was, too, beginning at Highland Park High School in Dallas, where they were close friends and teammates, then on to the football fields of the Southwest Conference, where Layne played for the Texas Longhorns and Walker became the most renowned player in SMU history.

During the '40s no two players captivated that football-crazy state the way they did. Layne was a year older than Walker and had already played a season at Texas when World War II came, and both of them enlisted in the merchant marine. In 1947 Walker was a sophomore and Layne had elected to play his final season of football (he had gone to Texas on a baseball scholarship). The two of them met on the football field for the final time as college rivals when their teams played in Dallas.

In that year the Mustangs still ran Matty Bell's Single Wing offense and they weren't given much of a chance to succeed in the Southwest Conference against Rice or the Longhorns. But they won their first five games, which included a win over Rice, and suddenly all of Dallas, to say nothing of the state of Texas, was in a frenzy about Texas vs. SMU. Layne and Walker had never faced each other as rivals and, in a sense, their teammates became only a backdrop for what was expected to be a great individual battle.

"It was a great game, right from the opening kickoff," Walker said. Layne, who came when he hauled one kick 95 yards against Loyola of New Orleans, the other 93 yards against Louisiana Normal. He didn't have many kickoff return opportunities that season because LSU gave up only five touchdowns, so his production level was about as high as it could get.

Interestingly, while Rohn was performing his unique magic that season, perhaps the most explosive play occurred when end Ken Kavanaugh grabbed a fumble at his own goal line and raced 100 yards for a touchdown in LSU's 13-0 victory over Rice.

But in the half century since Rohn scored his five touchdowns only one player—Robert Woods of Grambling—has ever matched the feat... with some pretty neat feet.

SMU's Doak Walker helped upend Texas—and former high school teammate Bobby Layne.

passed away last year, always thought of the confrontation as a special moment in his college career, as well.

That opening kickoff was an electric moment. Frank Payne of SMU got the ball near his goal line and ran to the 10-yard line, where he lateraled to Paul Page. This play was a favorite with Matty Bell. Texas was caught flat-footed and tried to scramble after Page, who made it 81 yards to the Longhorn 18-yard line.

"Texas might have been stunned at the kickoff but they got together right away and we got only two yards in three tries," Walker recalled. "On fourth down Coach Bell sent in a play-action pass, knowing that Texas would be looking for me to run."

Walker, operating as a quarterback as well as the tailback in the Single and Double Wing multiple offense, faked the run and passed to Dick McKissick on the four-yard line. He had Texas off balance at that point and on the next play quickly handed the ball to wingback McKissick, who ran for the touchdown on just the fourth play of the game. Walker kicked the extra point and SMU led, 7-0, an edge that Texas later would match, but never surpass.

The Longhorns came back and tied the score, 7-7, in the second quarter as fullback Tom Landry (yes, that Tom Landry, who still coaches the Dallas Cowboys) scored on a two-yard run, and Frank Guess kicked the tie-making extra point.

Later in that same period Bell had another surprise for Texas. This time he sent Gil Johnson, the team's best long passer, into the game, and Johnson immediately hooked up with Walker for a 64-yard pass play that carried to the Longhorn one-yard line. McKissick scored the touchdown and Walker kicked his second extra point for a 14-7 lead.

Again Layne gathered his troops, and in the third quarter he passed 15 yards to Byron Gillory for a touchdown. But Guess missed the extra point—and that error haunted the Longhorns for the rest of the season. Not only did SMU win, 14-13, handing Texas its only loss, which probably cost the Longhorns a third-place national ranking behind Notre Dame and Michigan, but Texas wound up ranked fifth. SMU finished third, playing only a 19-19 tie against Texas Christian in their annual Thanksgiving Day game.

Although Walker and Layne did not roll up huge statistics in their personal confrontation, they gave the audience what they had come to see.

Stickles' Haunting of Army

Monty Stickles was born and raised in Poughkeepsie, up the Hudson River from West Point, N.Y., and like most young football players back in the early '50s he longed for the day when he'd be able to play for Earl Blaik at Army.

Earl Blaik knew about Stickles, too, and was anticipating the day when he could come to West Point, because the 6-4, 230-pound tight end was bigger than any player on Army's team and was a very adept pass catcher, kicker and defensive player.

But dreams sometimes come apart. In this case Stickles found that because he was nearsighted he didn't meet West Point's standards. Scratch one boyhood dream, one hot football prospect.

But out in South Bend, Ind., one man's misfortune was another man's good news. Terry Brennan, coach at Notre Dame, suddenly found a very good tight end from Poughkeepsie on his list of incoming freshmen in 1956. Alas, poor Army and Red Blaik would ultimately regret finding Stickles' disability, which, to their sorrow, did not include an impaired right foot.

On Oct. 12, 1957, a bright, warm Saturday in Philadelphia, some 100,000 persons jammed Municipal Stadium to see Army and Notre Dame play football for the first time in the 10 years since that historic series was terminated by mutual consent, following the 1947 game. As it turned out this game matched any of the other classics.

That day no one had any right to believe that Stickles, a third-string tight end, would become the ultimate factor in the game's outcome. Army controlled the game for most of three quarters, holding a 21-7 lead with a minute to play in the third quarter.

But in that final minute Nick Pietrosante, another Irish soph, broke through the right side of Army's defense and ran 65 yards to narrow the gap to 21-13. (Blaik had inserted his No. 2 defensive unit to give his varsity a breather before the start of the fourth quarter on that hot afternoon.) Then the Irish came back and scored again, as Dick Lynch ended a 56-yard march with a one-yard plunge. Army then led by just one point.

Midway through the fourth quarter, Frank Geremia tipped one of Frank Bour-land's passes, and Pietrosante, playing linebacker in the era of one-platoon football, made a diving interception at Army's 26-yard line. Three plays gained only four yards, so Brennan was then faced with the dilemma of how to handle what had become a rather touchy kicking situation.

Don White usually handled the field goal kicking but not with the consistency that Brennan liked, so on a hunch he turned to Stickles, who had never even tried a field goal at Notre Dame.

"I almost fell over when he called me to the sidelines and told me he wanted me to kick the ball," Stickles, now a sportscaster in San Francisco, recalled. "I had done some kicking in high school, but Notre Dame never recruited me with that in mind, and I had no illusions about my great kicking ability.

"But that day I really wanted to beat Army, because I felt they let me down by not allowing me to come to West Point. I was so disappointed at the time, and I just felt something could have been done. That was a bitter youth talking, but still I wanted my revenge."

To Brennan, tabbing Stickles to kick a winning field goal was more of a hunch than an educated judgment. Even if Monty missed the kick, there were still six minutes to play, so Notre Dame had at least one, maybe two, more shots at winning the game. Its offense and greater bulk had begun to wear down the Cadets.

