Message from the Presidents

Early this fall, I held a special all-University convocation to announce to the campus community three matters of great importance, and I want to share with Edinboro alumni my thoughts on the opportunities and challenges each presents.

Your alma mater won high marks from the Middle States Association during our ten-year reaccreditation review. They reported that Edinboro is a strong university, and commented at length on several strengths: our outstanding program for students with disabilities; the increasing diversity of faculty and students; steady enrollments and a student body with notable institutional pride; and a well-maintained physical plant. And these were but a few of the many programs singled out.

Based on the clear success of 1991-92's Thrust Toward Excellence in the School of Education, I recently authorized formation of a new inter-school task force "thrust" for the schools of Liberal Arts and Science, Management and Technologies, based on the theme of outreach and community service. As a public university committed to public service, we hope to benefit various sectors of the community and provide opportunities for faculty growth and enriched learning opportunities for our students through this new program.

Your university is proud to be a full participant in Governor Robert Casey's Operation Jump Start, as it will allow us to undertake major building projects on the campus for the first time in my 15 years as president. $10.2 million in construction funding has been authorized, and Edinboro must raise some $3 million to match the state's three-quarters share. Jump Start will build a complex that will strengthen Edinboro's already nationally-acclaimed program for students with disabilities, as well as provide for an expanded academic classroom and auditorium facility as part of the complex to benefit the entire University community.

In the coming months and years you will read and hear more of these programs, and I hope you share my pride and excitement as they come to reality.

Homecoming '93: weeks of planning, long hours of work, three short days of festivities, and a look to the future. The events held promise of being the biggest and best attended of any in Edinboro's nearly 70 years of homecoming history, and while Saturday's weather tried to dampen everyone's spirits, it never slowed things down entirely. Strong student support was in evidence as window decorating returned to the dormitories in full force. The campus bookstore was jammed to the walls at times on Saturday afternoon.

Those spectators who braved the rain and a drop in temperature provided every bit of the support to those who participated in the parade. A record number of units lined up for the parade, and the floats were some of the most professional and colorful presentations of recent years. The Fighting Scots provided plenty of football action, beating Lock Haven, 52-20. It was a great weekend.

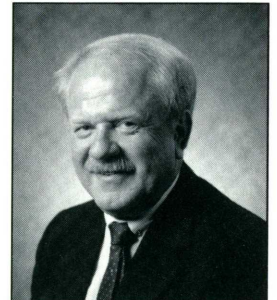

As you should now be aware, your Association is fast moving toward a more visible role in the support of this university. We've successfully provided many thousands of additional dollars for scholarships these past two years, and we're already hard at work this year. (The 1993-94 annual fund drive kicked off immediately following homecoming weekend.) Additionally, these past several months have found us striving to gain a "new home" in Edinboro, one which will meet our needs into the next decade and beyond. In our biggest step forward ever, we received the deed from University Services, Inc. to two vacant properties on Meadville Street. We will keep you posted on that momentous project as we move along.

I hope we can continue to count on your strong endorsement for our programs and activities. We cannot continue to grow at the rate of the past two years without your support and dedication to our goals and ideals. Let us know where we need to improve, move, turn, and grow. This is your association; keep us working for you. See you on October 7-9, 1994!

Do You Believe in Magic?

Jack Swope, a 1977 graduate of Edinboro University, says he has the greatest job in the world.

As executive vice president/assistant general manager for the Orlando Magic, one of the great success stories of the National Basketball Association, Swope occasionally pinches himself about his own "Magic Kingdom" in Orlando.

"I'm just 38 years old, have a wonderful wife and family, and a great job," Swope said. "I was part of a championship team in Philadelphia, and we hosted an all-star game in Orlando. The Magic is young and up-and-coming, and the popularity of the team continues to elevate. I couldn't ask for a whole lot more."

Beginning in sales for the Philadelphia 76ers in 1977, Swope was promoted to director of group sales just two years later. His 10-year career in Philadelphia included positions as director of promotions, director of marketing and assistant general manager. He experienced the glory of an NBA championship in 1983, a feeling that remains Swope's fondest professional memory.

The beginning of his career in the NBA was also the start of a close professional relationship with 76ers general manager Pat Williams. When Williams left to assume the GM duties with Orlando in 1986, Swope knew he might soon be hearing from his old boss. The call came a year later, forcing a professional decision that wasn't easy.

"It was tough to leave the Philadelphia area," said the Conestoga High School graduate. "But it was a great opportunity, and we are certainly glad we took it."

With his move to Orlando in 1987, Swope accepted the position of assistant general manager and director of marketing with the Magic. In 1990, he was appointed to his current position, executive vice president and assistant general manager. His responsibilities include overseeing day-to-day business operations, the club's merchandising and marketing activities, and all areas of broadcasting and sales.

Swope's business day varies, with an emphasis on broadcast negotiations with local television and radio stations and overseeing approximately 60 employees within the organization. There are monthly financial meetings with the administration and quarterly gatherings with the DeVos family, owners of the Magic. The principal owner, Richard DeVos, co-founder of the Amway Corporation, was recently recognized by Sports Illustrated as the second wealthiest man in sports. But according to Swope, one would never know it. "From the top on down, the DeVos family is great," he said.

Over the past two years, the Magic has been worthy of its name in the NBA lottery draft acquiring the top pick each year. Williams has been perceived as the "luckiest man in the NBA" because of the Magic's good fortune. In truth, Swope has been the team's representative in the back room when the draft positions were selected. In 1992, Orlando's 9-in-66 chance of acquiring the rights to the number-one pick resulted in rookie phenomenon Shaquille O'Neal, while this past year's 1-66 miracle gave the Magic the opportunity to acquire Michigan All-American Chris Webber. Williams, Swope and others again used their wizardry by trading the rights to Webber to the Golden State Warriors for Memphis State's Anfernee Hardaway and three future number-one draft choices. Orlando hopes to increase its good fortune with the Warriors' first choice in 1996, 1998 and 2000. "When you make a deal of that magnitude and acquire the future draft picks, you hope that at least one of the three will turn out to be an impact player for you," Swope added.

"I love Edinboro and the influences it had on my life," said Swope. "What Edinboro taught me the most was how to deal with people and their diverse personalities. It gave me a well-rounded feel for people, and in my profession that is very important."

One of Swope's latest marketing ideas was the Magic FanAttic, the team's official souvenir store. In just one year, sales increased 500 percent with O'Neal's arrival. "O'Neal's popularity is one of the main reasons we jumped from ninth to second in merchandising among NBA teams," said Swope. The seven-foot, one-inch 22-year old is reportedly worth $30 million a year through contracts and endorsements.

"As a whole, the NBA does a great promotion job. The visibility of the players and the ability to maximize the personalities of the superstars is important to the overall strategy of the league," Swope explained.

Swope was also involved in preliminary negotiations between O'Neal and corporate giants Pepsi and Reebok. His relationship with O'Neal's agent and representatives of the respective advertising agencies helped initiate a world-wide media blitz promoting "Shaq" and the products.

Despite his position, Swope has never forgotten his roots or his friends from Edinboro. Each year, a mini-reunion is staged at the NBA All-Star game with, among others, Jim Sekel '78, Bill Baltz '76, and Terry Serena '76. "We were all in the same fraternity (Sigma Tau Gamma) and these guys are still some of my very best friends. It's great to see them all and rehash the same old stories. I truly wouldn't trade my Edinboro days for anything," Swope said.

