RAY MEARS

Ray Mears, nationally famed basketball coach at the University of Tennessee, is featured as tonight's keynote speaker. Hailed as basketball's master of defense, Mears has compiled a 250-75 mark in 13 years of college coaching and has moved into the No. 2 spot behind Kentucky's Adolph Rupp on the list of all-time winningest college basketball coaches.

Under Mears' guidance for the past 7 years, Tennessee cage teams have risen to the top in the tough Southeastern Conference which features such powerhouses as Alabama, L.S.U., Kentucky, Vanderbilt, Auburn, Georgia and "Ole Miss." Since 1964 the Vols have finished lower than second place in the conference only once, that being a third place spot in 1966. Tennessee captured the Southeastern Conference crown to cap the Volunteers' 1967 campaign.

"We're proud of our defense and spend long hours in practice trying to perfect it," revealed Mears. "A lot of people have the idea we hold the ball and delay action, but we studied films of some of our games and learned that our opponents were taking more time trying to set up their shots than we were. When a race-horse team can't get its shots away, we regard that as a tribute to our defense."

Use of sound defensive principles are revealed throughout Mears' coaching past. In the last 5 years, the Volunteers have twice won the NCAA's national defensive championship. While coaching at Wittenburg University in Springfield, Ohio, Mears' Tigers won the NCAA college division championship in 1961 and finished first in the nation 4 straight years in the category of fewest points surrendered.