But there would be no second chances needed. Stickles, who had kicked the extra point after the third touchdown, stood at the left hashmark and snapped the ball off the kicking tee (he had a straight-on style, as did most kickers in those days) and boomed a 32-yard field goal for a 23-21 Notre Dame victory.

And he saw the ball all the way.

McIlhany's Miracle Tumbles Tech

The return of Dan McIlhany will live in Texas A&M history.

It is a muggy, wet October night in Lubbock, Texas, and Texas Tech and Texas A&M have battled one another for 59 minutes and 41 seconds before H.L. Daniels of the Red Raiders kicks a 23-yard field goal for a 3-0 Tech lead.

Nice try, Aggies. Too bad. Get 'em next time, right?

That's what most of the crowd of 20,000 were figuring as they began gathering their belongings and heading for the exits—slowly, because they were curious to see just what would happen on the final kickoff and maybe one last play.

Well the spark that can ignite a college football game is sometimes kindled by just such curiosity. On the sidelines by the Aggies' bench a sophomore named Dan McIlhany fought back the depression that was burying his A&M team and heard Coach Hank Foldberg call, "Return left."

McIlhany was the deep receiver on the Aggies' kickoff return teams, so he knew that if he caught the ball, he would have to run 20 yards straight up the field, veer sharply to the left hoping to suck in the coverage, then slip past its pursuit and get to the outside for a big gain. With 19 seconds to play, a big gain would almost have to be a touchdown, or certainly something close to 80 yards to allow the Aggies one desperate chance to score.

"Daniels kicked the ball to me, but I had lined up in the end zone because he boomed them, and we needed a runback," McIlhany, now a veterinarian in San Antonio, recalled. "I caught the ball about three yards deep and headed right to the 20-yard line, but I almost went too far because the coverage had begun to surround me."

At that point, he slipped a tackle as he made a sharp cut and suddenly was outside of Texas Tech's pursuit lanes and began to head toward the sideline. At the 36-yard line he had only Daniels to beat, and the Texas Tech kicker gave it a good shot.

"He got one hand on me, but Jerry Hopkins and Ron Carpenter took care of him and I was in the clear," McIlhany recalled.

"I had stumbled in the near collision with Daniels, but I got going at full steam and all I saw was open field to the end zone."

The trip took 17 seconds, a crawl for someone timed at 10.2 seconds in the 100-yard dash (but without a bunch of hungry tacklers posing as roadblocks), and when it ended McIlhany had only one thought.

"Are there any flags?" was the first thing to go through my mind," he remembered, "but before I could look around to really check, Jerry Pizzatoli, one of my blockers, came running up and yelling, 'No flags, no flags!' and with that he jumped on me and so did everyone else.

"In fact it seems the whole corps of Aggies came out of the stands and the officials penalized us twice for delaying the game, so that our kicker, Mike Clark, had to kick an 18-yard point."

Clark did it and the Aggies won, 7-3. For a week McIlhany was declared the biggest football hero the school had ever had—and this was just five years after John David Crow had won the Heisman Trophy while playing for Bear Bryant.

"It was great, but I did just what I told myself I had to do," McIlhany said. "When you're 19 years old you don't think in terms of moments of glory, but looking back at it now, I guess that's what it was."

And those Aggie fans never have forgotten, which makes McIlhany a legend of sorts.

"I still get post cards and letters from all over the world recalling that night," he said. "Every time the Aggies play Tech the moment is relived in the newspapers. My kids look at me and I know they find it hard sometimes to realize that their father, graying and fortyish, did all those things.

"But I also know it is special to them, too."

Moments like that are special to all of college football.

When Tulsa Passes Filled the Sky

Once, when Rick Eber played for Tulsa back in 1967, he gained more yardage and caught more passes in a game than most college receivers accumulate during an entire season. His teammate Harry Wood had a miraculous game that season, too. In fact, it was the same game.

Eber, a 6-0, 167-pound wide receiver, caught 20 passes for 322 yards; and Wood, the team's other wide receiver, got 13 for 318 yards. Sadly, their opponents at Idaho State had prepared to face Tulsa's running game. Instead, they were inundated by a passing attack that was awesome in its execution. Tulsa won, 58-0.

Eber and Wood each caught three touchdown passes in that game; their combined 640 yards is unsurpassed in college football history, but did not account for all the yardage gained—698 overall.

Ironically, no Tulsa quarterback rolled up big figures in that game because three of them shared the job, said Eber, now in the human resources department of McDonnell-Douglas Corp. in Southern California.

"We spread it around pretty well," he said. "Greg Barton started the game, then Gary Collett came on, and finally Glenn Dobbs, whose dad was our coach. We played in the Dobbs tradition because both Glenn and his brother Bobby before him loved pass offense. Howard Twilley had preceded me by a couple of years as a wide receiver, and he still holds many national records. Throwing the ball was what we did best, and what we did most often."

Tulsa had opened the season the week before against Arkansas and had had a pretty good running game to go with the pass offense. "Coach Dobbs wanted to be a little conservative against a team like Arkansas, figuring, I guess, that we could control the pace a little better with our running game. And if that didn't work, we could go to our pass offense.

"Well, our running game worked real well and we upset Arkansas, 14-12. I'm sure

Idaho State looked at our films and saw our conservative approach, built around a very strong defense [Tulsa had three shutouts in its first six games that season], and the run, and figured we would come out the same way.

"Instead," he continued, "we came off the bus throwing the football, and we didn't stop all night. Their defenses were set up with a lot of man-for-man coverage but they weren't good enough to sustain it. They had no deep zone coverage either, so it was a total overmatch, something like a Single Wing team trying to keep up with Dan Fouts and the San Diego Chargers."

Eber's 20 catches were the most ever in one game at that time, but he wasn't aware of the feat when it was happening. "We got into the huddle, and Dobbs had been told coming off the bench that I was close when I caught my 18th pass.

"He called a pass route in the huddle that really wasn't mine, but he winked at me and said as we broke for the line of scrimmage, 'I'll force it if I have to.' He did and I caught the pass, my 19th in that game. When we got into the huddle, he did the same thing and then said, 'Get ready.' I still didn't know what he was talking about, but he threw me a perfect pass and I dropped it.

"When we went back to the bench I discovered how close I was, so then it was a matter of hoping the defense could get the ball back to us for one last shot, because it was late in the game. They did, and I got the 20th catch in the next series."

As it happens, the significance of some records can become lost in the hurly-burly of a season, and that's what happened to Eber. He admits to being an overachiever in football, always reaching beyond himself to get more.

"I never took time to just appreciate the fact for its own sake," he said. "I couldn't be satisfied with my achievements at that stage of my life because I was so caught up in my team and college athletics. No single feat seemed good enough. Later, though, I thought back to all I did and I began to look at that record with the fondest of memories. It was a wonderful day in my life, and I am very proud of all that I accomplished.

"Actually, it means more to me as each year passes, because I can put everything I did in college football into the right perspective. Twenty years later, I enjoy the experience for what it really was, and I gladly share its memories with anyone who still remembers."