Swope discovered Edinboro thanks to his sister Nancy Feeley (class of 1974) and his love for the game of soccer. His best memories are of playing on snow-covered soccer fields and many great relationships with his teammates. "The camaraderie was special. That's what makes Edinboro so special," Swope admitted. "I love Edinboro and the influences it had on my life. What Edinboro taught me the most was how to deal with people and their diverse personalities. It gave me a well-rounded feel for people, and in my profession that is very important."

An economics major, Swope credits his former professors Scott Dye and An-Sik Min for giving him the proper guidance. "They were a source of motivation, always looking out for me," Swope said. "The business background I received turned out to be of great benefit."

What's in the crystal ball for Swope remains cloudy, but it is apparent that a general manager position in the NBA is in his future. "Yeah, five years from now I would like to be a GM, but I am not too concerned about that right now. I love my job and my association with the organization and the people in it."

One thing is certain. Jack Swope believes in Magic.

— Todd V. Jay

Swope was a member of the Edinboro soccer team from 1973-1976. The 1973 squad still holds the best season record at 8-3-1.

Ed Mailliard: Award-Winning Sports Photographer

Ed Mailliard has a "Clark Kent" quality about him. By day, he is the mild-mannered city editor of the Meadville Tribune. By night (and on most weekends), he becomes one of America's unsung sports heroes. No, he is not an athlete. He is a big-time, big-league, award-winning baseball card photographer.

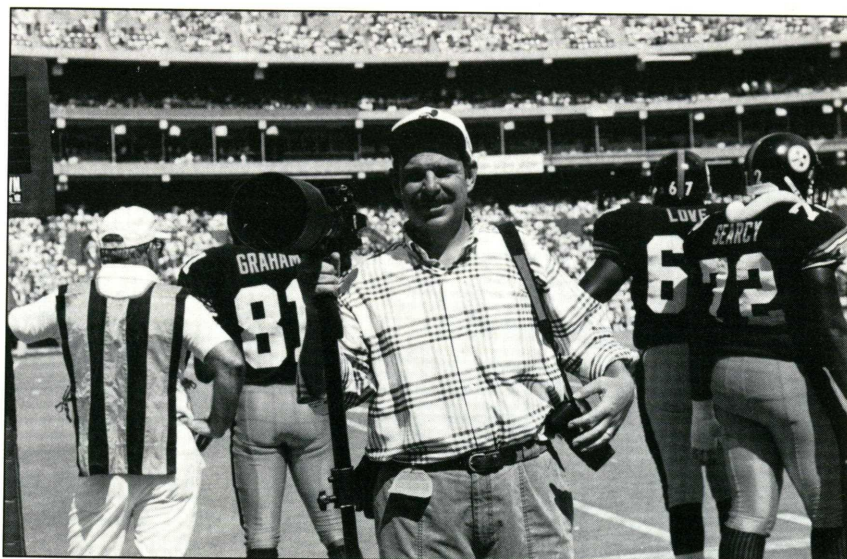

The 1979 Edinboro graduate has been taking photos for Topps baseball cards since 1986. Earlier this year, Mailliard was honored at a reception in New York City where two of his photographs were chosen for an exhibit, "Celebrating Baseball – Winning Photographic Moments," at an art gallery in Rockefeller Center. He was one of only 11 photographers honored by Nikon as being among the leading sports photographers in the nation.

Mailliard's involvement with sports began at the former St. Agatha High School in Meadville, Pa., where he was the basketball team's manager and statistician. After graduating in 1969 he enrolled at Edinboro as a math major with the idea of becoming a teacher.

"Coming to Edinboro was like an explosion for me because of all the good sports programs," said Mailliard. In his first semester at Edinboro he asked junior varsity basketball coach Dave Rooney for a job with the team and was hired as water boy. Soon the student newspaper, the Spectator, asked him to write sports stories, even though Mailliard had no writing experience. Before long he caught the eye of the University's sports information director Paul Newman ('64) who wanted Mailliard to write for him. Eventually he became the head statistician for football and basketball.

The early 1970s were an exciting time in Edinboro sports. The football team posted back-to-back 9-1 seasons in 1970 and 1971 and won the Lambert trophy for being the best team in the East. The 1971-72 basketball team went to the NAIA championships in Kansas City, Mo. McComb Fieldhouse opened in December of 1970, and Mailliard was with the basketball team when it first practiced in the new gym before it was completed.

Mailliard, who had recently gotten a new camera from his brother, asked one of the basketball team's best jumpers to dunk some balls so he could take action shots.

"I had no idea what I was doing," said Mailliard, "but the head photographer offered to show me how to develop and print film." Those first photographs were something less than noteworthy, but when the image on the photographic paper began to emerge right before his eyes, Mailliard was mesmerized. "It was the most magical thing I had ever seen," he said. "I was really hooked!"

Following his junior year at Edinboro, Newman mentioned to Mailliard that his hometown paper, the Tribune, had an opening for a sports writer. He interviewed for the job and was hired by the editor, the late Spike Siegel, for $120 a week.

For the next three years he covered sports and tried to learn everything the Tribune's photographers could teach him. When he was promoted to city editor in 1975 he realized he needed to complete his education at Edinboro. This time he chose to major in photo journalism, taking classes in the evening while working full time. "Edinboro has a great art department. I got involved in the photography program and took every class I could."

His determination to be a good photographer eventually paid off. In 1978, shortly before he graduated, the Tribune's head photographer resigned and Mailliard immediately applied for the position.

As the Tribune's photographer, Mailliard covered sporting events, including Pirates and Steelers games. While at Edinboro one day, the best student in the photography class started looking at a few of Mailliard's Steeler photos. "These pictures have so much power in them," he told Mailliard.

"Coming to Edinboro was like an explosion for me because of all the good sports programs," said Mailliard.

At that moment a career was born. Mailliard decided to go all out to become a serious sports photographer. He borrowed money to buy a professional camera and lens. The lens, alone, cost more than $2,000.

The Associated Press hired him as a stringer for $50 a game, and he sent baseball pictures to the Sporting News. Late in 1978 he put together a portfolio of eight to ten card-size black and white photos of football players and sent them to Butch Jacobs, the photo editor in Topps' sports department. Several months went by. Mailliard didn't hear anything. August arrived, and he phoned Jacobs at Topps. To Mailliard's astonishment, Jacobs asked him to shoot the Steelers-Vikings game at Three Rivers Stadium less than two weeks away.

"I almost had a heart attack," said Mailliard. "I was thrilled to get the assignment. But I was terrified. The technicians at Topps told me everything I needed to know about shooting for them. Topps takes especially good care of its photographers."

It took seven or eight years to break into baseball card photography for Topps. Mailliard's first baseball assignment was at Cleveland in the fall of 1986 to photograph a rookie pitcher for the Oakland A's. Now Topps flies him to spring training in Arizona and asks him to spend approximately 40 weekends each year on shooting assignments.

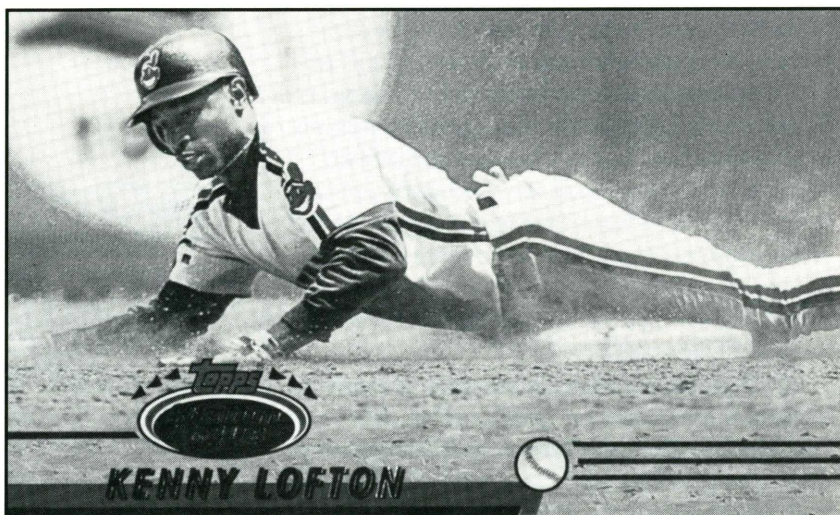

Being on the road so often would put a strain on most marriages, but Mailliard's wife has turned it to her advantage. "I'm very lucky to have a wife who is understanding and also a sports fan. We do a lot together around my sports schedule," he said. Joyce Mailliard, who also works at the Tribune, travels with Ed to many of his assignments in places like Toronto, Phoenix and San Diego.

She went with him to New York when he was honored for his baseball photography. "The show really humbled me," he said. "I didn't know what to say or think. The top executives from Time, Sports Illustrated, and USA Today were there. I couldn't believe they had chosen my work."

The Meadville Tribune has been very supportive of his moonlighting. Mailliard hesitated to accept the invitation to attend the New York show, because it would mean more time away from work. But then word of Mailliard's award got to the managing editor, Darrell Lowe. "He was more excited about it than I was," said Mailliard.

Mailliard has had the good fortune of witnessing some of sports' greatest moments, including Franco Harris' immaculate reception. He has seen two no-hitters. He watched George Brett win the batting title on the last day of the season. He has looked on in awe as Terry Bradshaw, Berry Bonds and Ken Griffey Jr. have performed at superhuman levels. And he was hit by a foul ball off the bat of Mike Schmidt. "I have the best seat in the house," said Mailliard.

— Brian K. Pitzer

Championship Bowler Doesn't Use Alley or Pins

Richard Sayer is one of the top ten bowlers in the United States. But the 27-year-old student at Edinboro University doesn't bowl in alleys, doesn't use pins, and wouldn't know a 7-10 split from a gutter ball.

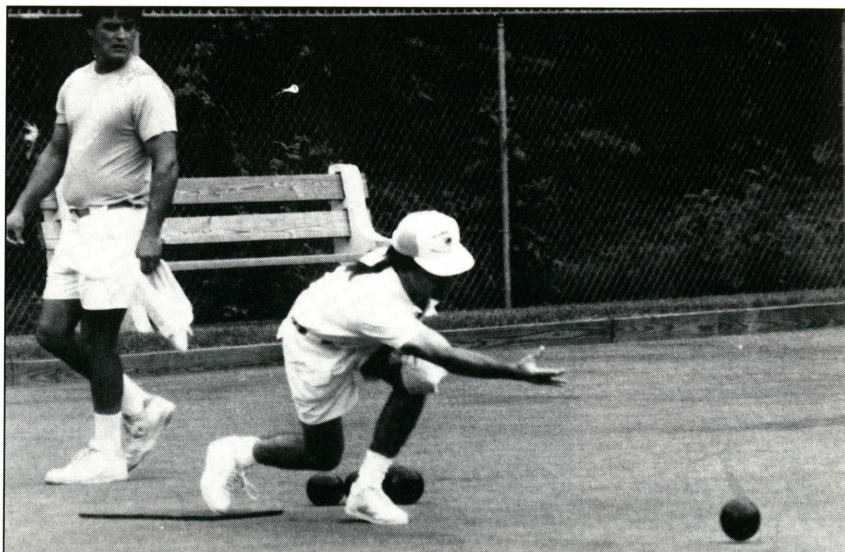

Sayer is a champion in the sport of lawn bowling – a game more like bocce than bowling. In September he competed at the U.S. Lawn Bowling championships in Walnut Creek, California, where he finished fourth in a field of eight divisional champions. Sayer won the right to compete in the U.S. championships by besting some of the top players in the nation at the Eastern Division championships in Wilmington, Delaware. The event was held at the DuPont Lawn Bowling Club in mid-August.

Lawn bowling is a tradition in the Sayer family. It began in 1939 when Ray Sayer (Richard's grandfather) went to a Little League baseball game in Providence, Rhode Island. As he watched the game, he noticed a group of people playing a different game on the other side of the fence. Upon investigation, he discovered lawn bowling. They invited him to play, and before long he was hooked. Ray was 40 then, and on October 2 of this year he celebrated his 96th birthday by playing in the Ray Sayer Open, a tournament created and dedicated to him by his son, George.

In 1941, at the age of 13, George joined his father in the local lawn bowling club, and in 1948 he won the Eastern Division singles championship at the age of 20. The set of bowling balls he used in that competition was the same set his son Richard would use 39 years later to win the title in 1987.

Richard Sayer grew up in Scituate, Rhode Island, and at the age of 12 became the youngest member of the Smithfield Avenue Lawn Bowling Club. He has been playing since he was eight when he got a set of "carpet balls," smaller in size and weight than bowling balls. Today, he is the youngest of the 14 members of the U.S. National Lawn Bowling Team.

"Lawn bowling has become known as an old man's game," said Sayer, "because it has lost its popularity in the United States. But in other countries it is played by people of all ages."

Although skill in rolling bowls is important to winning, Sayer believes strategy is more important. "It's a lot like chess – a war of minds. We often refer to our bowls as weapons," he said.

The rules for the game were first set down in Scotland. It is perhaps more than coincidence that Sayer should be furthering his education at Edinboro University. He graduated from the Rhode Island School of Photography in 1986 and began studying for a fine arts degree at Rhode Island College. Love interrupted his education when he met and married Samantha Parente.

They moved to Scranton to allow her to pursue a master's degree at Marywood College. For three years Sayer worked as a furniture refinisher in Scranton before it was his turn to complete his education. They moved to Meadville when he enrolled at Edinboro University to study for a fine arts degree in painting. Eventually, Sayer would like to obtain a master's degree and teach at the college level.

There are no lawn bowling clubs in northwestern Pennsylvania. The nearest ones are in Cleveland and Pittsburgh. Still, Sayer managed to play about 20 times this year. He took a week off from his college classes to play in the U.S. championships. The trip was a family affair with his father, mother, and wife accompanying him. Going to school full time may slow his athletic career, but while at Edinboro, he hopes to start a collegiate lawn bowling program.

– Brian K. Pitzer

The object of lawn bowling is to roll one's bowling balls or "bowls" as close as possible to the jack (a small white ball about 2-1/2 inches in diameter.) The player that has a bowl closest to the jack scores a point and an additional point for each bowl closer to the jack than an opponent's nearest bowl.

Lawn bowling is played on a flat lawn or green approximately 120 feet long. Each player has a matched set of bowls each weighing about three pounds. The bowls are weighted on one side which causes them to curve. Thus, most players do not roll their bowls directly toward the jack, but rather at an angle so they will curve toward the target.

Surrounded by woods and waterfalls, the original Derringer Gun Factory of Civil War fame is home to KAJEM Recording Studios. Only minutes from metropolitan Philadelphia, the studio setting is safely secluded and naturally green. The air is fresh, the stream is stocked, and the parking is free.