The Year of Bigfoot

Maybe it was the water. Maybe it was the scent of sagebrush in the air... or the smell of oil and cattle. Or maybe it was the absence of a shoe on the right foot.

Whatever it was, it certainly affected the kickers in the Southwest Conference throughout the '70s. Footballs kept being rocketed farther and farther than anyone ever expected possible.

In 1977 the kicking ace was Russell Erxleben of the University of Texas. He was treading in the footsteps of Tony Franklin of Texas A&M and Ove Johannsson of Abilene Christian, who had kicked record-making shots the previous season. There were six field goals of more than 60 yards kicked in 1977—Erxleben accounted for half of them, including the NCAA's longest to that time, a kick of 67 yards against Rice.

But the mysterious "it" was to remain in the Southwest at least two weeks longer. On that day Texas played Arkansas, and Erxleben watched Steve Little of the Razorbacks equal his 67-yarder. Erxleben's own successful kicks of 58 yards and 52 yards, which helped Texas gain a 13-9 victory on that day, were labeled by one spoiled SWC observer as "ordinary field goals."

Today those 67-yard field goals rank as tops in the NCAA record books, equalled only by Joe Williams' 67-yard effort, knocked home for Wichita State the following year. No one has bested that mark during the '80s, when only six field goals of 60 yards or more have been kicked.

Whatever else motivated Erxleben's excellent performance, the score of the game was not the primary factor.

"I never kicked any differently if we were ahead or behind," Erxleben said. "You can't afford to change your rhythm because kicking is like a golf swing. The only thing you think about is hitting the ball properly, reer punting average is also a Longhorn best—as are his 78 field goal attempts, his 49 successful field goals and that 67-yarder against Rice.

Actually, the record book is still full of Erxleben's achievements: most 60-plus yard field goals in one season, three in 1977 (in four attempts); longest average distance, 50.2 yards in 26 attempts; and longest average made, 48.3 yards for 14 kicks—the latter two records set in 1977.

"How did I do it?" he repeated the question put to him.

"I don't know, except that I just did it," he said. "No kicker can tell you why he makes field goals but we all can tell what happens when we miss. Most of it, if all the physical skills are in order, is a matter of confidence. When you boom in a big one of 60 yards once, you believe you can do it all the time. So you go onto the field feeling you'll succeed and the pressure is lifted somewhat. It's all mental, just what everyone says about kickers."

Of course, Erxleben did nearly all of his kicking, home and away, on artificial surfaces so there was never any problem of rutted turf or the kicking tee not being properly set on the ground. If you think that doesn't make a difference, talk to the kickers who ply their trade in the Northeast during late November after a freeze or a rain, or who are kicking on a grass field that has been used five or six times recently.

Whatever the reason, Erxleben left behind a legacy for every college kicker to try to emulate. But that will be hard—unless, of course, the player is kicking in the Southwest Conference during another decade when Saturday after Saturday the water tastes a bit funny, if there is water at all... or the smell of sagebrush is hanging in the air... or whiffs of oil and cattle are wafting past the kicker. □ but all of that is done in a swinging motion that must be the same all the time. When kickers start thinking too much, or trying to change something, they get messed up."

Erxleben was also a punter for the Longhorns. He still ranks first in the Texas record book with his 72 punts in the 1978 season and with the highest average for one season, 46.6 yards in 1976. His 44.2-yard ca-

Programming a VCR shouldn't bring you to your knees.

You are not alone. Millions of Americans who figured a way to get through Algebra, survived Chemistry and may be considered leaders in their chosen fields, turn to a quivering mass of jelly when trying to tape "The Blob."

Because even though you spent hundreds of dollars for a programmable VCR, most manufacturers don't seem to have spent a dime's worth of time on it. The directions make tax forms look like child's play. The controls can only be reached by a Yoga master. And even after you've completed the six or seven "simple steps" needed, you can only sit back and pray you got it right.

Toshiba now has a way to program that's completely foolproof. All programming functions are displayed right on the TV screen in bright, clear computer graphics. By simply touching the screen with our unique light-pen or using the remote control, you can program anything. If you make a mistake, you can see it and correct it easily. So it's almost impossible to screw up.

All our digital VCR's also have superb sound, picture quality, and the crystal-clear special effects only digital technology can provide.

manship. He served as a leader in rule development and game innovations which helped to increase football's popularity. It was Camp who started the tradition of selecting an annual college All-America team to honor the nation's outstanding players.

Today the traditions and ideals established by Walter Camp are carried on by the Walter Camp Football Foundation. The Foundation sponsors the annual selection of the Walter Camp All-America team, and since 1967 they have presented a Walter Camp Player of the Year Award and a Walter Camp Coach of the Year Award.

Last February Foundation members and guests gathered at Yale University Commons for the 1986 awards dinner. Members of the 1986 Walter Camp All-America team were honored. Miami's sensational quarterback, Vinny Testaverde, was presented the Walter Camp Player of the Year Award. Jimmy Johnson of Miami received the Coach of the Year Award.

Beyond the established football traditions of Walter Camp, the Foundation has become involved in a relatively new tradition—the support of charitable and other worthwhile organizations. The annual dinner generates funds that are distributed to charitable organizations and youth-related groups.

GET YOUR SOUVENIRS!

by Vic Carucci,
Buffalo News

When it comes to souvenir buying, there are few creatures more fickle than the college football fan.

Concessionaires throughout the country stay awake nights trying to anticipate how fans' tastes will run. They know there's always going to be a strong market for the standard stuff—caps, T-shirts, sweatshirts, pondering the reasons a particular souvenir becomes red-hot or suddenly turns stone-cold. For instance, Bush had modest expectations when his inventory for a game at the University of Wisconsin last season included boxer shorts with "Eat 'Em Up Badgers" printed on the seat. It was snowing and, he thought, if any underwear was going to sell that day, it would be of the thermal variety.

Much to his amazement, however, hundreds of fans began buying the shorts. Not only that, but few of the buyers could wait to get home to check the fit. Most simply wore them over their long pants or, in many cases, instead of their long pants. Numerous members of Wisconsin's marching band provided free advertising by donning them during the band's traditional hour-long performance after the game.

"We must have sold 50 dozen that day," Bush recalled.

There was another time at Wisconsin when he felt skeptical about the success of one of the simplest items he had ever seen—cardboard eyeglasses like those used for viewing 3-D movies minus the lenses. They looked more like Lone Ranger-type masks than glasses, but that didn't stop him from selling 3,000 at a dollar each.

For a Sun Bowl appearance by the University of Georgia, Bush sold one of the seat cushions, pompons, pennants and buttons—but they never really have a handle on the saleability of novelty items.

There are times when they can't stock enough boxer shorts, cardboard eyeglasses, piñatas, foam-rubber No. 1 fingers, facial stickers and hand puppets.

And there are times when they stock way too many.