Fifteen, strong years of recording experience have earned KAJEM the reputation as one of the best residential recording studios in the United States. The quality of our equipment, our environment, and especially our staff has contributed to gold and platinum success for many of the artists who record at KAJEM. We hope to see you soon.

When Joe Alexander and Sam Moses were college students they had little idea they would eventually operate one of the most successful recording studios on the East Coast. They were classmates at Edinboro University of Pennsylvania in the late 1960s and early 1970s. Both had an interest in music – Alexander ('73) was a guitarist who wanted to record his own music; Moses ('72) was a visual artist with an eye for design and considerable experience in construction.

Their entry into the recording business came in the mid-1970s through Alexander's sister, Lorena, who was promoting a two-man band from Philadelphia called Dialogue. When the band came to Edinboro for a performance, one of its members, Kurt Shore, began talking to Alexander about their mutual aspirations in the music and recording industry. From that conversation an idea was born to start a professional recording studio, primarily for the purpose of making their own records.

Alexander packed up and followed the band to Philadelphia where he and Shore and another band member, Mitch Goldfarb, set up a modest studio inside a two-car garage. They named their company KAJEM from the initials of their first names – Kurt, Joe and Mitch. What started as a private studio for the would-be recording stars soon turned into what Alexander calls "a monster."

To help defray costs, they made recordings for other artists and companies. Within six months their reputation for creating top-quality recordings made them one of the hottest little studios in Philadelphia, and they were cited in Philadelphia Magazine's "People to Watch" issue. They quickly outgrew their garage and soon were in need of additional help running the business. Within a year, Alexander invited Moses to join them.

The offer was intriguing to Moses. He had post-graduate experience in filmmaking through the University of Pittsburgh (he produced a documentary on the children of Appalachia which was funded by the Appalachian Emergency Fund). But he did not have any experience in music production.

Nevertheless, in a large leap of faith, Moses left a high school teaching job to move to Philadelphia without any real idea of what he would be doing. "My first night there I can remember asking: 'What are we going to work on tomorrow?' When Joe said he didn't know, I realized a lot of personal initiative would be required."

Shortly after his arrival, KAJEM moved to its current location in the original Derringer gun factory in Gladwyne, Pa. "It's a wonderful setting," said Moses. "We're surrounded by woods, a stocked creek and a waterfall."

They started with 3,000 square feet of space and have since expanded to 6,000 square feet. "We're constantly expanding and improving," Moses said. "We've updated our equipment to where we now have a state-of-the-art recording studio."

It's no exaggeration to say that KAJEM is a world-class operation. Gold and platinum records line the walls of its offices. Its list of clients reads like a Who's Who of recording stars – Teddy Pendergrass, Patti LaBelle, Hammer, DJ Jazzy Jeff and the Fresh Prince, Cinderella, Queensryche, Oak Ridge Boys, Bon Jovi and Eddie Murphy. Moses also developed a commercial division which has produced jingles for Pepsi, McDonald's and Delta Airlines, and hundreds of radio spots for local regional clients. The studio has received numerous awards for excellence, including an International Radio Festival Award.

In addition to its secluded setting, one of the features that makes KAJEM so attractive to rock bands is its "drum room," which has a well-deserved reputation for being the best drum room on the East Coast. The cavernous room also doubles as an indoor basketball court, which is one of the reasons DJ Jazzy Jeff asked Moses to design and build a personal studio for him in KAJEM's building.

Moses and Alexander have assumed different, yet complementary, responsibilities with KAJEM. As a musician himself, Alexander has excelled as a recording engineer and producer. It is not unusual for him to work 12-15 hours a day at the studio – usually beginning at seven in the evening. The recording process is arduous and sometimes even boring. He may listen to one passage 100-200 times in one night, trying to get a certain aspect of the song just right – finding the right pitch in a singer's voice or eliminating unwanted noises. "The real satisfaction in my work is making the artist happy," said Alexander. "I want to make it the best it can possibly be."

He credits an Edinboro professor, Jim Vredevoogd, for giving him a way of seeing art in everything. Vredevoogd taught Alexander in a "time/space workshop" that looked at the world as a collection of systems. He instilled in his students the idea that creativity can be found in any field, such as business and science, as well as art. As a result of his influence Alexander now thinks of music as an audio canvas where sounds can be manipulated like images on a painting.

His expertise has brought him membership in several professional societies including the Audio Engineering Society, the Society of Professional Audio Recording Studios, and the National Academy of Recording Arts and Sciences – the group that produces the Grammy Awards. Alexander is especially proud to be among the voting members for those awards.

While Alexander focuses on the music side of KAJEM, Moses has taken over the business responsibilities and many of the design projects. "Sam is all business," said Alexander. "He is also the best graphic artist I have ever seen."

In addition to designing and building the KAJEM studios, Moses is now working on designs for another studio at KAJEM and a studio in Jamaica for Mikey Bennett, producer of several artists including Johnny Gill, Shaba Ranks and Maxi Priest. Moses' role in creating his outstanding facility earned him the Entrepreneur of the Year Award from Philadelphia's Center City Proprietor's Association.

Janet Bowker Named Acting Alumni Director

Janet L. Bowker ('84) has been appointed to the position of acting director of alumni affairs. She will also serve as acting executive director of the Alumni Association. During the one-year appointment, Bowker will retain her current duties as assistant director of development, a position she has held since 1989.

In announcing the appointment, President Diebold said that this will be a pivotal year for the Alumni Association. He cited Bowker's experience with the Association and the Annual Fund as reasons for naming her to the position. As assistant director of development, Bowker has been responsible for the Annual Fund, the University's yearly appeal to alumni for financial support of the Association and the University, which includes the semi-annual phonathons. She has also coordinated the University's scholarship program as it relates to donors.

A graduate of North Hills High School in Pittsburgh, Bowker received a bachelor's degree in speech communications from Edinboro. Following graduation she worked in the University's admissions office for more than four years and served as Edinboro's assistant director of admissions.

It's a 'Burgh Thing!

The Three Rivers Chapter continues to plan activities in the Pittsburgh area, although more alumni involvement is needed.

On Sunday, September 12, a group gathered in North Park to enjoy the park and getting reacquainted. They enjoyed a barbecue picnic and fresh, homemade salsa provided by event coordinator Jeff "Lemonhead" Lemley ('78 and '84). Alumni brought friends, spouses and children who all participated in a variety of activities and took home prizes. Thanks to Jeff and Ruth Lemley and Patty Moore ('79) for all their hard work.

Legacy Weekend Breeds Success

During the weekend of July 23, alumni and their children participated in the third annual Legacy Weekend held on the beautiful Edinboro campus. Those attending stayed in Dearborn Hall and enjoyed activities ranging from swimming in McComb Fieldhouse pool to bowling and movies in the University Center to a pizza party in Van Houten.

The main focus of the weekend was to learn a little about the college admissions process, financial aid application procedures, and a variety of other activities when applying to college. Whether they decide to follow in their parents' footsteps and attend Edinboro, or attend another institution, students find the weekend provides a lot of information and a taste of campus life.

Honorary lifetime alumni board member Mike Zahorchak '37, and State System of Higher Education Vice Chancellor for Advancement Sally Souris share a moment at the All-System alumni reception held recently at Erie's Avalon Hotel.