"Something that was good today may not be so good tomorrow," said Leroy Bush, president of Collegiate Concessions in Birmingham, Ala. "People may want an item for an entire year. Then, they grow tired of it and want something else."

more off-beat souvenirs of his career, a Georgia bulldog piñata. He is quick to admit the $15 he charged was about $12 above the normal price of piñatas found in stores in El Paso, Texas. But that didn't prevent 1,500 from being sold.

Talk about fickle fans, three years ago concessionaires could barely keep pace with the demand for foam-rubber No. 1 fingers that fit over the hand. Now they don't even excite the fans of top-ranked teams—the fans who could accurately declare themselves No. 1.

The biggest complaints about the fingers were that they were cumbersome and tended to obstruct the view of those sitting behind them. Manufacturers thought they could resolve the problem by reducing them from 36 to 20 inches, but sales continued to plummet.

"They just died," said Bill Stillwell, president of Southern Concessions in Phenix City, Ala. "So, too, did the 10-gallon hats made of foam rubber."

Three years ago, almost everywhere you looked in a stadium, you saw fans displaying school logos on their faces. At first they had them painted on, but it wasn't long before someone came up with facial stickers made of vinyl. They sold well at first, then the market evaporated.

A similar short-lived fad was the "whom-pit," a football-player hand puppet with an arm that popped out to wave the pennant of your favorite team.

Among the bigger flops in recent years is the "fan-clapper." It had plastic blades and could simply be used as a hand-held fan. However, when you folded it, held the bottom and shook it vigorously, the blades made a clapping sound as they hit each other. The idea was to find out what kind of noise 10,000 or so would make, but sales never came remotely close to that.

One concept that sounded great, but sold terribly, was instant personalized buttons. A man would take your picture and, 60 seconds later, have the print mounted on the center of a button that bore the team logo of your choice and the date and site of the game.

Four years ago Stillwell bought 50,000 polo paddles, which have a rubber ball attached to a wooden paddle by a rubber string and challenge the user to keep the ball bouncing off the paddle. Today he still has about 49,000.

He also purchased 1,000 silk corsages, assuming they would be very popular among female fans. Today, he still has about 800.

But Stillwell hasn't given up. He believes one of the hottest-selling items in 1987 will be rose-colored sunglasses with an "I love..." slogan on the frame. "We had them at the end of the '86 season, and they sold really good."

Wisconsin athletic director Elroy Hirsch makes a pitch for Badger memorabilia.

As Bush is quick to point out, "Everybody's got something that no one can live without."

Not all manufacturers can simply slap a school's name on a product and sell it as a souvenir. Many have to first check with Collegiate Concepts, an Atlanta-based firm that serves as the exclusive licensing agent for about 82 schools throughout the country and 10 postseason bowl games. If the product is approved by Collegiate Concepts, the manufacturer then must pay for the use of the name and/or logo of the respective college or university.

One of the company's founders is Bill Battle, former head coach at the University of Tennessee.

"We probably get more products through our office than anybody other than a department store," Battle said. "It's like Christmas every day around our office. We wonder what the mailman will bring."

There are a number of souvenirs that challenge or exceed the boundaries of good taste. T-shirts bearing swear words or risqué pictures are the most common. There also are miniature toilet seats with mascots sitting on them.

Though many novelties are manufactured, they always have and probably always will take a back seat to the standard stuff. According to Bush, caps and T-shirts account for roughly 70 percent of his sales.

"That's pretty much the case with everybody in my line of work," he said. "You could make money if caps and T-shirts were the only things you sold."

Consider Battle's description of the ideal weather conditions for a concessionaire: "It's sunny when the fans go into the stadium, so they buy caps to keep the sun out of their eyes. Then it rains, so they have to buy jackets or umbrellas to keep dry. Then it turns cold, so they have to buy sweatshirts to keep warm. If it does all that in one day, that guy has made a lot of money."

What's in it for the schools beyond licensing fees?

"Exposure," Battle said. "Five years ago, if you wanted to buy university merchandise, you could only get it at the stadiums or bookstores. I don't think college athletics are more popular today than they were five years ago, but now, through the efforts of licensing, you can find the same merchandise at retail stores everywhere. Go in any mall in Atlanta, and you'll find merchandise for 10 or 15 schools, and not just for the local ones."

"When I was coaching at Tennessee, the thing I wanted people to do was wear the school colors. I wanted everybody in Knoxville to wear the school colors. And time after time, I'd hear a recruit comment, 'Man, this is an orange city. Everybody here wears orange.'"

"It's funny, what motivates kids. I used to think the athletes I was recruiting would make rational decisions. But sometimes, their decisions were just plain goofy. We've had players choose a particular place because they liked the coach's car or his alligator shoes... or they just liked the school colors." □

"HOW I MADE $18,000 FOR COLLEGE BY WORKING WEEKENDS."

When my friends and I graduated from high school, we all took part-time jobs to pay for college.

They ended up in car washes and hamburger joints, putting in long hours for little pay.

Not me. My job takes just one weekend a month and two weeks a year. Yet, I'm earning $18,000 for college.

Because I joined my local Army National Guard.

They're the people who help our state during emergencies like hurricanes and floods. They're also an important part of our country's military defense.

So, since I'm helping them do such an important job, they're helping me make it through school.

As soon as I finished Advanced Training, the Guard gave me a cash bonus of $2,000. Then, under the New GI Bill, I'm getting another $5,000 for tuition and books.

Not to mention my monthly Army Guard paychecks. They'll add up to more than $11,000 over the six years I'm in the Guard.

And if I take out a college loan, the Guard will help me pay it back—up to $1,500 a year, plus interest.

It all adds up to $18,000—or more—for college for just a little of my time. And that's a heck of a better deal than any car wash will give you.

FOOTBALL GOES HOLLYWOOD

by Bob Keisser,
Los Angeles Herald Examiner

Over the years, football has become as much a part of American movies as popcorn and has both been a star and served in a supporting role in movies like "Jim Thorpe—All American" with Burt Lancaster, "Horsefeathers" featuring the Marx Brothers, and "Semi-Tough" with Burt Reynolds and Kris Kristofferson.

Burt Lancaster and Jimmy Stewart. John Wayne and Charlton Heston. Jack Lemmon and Walter Matthau. Groucho Marx and Harold Lloyd. Lucille Ball, Judy Garland and Debbie Reynolds. Alan Alda and Robin Williams. Nick Nolte and Warren Beatty. Burt Reynolds, Pat O'Brien and President Reagan.

It could be the honor society of the Academy of Motion Pictures, or winners of an American Film Institute achievement award. But what this select group represents is a partial list of the famous actors and actresses who have worked in films representing an important segment of American society.

Football. Obviously, a lot of great performers would rather play than punt.