Sponsored by the State System, the Pennsylvania Council of Alumni Associations, and the Edinboro University Alumni Association, the reception was held to celebrate the State System's tenth anniversary. Some 100 alumni of the 14 System universities who live in northwestern Pennsylvania attended.

General planning for Legacy Weekend '94 is already under way, so if you have college-bound children, plan to attend next July.

D.C./Va. Area Chapter Proves to be the Most Active

On October 16, more than 40 alumni from the Washington, D.C./Virginia area gathered at Mr. Smith's Restaurant in Tyson's Corner, Va. Alumnae Jane Bucceri ('72 and '75) and Jane Miller ('74), along with their volunteer committee, continue to plan successful events that are very well attended. Brian Henry ('84) contacted a favorite professor, James Fisher of the political science department, who was the guest speaker. Fisher provided a very interesting and humorous look into the life of a private investigator. He is a former agent with the FBI and uses his experiences to supply his students with more than textbook techniques. (You may recall the Winter '92 issue of this magazine which featured Fisher as the cover story.)

Cocktails and hors d'oeuvres combined with lively conversation as old friends met new. Following a buffet dinner was Fisher's entertaining talk, comments by Alumni Association board member Alan Culbertson ('71 and '75), as well as remarks made by the acting director of alumni affairs Janet L. Bowker ('84). This group is already planning to get together again, probably next May.

1993-94 Annual Fund Phonathon Under way

As we go to press, the fall phonathon is well under way and setting some new records! A very enthusiastic group of student callers have set some nightly records with pledges of more than $7,000 and $8,000 in separate nights! The phonathon concludes on November 4, and the final totals will be reported in the next issue of the Alumni News.

The 1993-94 Annual Fund is the final phase of the three-year plan to enhance the scholarship program and assist students now and in the future. The final $25,000 Dean's Scholarship Endowment will be created for the School of Science, Management and Technologies. Additional unrestricted funds will be used to provide for the Admissions Grants Fund, the general scholarship fund, and others.

In 1992-93 alumni gave more than $183,500, an increase of six percent over 1991-92. The participation rate also increased from 15.5 percent in 1991-92 to 18.38 percent last year. Currently, the figures look to be continuing along the same trends for 1993-94. So, when you get that call or an Annual Fund mailing, join the thousands of fellow alumni and show your support with a pledge or a gift.

Affinity Visa Cards Still Available

If you have yet to apply for your Edinboro Visa card, call the alumni office at 1-800-526-0117 to request an application. This is a very sharp-looking card designed specifically for alumni and friends of Edinboro University. It carries a 14.5 percent interest rate, no fee for the first year and then only $15 per year, $5 of which comes back to the University. And each time you use the card, $.15 comes back to Edinboro.

Since the program started in 1991, nearly 2,000 cards have been issued and more than $10,000 has come back into the scholarship program. So, call today for your application and charge for the 'Boro!

Second Annual Edinboro Athletes' Reunion Held

Former Edinboro athletes who graduated between 1949 and 1959 gathered on campus recently to visit with old friends and watch the Fighting Scots defeat California, 32-7. Following the game, they toured the campus and Reeder Hall, where many of them lived while in school here. Thanks to Joe Casile ('54), Chuck Lodge ('52), and Bill Starr ('53) who coordinated the event for the second year in a row. They hope to continue the reunion next year. For more information, contact one of them or the Alumni Office.

Hazel Campbell Terrell Drake (Class of 1911) was recently honored on the occasion of her 100th birthday. A party, hosted by her family and friends, was held in Cambridge Springs on October 24.

Homecoming 1993

This year's Homecoming weekend had a little bit of everything. Unfortunately, that applied to the weather as well as the weekend's festivities.

Friday was 70 degrees and sunny as more than 100 alumni and friends participated in the Second Annual Alumni Homecoming Golf outing. Held at Culbertson Hills Public Golf Course, everyone went home a winner. Local merchants, the Alumni Association, and the University all donated hundreds of prizes for the event, and some $700 from the proceeds was added to alumni-sponsored scholarships.

Friday night's annual President's Reception was well attended as usual. There were hot hors d'oeuvres, dancing to music provided by DJ John, a "memories" room, and lively conversation as alumni got re-acquainted.

On Saturday, everyone awoke to wind, rain and temperatures in the 50s. However, the 'Boro faithful still lined the streets to watch the annual parade. This year's theme was "Sunday Funnies," and many students braved the weather to display their floats and represent various groups. Local bands also participated, including, of course, the Spirit of the Scots Marching Band, as well as the "Former Spirit," but still spirited, Alumni Marching Band. Even though some traditional entries did cancel, it was still a classic Edinboro parade. The first-place float was "Dick Tracy" entered by Sigma Tau Gamma and Alpha Gamma Delta. This year's homecoming queen and king were Tammy Huff and Gerry Clemence.

Of course, the big highlight of the day was the 52-20 rout of the Bald Eagles of Lock Haven University. Edinboro's football team is again among the best in Division II and is favored to make the playoffs again this year. Many alumni from various distances gathered under the tent for hot chocolate, coffee, conversation and raffled prizes.

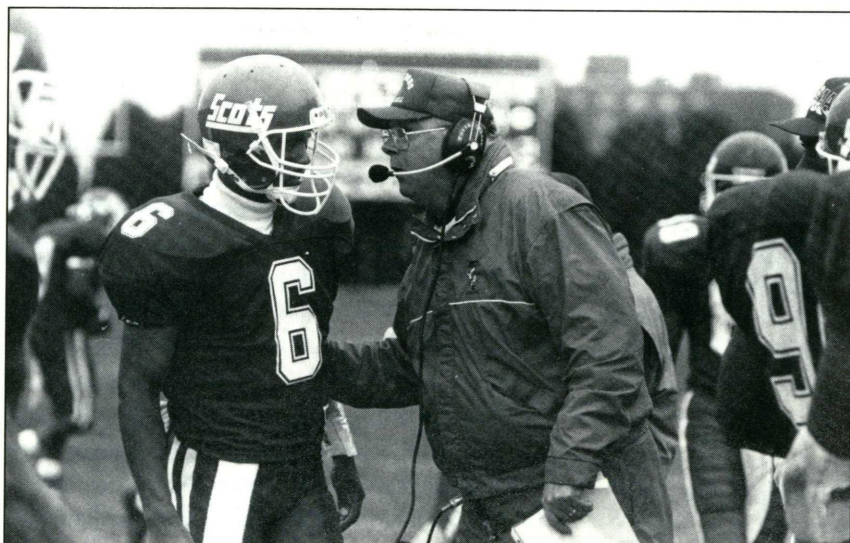

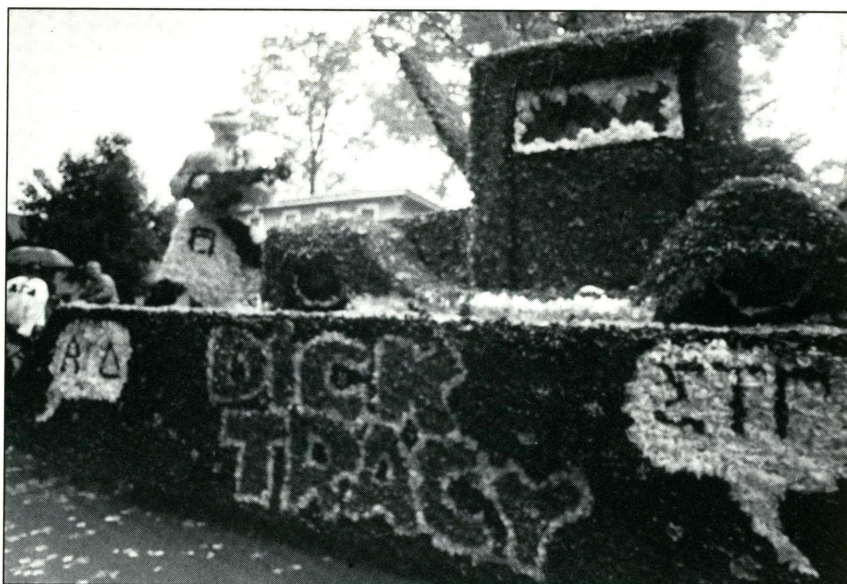

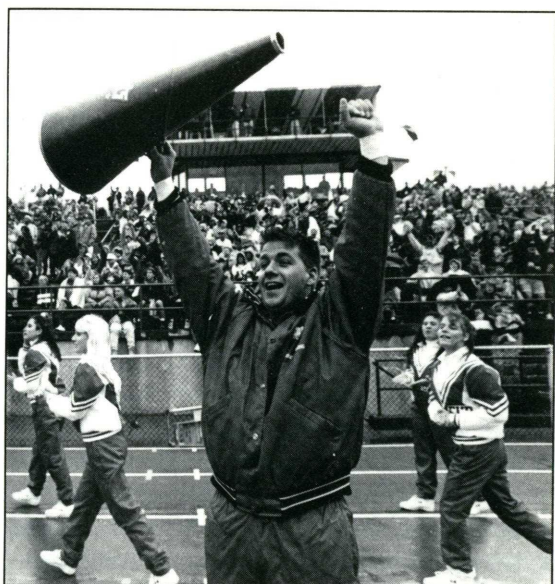

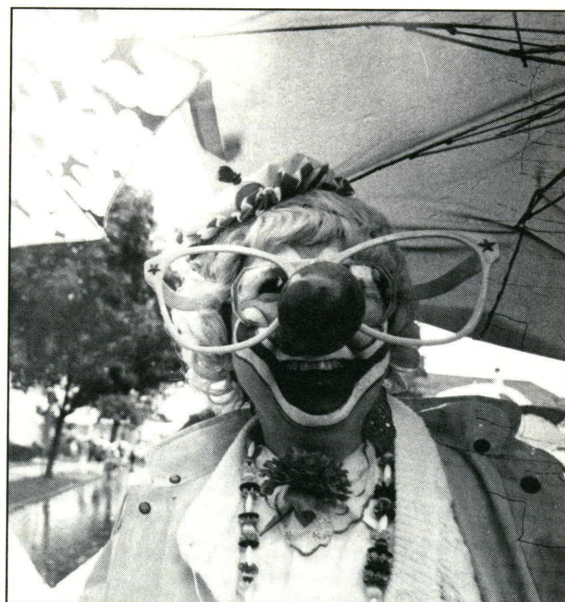

The weekend was capped off with a chilly, but dry day Sunday for the 5K Run and "Tot Trot," with proceeds going to the Karen Snyder Wilson Memorial Fund. More than 60 runners participated in the race and nearly 30 local and alumni children participated in the Tot Trot which was a big hit! Jeff Lemley ('78 and '84) and Patty Moore ('79) organized these events for the second year in a row and they hope to see it grow even larger next year.

Speaking of next year, mark your calendars now - Homecoming 1994 will be on October 7, 8, and 9.

From the stance, the concentration and the outfit, one might think that's an LPGA touring pro lining up a putt at the Second Annual Alumni Homecoming Golf Outing. But it's really Andrea Stevenson-Conner '87, secretary of the Alumni Association. Watching are Linda Stevenson (Andrea's mom, a banker at Integra in Erie); Debbie Kirk '91, of Edinboro's physics and technology department (and wife of Alumni Board member Jim Kirk '74); and Rhonda Steele Elliott '72, now employed at Millersville University. Outing winners, with a sizzling team score of 65, were Erie optometrist Dr. Marty Simmons '77; his dad, retired Edinboro professor John Simmons; Lanny Rogers of Cochranon; and Bob Neidich of Franklin.

MY VIEW

... Good givers have faith in the institution that receives the gift ... but the best givers care so passionately about a cause that they combine the gift with personal involvement and volunteered time. That's what gives the greatest satisfaction of all – to give completely to a cause in which one believes deeply.

After 40 years of both asking for and making major gifts to worthwhile causes, I've seen the difference between good givers and bad givers. Fortunately I have seen and been inspired by a lot of good givers, but unfortunately I have witnessed a lot of bad givers as well.

Here's what I think good givers do:

► They aim to be good givers. Like any other important endeavor they undertake, good givers want to do it well. That takes thought, planning, and an attitude that I characterize as trusteeship – the conviction that we all are trustees of the money we have earned or inherited. It is fun to have money only if it can help others, but distributing money in a way that makes a difference is a difficult and wonderful challenge.

► They decide how much to give in a particular year, and in a lifetime as well. There is no right answer to this question, but each person should decide how much he or she can give. In making that decision, it may help to look at some statistics on giving trends. The people of this country give on average 2.5 per cent of their income. That's up from 1.8 per cent a decade earlier. The amazing – and shameful – fact is that low-income givers contribute a higher percentage of their income than their wealthier counterparts. Those who make between $10,000 and $20,000 give 3.2 per cent of their income, compared to only 1.8 per cent for those who make between $50,000 and $75,000 and 2.9 per cent for those who earn over $100,000. Good givers donate much more than that.

► They enjoy giving. They would rather say Yes than No, even though they sometimes have to say No. They are turned on by the pitch of the solicitor and always have open ears. They are happy to part with the money because they know it's going to help. For some, giving is only a painful and necessary act forced by societal and social pressures. But not for good givers – for them, it's a joy.

► They never refuse to be solicited. You don't have to give, but you do have to listen if a personal request is made. People who will not listen, who will not see a solicitor, miss out on so much. They narrow their horizons, they shut themselves off from valuable knowledge and input, and they get typed as miserly skinflints. I know an extremely wealthy person who won't ever see a solicitor. He is a miserable person.

► They see the solicitor as quickly as possible. Like "How about tomorrow at 10:30?" not "Oh, I couldn't possibly consider that until December, or next year, or after I get back from my around-the-world cruise," or "Call me in a year." What help are those answers to people involved in a worthy cause?

► They are always humble, never arrogant. Good givers recognize that the solicitor is doing far more than they are for the good of the cause or the community. All donors are being asked for is money. The solicitor has already contributed time, energy, and money – probably a far higher proportion of his or her income than he or she is asking the donor to give. Solicitors therefore should be congratulated, thanked, and encouraged. Good givers treat the solicitors with respect, admiration, and appreciation.

► They respond to the solicitation as quickly as possible. That doesn't mean that they have to answer right when the pitch is made, but good givers try to get back with a telephone call and a confirming letter within a day or so. Good givers do not make the solicitors sweat it out, call back for an answer, or write another solicitation letter. An early commitment by a donor is infinitely more helpful to an organization than a late one. Even an early rejection is far better than a late one. When good givers say No, they do it in a thoughtful and helpful way – and promptly.

When donors delay their answers, they can cause the organization infinite trouble. The donor's name comes up at every meeting of the development committee; the committee members discuss how and when and who has to call the donor again; they start to argue over how to handle the donor; and the donor becomes a problem.