The football movie is as American as the old Saturday morning double feature. And being typically American, it has found itself host to a variety of different talents and subject to numerous interpretations. The talent roster includes the likes of:

Harold Lloyd: The famed comedian of the '20s was in the first football film ever, "The Freshman" in 1925. The film holds up exceedingly well today because of its spirit. Lloyd plays Speedy Lamb, an ambitious young man who goes from waterboy humility to football success as one only can in movies.

Charlton Heston: The chiseled face of Ben Hur fit in well as an aging quarterback of the New Orleans Saints who decides his life and happiness rely on staying "Number One."

John Wayne: The late, great actor was a football player at USC by the name of Marion Morrison, and in 1953 played the role of a coach who helped rebuild the pride and play of an Ivy League school in Warner Bros.' "Trouble Along the Way."

Alan Alda: Before he became the favorite M*A*S*H heartthrob of sensitive television viewers, he played the role of George Plimpton in "Paper Lion," adapted from Plimpton's biography of his brief fling with football.

Pat O'Brien: The late star played the legendary "Knute Rockne, All-American" in one of his most memorable roles. The life of the former Notre Dame coach was worth the reverence and sense of history O'Brien gave it, not to mention the chance to see our future President play a dying athlete.

Robin Williams: The grand comedian who does not fancy himself any kind of sportsman used his clumsiness effectively in the smile-making "The Best of Times" as a cursed former high school star who wants a second chance.

Burt Reynolds: The former Florida State running back has been in two football movies and used his abilities as an athlete and comedian to score well critically and at the box office. "Semi-Tough" spoke out on football. "The Longest Yard" spoke out on life and integrity. Both spoke to his talents.

****
 "The Longest Yard," one of Reynolds' best films ever, was also the best football film ever. It provided an abundance of social issues to consider, had a terrific cast and featured the best football scenes ever. The game played between the guards and cons was real.

Reynolds played a former NFL star jailed for betting, and gets a forced "opportunity" to coach a team of convicts, offered by the warden, Eddie Albert, to be used as fodder for his title-winning team.

The film works on four levels. It presents a moral dilemma for Reynolds, who must create and lead a team of cons knowing he's expected to lose. He sold out once before; will he do it again? It presents a classic Good versus Evil confrontation but with all the symbolism interchanged. The criminals are the cons, but the guards have their own sense of violence and inequality. The cons wear black, but only after stealing the jerseys that were supposed to belong to the guards.

It shows violence as a universal institution and not something limited to the men behind bars. And it shows that rehabilitation is not something learned, but something felt, and that personal pride of accomplishment in an "organized" setting can be an asset.

"I was very proud of the film, extremely proud, because of what it brought to the industry," said Reynolds, who played 2½ years at Florida State before an injury ended his career. "It was also a real entree for me and the rest of my career."

"We wanted it to be authentic and we went to a lot of extremes. We practiced for a while and the look was fine but it didn't sound like an NFL game. So we put microphones into the equipment so we could get the sound."

"We also filmed plays over and over again. Sometimes the defense would know where I was going. Sometimes they wouldn't. Sometimes we'd tell them I'd do one thing and then I'd do another. We wanted to get as much realism as possible."

"It really was a game. Guys really were tackling and hitting, and there were a lot of injuries. We had a guy like Ray Nitschke [the former Packer] playing a guard, and he did a great job. The problem was, put a helmet on him and he thinks it's for real. I took some licks that were staggering."

In the '20s and '30s football and college life were featured in movies like 20th Century-Fox's "Pigskin Parade."

Reynolds held up well and earned the respect of all of the pros and ex-pros who played on the two teams. "I took a cheap shot late in the filming one day. As I walked back to the huddle, I saw Ray beating the bleep out of the guy. It was his way of saying I'd proved myself."

"There was a sense of karma to the entire picture. There was a key play during our game when I threw a tackle-eligible pass to Ernie Wheelwright. Ernie caught the pass and made it to the one-yard line, which is where we wanted to be for the game's last play."

That last play saw Reynolds reverse field twice on a sweep and dive into the end zone for the winning score. "I probably scored on seven or eight takes," he said, "and got clobbered on 50."

Reynolds' affinity for football has continued well beyond his college career. "As the years go by, I get better and better. I was a star in my own mind," he said with a laugh. He stays close to the Seminoles' program and Coach Bobby Bowden, often going out of his way to talk to young prep stars on the verge of college careers.

He did a second film in 1977, "Semi-Tough," which gave him a slightly different role and less football activity. The film talked more than it played, but it still included some live scenes with the Dallas Cowboys.

"By then I was smarter about football movies," said Reynolds. "I played at Florida State but that's a lot different than playing pros. Kris [Kristofferson] and I were remarking one day that we were probably in the best shape of any 40-year-olds. I told Kris 'If they ask you if you've played before, do yourself a favor and say no. Don't let your ego get in the way.'

"So Too Tall Jones and Hollywood Henderson come out and say 'Hey, I heard you used to play?' I said 'Nah, I'm kind of a pansy.' Kris says he played at Cal Poly. And they both say 'Cal Poly? We heard about Cal Poly. They're great.'

"So on a play in our film, we're running a sweep and Kris is blocking down as a wide receiver when the entire Dallas defense piles on him screaming 'Cal Poly, Cal Poly, Cal Poly.' Kris hurt his wrist and never played another down in the film."

****

There are numerous other greats who put on shoulder pads and a pair of cleats, or supported same in some fashion, in a football movie. Fewer are the categories that football films have attempted.

The Old College Try: Think movies of today repeat themes often? Consider the fact that the success of "The Freshman" starring Harold Lloyd spawned a glut of movies that spliced college life with football.

"The Freshman" was made in 1925. In the next seven years, at least 25 more films set in a college and with a strong football flavor were released. The two were constant companions and the format fit beautifully. You needed a hero (or two) and a pretty girl. Where better to find them than on a football field.

In 1929 Warner Bros. made "Forward Pass," where Douglas Fairbanks Jr. played the quarterback who threw passes at Loretta Young. In 1930 Warner's made "College Lovers," where Marion Nixon played the flirt who attracts the two star players of the team.

In the same year, "Maybe It's Love" portrayed Joan Bennett as the daughter of the Upton College president who is called on to "recruit" the best players in the country. She succeeds, naturally. In "College Humor," Bing Crosby plays the professor and Jack Oakie the football player who has to be initiated into college society. "Pigskin Parade," a 1937 film by 20th Century-Fox, followed the same format, with a lot of singing and dancing by Judy Garland.

In each of these films, football ideology was submerged on behalf of a simple plot line. Football was the stage on which the performers were asked to operate. It could have been any sport, or non-sport, and the film still would have succeeded on its own level.

Pure Football: The flip side of "college" movies that featured football, love, song and dance were "football" movies that emphasized a gridiron great. The last two film biographies of football personalities were 1984's "The Bear," starring Gary Busey in a look at the life of the late, great Alabama coach, Paul Bryant, and 1971's "Brian's Song," featuring James Caan as Brian Piccolo, the former Wake Forest and Chicago Bears back who died of leukemia.