I know a large giver who is solicited for his favorite cause early in each year but never confirms his gift until December 31 – and then only after repeated letters and calls. Who is he kidding? He's not a good giver. He just enjoys being fussed over. Some are even worse: They delay making up their minds, dangling the possibility of a gift in order to be wooed and molycoddled. What a way to treat a non-profit institution about which one theoretically cares!

► They give as much, not as little, as they can. Some givers automatically give half or even one-fourth of what they are asked for and so, of course, they are always asked for two or four times as much as is hoped for. Others give the smallest amount required to get on a certain list of donors. Sometimes donors should try giving twice as much as they were asked for – what fun they will have! Such a gift can open up a whole new world of excitement and involvement for them.

The main thing, though, is to give thoughtfully. Good givers think about the size of the drive, whether they should be part of it, their position on the giving pyramid, and how much they can give in relation to other demands. They think about the effect of the gift on the drive, and the amount they donate is the result of a thoughtful, well-researched decision. It is not based purely on the size of the request unless, of course, the request makes perfectly good sense.

► They pay immediately, or as soon as possible. A gift paid at the start of an organization's fiscal year is worth much more than one paid just as the books are being closed at the end of the year, in which case the organization has had absolutely no use of that money for the entire year.

The same thing is true of capital or endowment campaigns. Often donors have to spread their gifts out over several years to make the donation as substantial as possible. But donors should not kid themselves. A five-year gift in equal installments is worth only about 75 to 80 per cent of an up-front gift. The sooner they can pay off a long-term commitment, the better givers they are. It can make a big difference to the financial well-being of an institution.

► They are not demanding. Good givers don't ask for special consideration and special treatment. Good givers give freely rather than with all sorts of conditions. Good givers have faith in the institution that receives the gift. If they don't, they shouldn't make the gift in the first place.

All of those characteristics could apply to passive givers, those who only give and never participate. But the best givers care so passionately about a cause that they combine the gift with personal involvement and volunteered time. That's what gives the greatest satisfaction of all – to give completely to a cause in which one believes deeply. That has to be one of life's greatest joys and satisfactions.

Fund-Raising Highlights

Edinboro University celebrated one of its best fund-raising years ever in 1992-93, raising more than $1 million. Total giving was $1,324,353, an increase of $78,681, or 6.32 percent, over 1991-92.

Alumni giving showed a marked increase, with gifts totalling $183,502, up $10,258 – nearly seven percent – from 1991-92. The participation rate among alumni also rose to 18.4 percent, up from 15.5 percent in FY 91-92, as well as the average gift, which increased to $44.59 from $40.52.

The pledge fulfillment rate for both alumni phonathons was 78 percent, an increase from 73 percent last year. Overall, the fall and spring phonathons raised $110,091.

Giving from four other sources also rose in 1992-93; friends of the University (+$164,072); athletics (+$560,912); gifts-in-kind (+$16,215); and employees (+$3,257).

Accreditation Reaffirmed by Middle States Association

Edinboro University's accreditation has been reaffirmed for the next ten years by the Middle States Association of Colleges and Schools. In a July report released from the Middle State's Philadelphia headquarters, Howard Simmons, the Association's executive director, announced that Edinboro had successfully completed the year-and-a-half long self-study and subsequent site examination that led to the accreditation action.

Accreditation by Middle States – a non-profit association serving elementary, secondary, and higher education institutions through programs of self-study, evaluation and accreditation, and other developmental services – accords Edinboro University full status as an institution of higher learning.

"We are, of course, very pleased with the vote of confidence from the Middle States Association after an extensive review of our programs and efforts," said President Foster F. Diebold. "The Middle States site team was particularly impressed with the broadly participative self-study undertaken by the university community, and they acknowledged our progress in administrative and fiscal areas during the ten years since the last site visit.

However, credit is due not only to university administration, but also to the faculty and students who participated in the self-study," Diebold said.

Edinboro was first accredited by Middle States in 1949, and its last full accreditation visit occurred in April 1983 before Edinboro attained university status and membership in the 14-university State System of Higher Education. Periodic reviews are required to reaffirm accreditations midway between the 10-year evaluations. Edinboro last five-year periodic review report was accepted by Middle States in June 1988.

"Overall, the Middle States said we were a strong university," said Diebold. "Their report identified no serious weaknesses in the University's administration, and they were very positive about the institution and our commitment to our mission."

Presidential Appointments

- * Edinboro President Foster F. Diebold has been appointed to the membership of the Leadership Council of the Northeast-Midwest Institute, a regional component of the Center for Regional Policy, located in Washington, D.C.

Formed in 1987, the Leadership Council is a distinguished group of corporate, academic, and labor leaders who present private-sector viewpoints on how public policies should be shaped to create jobs and expand businesses in northeastern and midwestern states.

- * President Diebold was recently appointed to the membership of the Pennsylvania Humanities Council. He will serve a three-year term beginning November 1.

The Pennsylvania Humanities Council – a private, non-profit organization supported by grants from the National Endowment for the Humanities, foundations, corporations and individuals – promotes public understanding of the humanities within Pennsylvania. With an annual operating budget of $1.4 million, the Council awards grants to other non-profit organizations for special public programs in the humanities across the Commonwealth.

- * Earlier this year, Diebold was appointed to the membership of the National Committee on United States-China Relations, the leading national, non-partisan, public affairs body devoted to building constructive and durable relations between the two countries on a number of policy issues.

Dr. R. Gerard Longo ('65) Speaks on Outcome-Based Education

One of Pennsylvania's leading proponents of education reform spoke recently at Outcome-Based Education Day at Edinboro University. Dr. R. Gerard Longo, a member of the Pennsylvania Board of Education and superintendent of the Quaker Valley School District, presented a luncheon address to area school superintendents and University officials.

Longo believes Outcome-Based Education (OBE) will allow school districts to use their resources more efficiently and weed out dysfunctional activities. It sets standards that all 501 school districts in Pennsylvania will be accountable for. It will also unite the districts while recognizing the differences among them.

Longo has had a distinguished career in public school education. Following his graduation from Edinboro in 1965, he taught English for one year in Lockport, N.Y., before taking a teaching position at Hampton High School near Pittsburgh.

In 1974 Longo became the assistant principal at Keystone Oaks High School. Four years later he was appointed principal at North Hills High School. In 1981 he was promoted to director of secondary education for the district.

Longo's rise to national prominence began in 1985 when he was appointed superintendent of the Steel Valley School District. In six years he turned one of the state's worst school programs into one of the most innovative. He created the Office of the Future in the school's business education program. Five computer labs were established with a total investment of $500,000. He helped to bring the teachers and the school board together. Using the themes of teacher empowerment and high technology, Longo created the Middle School of the Future from a run-down building. His accomplishments came to the attention of Prince Charles who visited the school district in March of 1988.

Since 1992 Longo has been the superintendent of Quaker Valley where his mission is to create a school system that is measured against the world's best.

As part of National Collegiate Alcohol Awareness Week, Edinboro students recently participated in a mock car crash. Students from Alpha Phi Omega service fraternity coordinated the event in conjunction with the Edinboro Volunteer Fire Department, the Central Erie County Paramedic Association, Emergycare, and the Life Star helicopter.

New Student Trustee Appointed

Pennsylvania Governor Robert Casey has appointed Sonya Lee, a junior at Edinboro University, to be the student representative to the University's Council of Trustees. Lee, a dean's list nursing major with a minor in psychology, is from Cherry Hill, N.J.