Those have been the only ones since 1954, when Republic Pictures made "Crazylegs," a look at the life of former Wisconsin and Los Angeles Rams great Elroy Hirsch. There were a dozen more before that, including "(Tom) Harmon of Michigan" and "The Spirit of West Point," which focused on Glenn Davis and Doc Blanchard.

The most famous film bios focused on Knute Rockne and Jim Thorpe. "Jim Thorpe—All-American" serves football much better than it did the real issues of Thorpe's life (an Indian struggling in American society). Burt Lancaster, in the title role, gets ample opportunity to play football both as a student at Carlisle Indian School and in the pros.

The Rockne story remains one of the best football films ever because it operates on so many different levels. It included good film footage of Notre Dame as well as practice scenes featuring the real actors and extras. It has a football historical sense, since it shows the growth of Rockne the coach and how he changed the game with new formations.

It was a vehicle for O'Brien, who could be crusty and warm at the same time, and a chance for a 29-year-old actor named Ronald Reagan to play a classic role of a dying athlete, George Gipp.

"I've always suspected that there might have been many actors in Hollywood who could have played the part better," President Reagan has said. "But no one could have wanted to play it more than I did. And I was given the part largely because Pat O'Brien kindly and generously held out a helping hand to a beginning young actor."

"I'd been trying to write a story about Knute Rockne. I confess I had someone in mind to play the Gipper. I didn't have many words on paper when I learned the studio that employed me [Warners] was already preparing a story treatment for the film."

Gipp was a talented running back for Notre Dame who had a love-hate relationship with Rockne. He died tragically while still in college at the age of 23. On his deathbed he revealed to Rockne a desire that someday the Irish remember his toughness. "Sometimes, Rock, when the team's up against it, when things are wrong and the breaks are beating the boys, tell them to go in there with all they've got and win just one for the Gipper."

The film altered time for the purpose of dramatic punch. Gipp's teammates rallying to honor his deathbed wish.

In reality Rockne waited to invoke Gipp's remembrance at an appropriate time. "Rockne could have used Gipp's dying words to win a game any time. But eight years went by following Gipp's death before Rock revealed those dying words, his

The Top 10 and the Bottom Five

College football has its Top 20, so here's a Top 10—and a Bottom Five—of football films.

TOP 10

1. The Longest Yard (Paramount, 1974)—The film starring Burt Reynolds made enough social comments to fill a sociology book, but also provided the best football action and sense of tension. Reynolds' co-stars included Eddie Albert as the evil warden, Ed Lauter as one of the guards, and a host of ex-football players in various roles—among them Joe Kapp, Sonny Sixkiller, Mike Henry, Ray Nitschke and Ernie Wheelwright.

2. The Best of Times (Universal, 1986)—The football action was not expansive, but what little existed was classic. More importantly, it showed the relationship of football to small towns. Robin Williams dropped the ball against the city rival 20 years ago and hasn't lived it down since, so he gets the game replayed. The script keeps viewers from automatically assuming that Williams will be vindicated. Kurt Russell, Jack Palance and Kate Olsen give great support.

3. Knute Rockne, All-American (Warners, 1940)—The classic film gives Pat O'Brien a chance to shine, Ronald Reagan a sweet role, and fans a sentimental but stirring view of a great American's life. The football scenes were excellent.

4. All the Right Moves (Universal, 1985)—Tom Cruise played a high school football star who deals with a despotic coach and the pressure his small town feels regarding football and a closed steel mill. The football scenes were excellent.

5. Paper Lion (United Artists, 1968)—Author George Plimpton experimented with a variety of sports and wrote about his experiences. Here, he auditions for the Detroit Lions as a quarterback, with Alan Alda playing Plimpton. The book was spirited and offered good insight into football, and the film followed the same formula.

6. North Dallas Forty (Paramount, 1979)—A bit preachy at times and flat when the action moved off the field, but the basic moral was excellent and neatly handled by the underrated Nick Nolte.

7. Semi-Tough (United Artists, 1977)—Disappointing in its football scenes, it did offer a look at its off-the-field world neatly. The comedy of Reynolds, Kris Kristofferson, Jill Clayburgh and Robert Preston was enjoyable and made up for whatever it lacked.

Everybody wanted to get into the act, including Gus, a mule who kicked 100-yard field goals.

8. Trouble Along the Way (Warners, 1953)—John Wayne plays a football coach given the task of whipping a bunch of Catholic small-college rejects into a team that can earn enough to save the parish. A bit sentimental and perverse in the way bigger players are recruited, it has a good script and good football scenes.

9. The Freshman (Associated Exhibitors, 1925)—Harold Lloyd's film holds up well because of his genial spirit and the spirit of the college campus.

10. College Coach (Paramount, 1933)—A good football film featuring O'Brien as a coach (prepping for the Rock) with a cold exterior but good ability, who alienates his players.

BOTTOM FIVE

1. Number One (United Artists, 1969)—Whatever moral point was offered by the Charlton Heston vehicle was lost in flat chat and a lack of football interaction. Heston was a horrible choice as an athlete, the camera work on filmed sequences was horrible, and most of the clips were NFL archive stuff.

2. Fighting Youth (UI, 1935)—A spy thinks breaking up college football would destroy the American Constitution. Enough said.

3. Easy Living (RKO, 1949)—The script was convoluted, dealing with a player, Victor Mature, with a selfish wife, Lucille Ball as a "friend," and a heart condition. He learns a lesson and viewers learn Mature plays football like a statue.

4. Saturday's Heroes (RKO, 1937)—This was a messy film dealing with college players being paid, the star player of Calton, Van Heflin, quitting and then coaching the rival team to victory.

5. Gus (Buena Vista, 1976)—A mule kicks field goals. □

deathbed wish," recalled the President.

"And then he told the story at halftime to a team that was losing, and one of the only teams he had ever coached that was torn by dissension and jealousy and factionalism. The seniors on the team were about to close out their careers without learning or experiencing any of the real values that a game has to impart.

"None of them had known George Gipp. They were children when he played for Notre Dame. It was to this team that Rockne told the story and so inspired them that they rose above their personal animosities. For someone they had never known, they joined together in a common cause and attained the unattainable."

Sideline Sidelights: The college movies used football as a vehicle at times and so did a lot of later comedies. One of the most notable was one of the Marx Brothers' search-and-destroy films, "Horsefeathers." Harpo, Chico and Groucho lampooned every aspect of society they could find, from war ("Duck Soup") to opera ("A Night at the Opera"). Football and college life got the treatment in "Horsefeathers."

Groucho played the dean of Huxley College who went shopping for players to try and beat rival Darwin. Failing that, the Marx Brothers took the field and broke every rule imaginable to win.

Two comedians who often paired up were Walter Matthau and Jack Lemmon. Their performance as "The Odd Couple" is their best known work but they combined for "The Fortune Cookie" before that. Lemmon plays a photographer KO'd on the sidelines by the star running back, Matthau his shyster brother-in-law who talks him into a lawsuit.

There is little football action, but the setting is important to the plot. And the pressure of keeping an NFL job is an undercurrent as played by the football player Ron Rich.

"M*A*S*H," the film, was a satire on war and the image of America's fighting men. The traveling surgical team, the 4077th, was comprised of peculiar military types who had no more business being involved in war than the Marxes had in playing football.

The short football scene in "M*A*S*H" was an allegory for the relationship between these non-combat officers and the all-too-typical military leader. The "M*A*S*H" team got mashed by a superior unit led by a martinet, but there were moments of revenge.

Two other films used football as a stage for the terror that exists in society. Universal made "Two Minute Warning" in 1976, that used the Super Bowl as a setting for a terrorists' assassination attempt on the President. "Black Sunday" (Paramount, 1977) starred Bruce Dern as a crazed terrorist who plans to annihilate the Super Bowl crowd with a low-yield nuclear blast from the Goodyear blimp hovering over the stadium.

The Super Bowl also played a role in "Heaven Can Wait," Warren Beatty's popular remake of "Here Comes Mr. Jordan." Beatty played a football star taken from the earth prematurely by a busybody angel and robbed of his chance for football glory. There's more talk than football action, but the scenes of Beatty getting crunched by former Ram Deacon Jones were worthy of the genre.

Social Commentary: Most of the issue-oriented football films were made in the '70s and '80s, but not all. "College Coach," a Warners release in 1933, dealt with a coach (Pat O'Brien) who was not liked by his players (including Dick Powell) but got results nonetheless. It had its share of singing and dancing like other "college" movies, but it made a point about discipline and teamwork that was missing in other movies of the era.

The two films best remembered for what they had to say about football were "Semi-Tough" and "North Dallas Forty," a Paramount 1979 film. Both of the books on which they were based were written by men close to the game and aware of its moral side.

"Semi-Tough," probably the best football fiction ever, was written by Dan Jenkins, the former Sports Illustrated writer. Jenkins created a farcical Texas pro team that was rich in characters and subtle in its treatment of football. Reynolds crisply played the title role of Billy Clyde Puckett, a brash-outside/soft-inside star who was questioning the meaning of football as he prepared to write a book on the game.

The overindulgence of sports heroes and fans, the insanity of the people who run the game, and the demands and expectations on the players were displayed neatly despite a lack of pure football expertise by director Michael Ritchie. The football scenes were lacking, but the work of Reynolds, Kristofferson and Jill Clayburgh won out.

"North Dallas Forty" was written by Peter Gent, the former Dallas Cowboys receiver. Nick Nolte and Mac Davis were the principal performers here, with Nolte facing most of the questions. Is he addicted to the game as much as he is the pills he takes to relieve his pain? Can he find happiness off the field? Can he play an active role in his own destiny, and that of his teammates, or are the game and its stars controlled by the owners?

This film took football to task on the basis of business. It's big business to keep players on the field, and personal business to keep a job. When the two conflict, personal considerations are put aside, as "North Dallas Forty" vividly shows.

Two other films made different points. "Wildcats" (Warners, 1986) was essentially a comic vehicle for Goldie Hawn, but one with a message about opportunity and the ability of women. "The Best of Times" (Universal, 1986) was a deft stroke of filmmaking about lost-and-found dreams starring Robin Williams and Kurt Russell.

The best of the football movies sought a common goal, to exhibit the game as an important piece of America's fabric. The fans know this, but the confirmation offered by Hollywood gives it even more credence. □

POST-SEASON HONORS FOR 1986 FIGHTING SCOTS

STEVE SZABO - head coach

In just his second season as head coach of the Fighting Scots, Coach Szabo was named small college "Coach of the Year" by the Pittsburgh Post-Gazette sports writers. Szabo led the Plaid to their 7-3 mark and a second-place showing in the Pennsylvania Conference Western Division. His 12-7-1 record is the best ever by an Edinboro football coach in his first two years.

SCOTT DODDS - 6-1, 190, quarterback

Pittsburgh Post-Gazette small college "Player of the Year"
First team All-Pittsburgh Post-Gazette
Pennsylvania Conference Western Division "Player of the Year"

First team Pennsylvania Conference
Second team All-Pittsburgh Press
Associated Press Honorable Mention All-American

For a quarterback who started just 18 games in his Edinboro career, Dodds finished with 7 school records to his credit. Last year, Dodds completed a school record 153 of 243 passes for 1,752 yards and 17 touchdowns. He threw only 5 interceptions. Outstanding performances include a 5 touchdown passing game at Fairmont State and 25 of 31 completions on the road in Lock Haven.

BOB SUREN - 6-5, 215, tight end

First team All-Pittsburgh Post-Gazette
First team Pennsylvania Conference Western Division
Second team All-Pittsburgh Press

Arguably one of the best tight ends in the country last year, Suren was not nationally recognized due to his limited number of receptions. Suren grabbed just 27 passes in '86, but 8 of them went for touchdowns. His receptions last season covered 355 yards and he tied a school record for 3 touchdown catches in 1 game.

FLOYD FAULKNER - 5-9, 180, running back

First team Pittsburgh Post-Gazette
First team Pennsylvania Conference Western Division
Second team Pittsburgh Press

A slashing-type runner, Faulkner led the Fighting Scots with 824 yards rushing on just 127 carries for a 6.5 yard per carry average. His YPC mark ranks as the third best in Edinboro history. Named All-PC, Faulkner led the conference in touchdowns with 14, picking up 11 on the ground, 2 through the air and returned a punt 80 yards for a score at California. Faulkner also caught 17 passes out of the backfield for 142 yards and a pair of scores. A real game breaker, Faulkner will be a major key for the Plaid this fall.

MICHAEL WILLIS - 6-0, 170, free safety

First team Pennsylvania Conference Western Division
Second team Pittsburgh Post-Gazette

A red-shirt freshman starter in '86, Willis turned in an outstanding first season with the Plaid. Willis completed his initial year with a total of 77 tackles to rank second on the squad. He collected 38 solo stops and 39 assisted tackles. Also added to his total last year were: 1 tackle for loss, a fumble caused, a fumble recovery, 3 passes broken up and 1 interception. Willis will lead the EUP secondary in 1987.

JOHN CARDONE - 5-11, 200, linebacker

First team Pennsylvania Conference Western Division

Adjusting to the outside linebacking position last season, Cardone was the team's most valuable defensive player a year ago. The rugged senior led the Plaid with 78 tackles, including 46 solo stops. Credited with 2 quarterback sacks and 4 tackles behind the line of scrimmage, Cardone also collected two fumble recoveries, 1 fumble caused and 1 pass broken up.

ROSS RANKIN - 5-11, 185, running back

Second team Pennsylvania Conference Western Division

Splitting time with Faulkner, Rankin was very quietly one of the top running backs in the western division. Rushed for 430 yards on just 79 carries for a fine 5.4 YPC average. Scored 3 touchdowns on the ground and 1 on a 94 yard kickoff return to open the game against Clarion. Caught 16 passes for 145 yards and returned 14 kicks for 363 more for a 25.9 yard per return mark.

ERNEST PRIESTER - 5-9, 174, wide receiver

Second team Pennsylvania Conference Western Division

Just a freshman in '86, Priester led the Fighting Scots in receptions with 36. The Plaid's #1 possession receiver, Priester covered a team-high 507 yards without a touchdown. Knee injury late in the season but is at full strength for '87. Has the ability to run the deep route and has great hands.

DAVE NYE - 5-11, 205, offensive line

Second team Pennsylvania Conference Western Division

An undersized offensive guard, Nye utilized his strength and quickness to stand out for the Plaid last year. Started all 10 games for the Fighting Scots at guard and helped lead the way for EUP running backs to run for over 213 yards per game. Edinboro scored 20 touchdowns on the ground a year ago largely due to Nye's solid contributions.

MIKE RAYNARD - 6-2, 200, punter

Second team Pennsylvania Conference Western Division

Just a freshman last season, Raynard led the western division of the PC with a 38.3 yard per punt average. Total for the year, 38 punts for 1,456 yards and a long kick of 65 yards.

JIM TRUEMAN - 5-7, 180, placekicker

Second team Pittsburgh Post-Gazette

Finished his Edinboro career with five school records. A two-time All-American, Trueman tallied 53 points in his senior year on 5 of 10 field goals and 38 of 39 points after touchdown. A very solid performer during his 4-year stay, Trueman will be tough to replace in '87.

EDINBORO 57 - FAIRMONT 33

FAIRMONT, WV - Trailing 33-21, the high-powered Edinboro offense exploded for 36 points in the fourth quarter to finish the season with a 7-3 record and 5 straight victories.

The Scots racked up 577 yards in total offense, including school records of 376 yards passing and 5 touchdowns by Scott Dodds. Dodds completed 23 of 38 passes to cap his outstanding collegiate career.

Floyd Faulkner turned in another spectacular game by scoring 4 touchdowns. He rushed for 97 yards on 19 carries and caught 5 passes for 99 yards. Bob Suren caught 6 passes for 78 yards and 2 scores. Elbert Cole rushed for 50 yards and caught 3 passes for 94 yards, including a 53-yard touchdown reception.

Defensively, Claude Webb intercepted 2 passes, including a 20-yard return for a touchdown, and John Cardone and Tom Calton both registered 12 tackles.

OUR DEDICATION:

Advanced research on the cutting edge of new computer technology.

We have already announced our break-through in the development of a trinary memory register that holds over 650 times the data of an equivalent 16 bit binary register.

Our new super-speed "path finder" modem using this new technology will be unveiled for demonstration this fall. It will transmit many more times the amount of data than presently transmitted at any given baud rate, thereby reducing on-line telephone connect charges by one-half to one-fourth.

Other applications in the fields of data encryption and data security will be announced shortly.

THE PENNSYLVANIA CONFERENCE

HISTORY OF PSAC FOOTBALL

The Pennsylvania State Athletic Conference is one of the few leagues in the nation to sponsor a championship game in football. The East vs. West conference championship game, known as the "State Game," has been in existence since 1960. Mythical champions were picked by sportswriters from 1934 until 1950 with the champion determined by the Saylor system from 1951 until 1959.

All members of the conference (with individual sports exceptions) compete at the NCAA Division II level and have since 1980. Athletes and teams have won numerous honors in national competitions over the years and have helped the PSAC become one of the most respected "small college" conferences in the nation.

In 1986: BORO FALLS TO IUP

The Fighting Scots suffered their only conference loss of the season at the hands of the Big Indians by a score of 28-10. An Indiana homecoming crowd of 7,000 braved the rain and cold to watch Indian quarterback, Bob Kiel, set a new team record for completion percentage as he connected on 19 of 24 passes for 74.2 percent and 242 yards.

Stellar performances were also logged by IUP's Paul Palamara and Doug Niesen. Palamara, only a freshman, ran for all four of IUP's touchdowns including a 32-yard jaunt that got the Big Indians on the board in the second quarter. Niesen hauled in six Kiel passes for 84 yards on the day.

The teams entered the contest with identical 2-1 records. Edinboro had opened up conference play the week before with a 24-14 win at Slippery Rock while IUP just squeaked by Kutztown 21-20.

Defense was the name of the game in the first quarter as neither team could put any points on the board. IUP had the only scoring chance in the first stanza but place kicker John Sandstrom missed wide right on a 42-yard field goal attempt.

Unfortunately for Edinboro the Big Indians' offense came to life in the second quarter scoring every time they touched the ball for 21 unanswered points.

Quarterback Kiel completed three passes for 43 yards to lead the Indians on their first drive. Paul Palamara capped off the drive with a 32-yard jaunt for Indiana's first score.

The Boro's next drive stalled and Indiana took over on the Boro 24 after a Mike Raynard 37-yard punt. Kiel wasted no time getting the offense started again as he immediately completed back-to-back passes to Craig Scheffler for gains of 17 and 14 yards. A combination of Edinboro penalties and Paul Palamara running led to IUP's next touchdown as Palamara went over the top from the one yard line to put IUP up 14-0.

IUP had a golden opportunity on the very next play as Edinboro's Cleveland Pratt fumbled an Ike Ezunago kickoff and IUP's Darren Cottrill recovered on Edinboro's 24-yard line. Kiel made one of his only mistakes of the day on his next pass when it was intercepted by the Fighting Scot's Michael Willis on the Boro one-yard line.

Again the Boro offense couldn't get on track and was forced to punt. IUP took over inside Edinboro territory and quickly took advantage of the good field position by driving 46 yards in two minutes. Palamara again punched it in from the one for the final score of the half.

Edinboro came out fired up in the second half. The defense stiffened and forced IUP to punt on their opening drive. Boro running back Floyd Faulkner promptly took over and powered the Scots into field goal position. Jim Trueman then split the uprights with a 32-yard field goal.

With newly found confidence, the Edinboro defense again shut down Kiel and company to force a punt. The Scots took over on their own 31 and required only three plays to put the ball in the end zone. On the first play of the drive, running back Ross Rankin took a pitch and jaunted 26 yards to move the Scots into Indiana territory. After a short run, quarterback Scott Dodds found Pratt over the middle for a 47-yard touchdown. With four minutes left in the third quarter, IUP was up, 21-10, and the Scots were back in the ball game.

The comeback was not meant to be, however, as both defenses dominated for the rest of the game. The only other score came when Palamara again went over the top for a one-yard touchdown with three minutes left in the game. That final run iced the game and made the final score IUP 28 - Edinboro 10.