Lee is a member of the Student Nurses of Edinboro and Minority Students United, and is a participant in the Intercultural Diplomats Program, a program of the University's Intercultural Relations Office where upperclassmen orient and mentor freshmen. She is also the epistoleus (corresponding secretary) for the Alpha Kappa Alpha sorority, and has done volunteer work for both the Special Olympics and the Homeless Citizens of Erie.

Student representatives to the 11-member Councils of Trustees at Pennsylvania's 14 state-owned universities are appointed by the governor of the Commonwealth under provisions of Act 188 of 1982, the enabling legislation for the State System of Higher Education. They are appointed for four-year terms or until graduation.

Edinboro University Links Academically with Morocco

Edinboro President Foster F. Diebold and Dr. Abdellatif Kriem, representing H. M. King Hassan of Morocco, have signed a formal academic linkage agreement calling for the exchange of students, scholars and administrators between the University and the Kingdom of Morocco. Kriem, signing on behalf of the Association Ribat Al-Fath, a Rabat-based, quasi-governmental body that promotes educational, cultural and economic development, is the personal interpreter to King Hassan and a professor of English at Muhammad V University.

Edinboro University already has academic linkage agreements with seven institutions in Pakistan and with Zibo College in Shandong Province, Peoples' Republic of China.

Faculty Advisory Committee helps to Shape the Future

Since 1985, a group of faculty has quietly been providing important advice and comment to Edinboro President Foster Diebold. The Faculty Advisory Committee, a group of 32 dedicated volunteers, is providing new insight and new direction on issues important to the future of the University.

Diebold created the committee with a two-fold purpose – as a way to seek advice from faculty on matters affecting the University, and as a way for the President to provide information to faculty on a wide variety of topics. Diebold solicits opinions from the committee by presenting it with assignments – asking members to study and report on issues of particular importance or merely asking for comment on a topic. The committee, in turn, can present its own concerns to the President.

English professor Dr. Louella (Bunny) Bucho ('62) has chaired the committee since its inception when it had only 10 members. Today, with 32 members, it has formed sub-committees allowing faculty to work on projects close to their interests and expertise.

"One of the most important roles played by the committee is that of shared input and collegiality," said Diebold. "It's not a healthy thing for all the advice I receive to come in large part from within the administration. The faculty input is crucial because it provides among others, a student perspective that otherwise is missing."

Students to Survey Community for Edinboro Fire Department

The Edinboro Volunteer Fire Department is getting assistance from a group of Edinboro students. The marketing research class of professor Sherry Reynolds has been asked by the fire company to survey Edinboro area residents to find out how the volunteers can better serve the community.

Kim Kennedy, an officer in the fire department and director of the University's housing and residence life office, presented the proposal to the marketing class. She asked them to find out about residents' interest in fire department services and activities. The fire department is also interested in knowing how residents might want to support their fire department through donations of money, time and expertise.

The University will provide the use of its alumni phone bank for students to survey the community by telephone.

A Matter of Pride for the Lady Scots

Three of the past four seasons, the Edinboro University Lady Scots basketball team has advanced to the NCAA Division II national tournament. Duplicating the feat of qualifying for the championship field of 16 will be a major challenge for seven-year head coach Stan Swank in 1993-94.

Gone from last year's 18-12 NCAA East Regional squad through graduation are first-team All-American forward Jeannine Jean-Pierre, guard Andrea Williams and center Terri Ayers. Jean-Pierre scored more than 1,000 career points, while Williams ranks seventh in career assists, and Ayers first in blocked shots.

What Swank and his assistant, Sarah Jay, do have to look forward to are eight players with post-season experience, including four who have started for the Lady Scots in the past. Leading the way will be last year's Pennsylvania State Athletic Conference Western Division "Rookie of the Year" Lori Montgomery. She averaged 9.5 points and 3.3 assists per game in 1992-93. Also playing key roles will be senior Cathlene Criss and junior Pam Artman. Entering her third year as a starting guard, Artman projects to finish in the top 20 among Edinboro's all-time scorers and rebounders.

Besides Montgomery, five other sophomores will have an impact, along with three junior college players and one freshman. Having advanced to the PSAC championship playoff round four of the past five seasons, the Lady Scots' hardwood success is well known across the state.

Scots Regroup, then Reload

Other people's expectations can sometimes turn out to be a coach's worst nightmare. Such was the case for Edinboro basketball coach Greg Walcavich and his Scots last year. Picked by the PSAC coaches in the pre-season to capture the Conference title, the Scots posted a 12-17 mark in a year plagued by injuries and failed last-second shots.

Not dwelling on the past, Walcavich enters the season as Edinboro's second all-time winningest coach and looks to get the Scots back on track in 1993-94.

Despite the loss of All-American Adam Cheek and guards Sean Gibson and Greg Fox, Edinboro returns a wealth of talent, spearheaded by 1991-92 All-PSAC performer Price Williams. Williams sat out the entire 1992-93 season with a knee injury. He netted over 15 points per game for the Scots two years ago.

Also expected to make major contributions will be returnees Walter Reap, Philip Melton, Lasana Crider, Alex Boyden and Exavier Zollicoffer. New faces include junior college transfers Tyrone Mason and Johan Clay and freshman John Williams from nearby Girard High School.

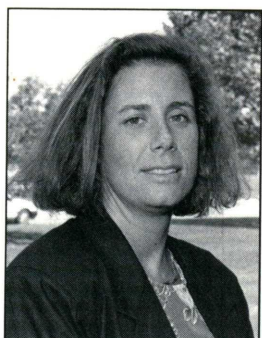

The Scots open their season with the Daniel Overheim Memorial Tournament at Edinboro, slated for November 19-20. The Scots will welcome Gannon, Millersville University, and Davis & Elkins (West Virginia) for the annual tipoff classic.

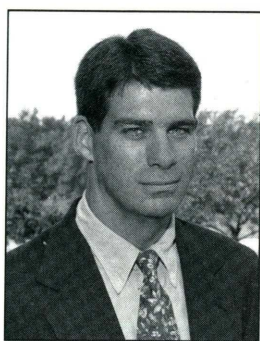

Tim Blystone '90, a teacher and assistant basketball coach at General McLane High School in Edinboro, caddied for long-hitting pro golfer John Daly at last summer's Greater Erie Charity Classic at the famed Kahkwa Club. Said Blystone of 1991 PGA champion Daly, arguably the most colorful and popular player on today's pro tour, "He's just an all-around great guy and it was a once in a lifetime event for me." Daly won the Erie Charity Classic in 1991.

Three New Faces in Edinboro Athletics

Jody Mooradian
Associate Athletic Director

Dan Langan
Swimming Coach

Arnie White
Golf Coach

Edinboro University has announced the hiring of Ms. Jody Mooradian as associate athletic director, Dan Langan as men's and women's swimming coach, and Dr. Arnold White as golf coach.

Jody Mooradian, an attorney who comes to Edinboro from the University of California, Los Angeles (UCLA), replaces Dr. Kathleen Lipkovich as associate athletic director. Prior to her seven-month appointment at UCLA, Mooradian was a practicing attorney for the law firm of Devine Millimet and Branch in Manchester, New Hampshire. She received a bachelor's degree from the University of New Hampshire and a master's degree and doctorate from the Delaware Law School.

At UCLA, her duties included compliance matters, NCAA rules interpretations, preparation of Title IX survey and evaluating prospective student-athlete transcripts and 48-H forms for admission to and eligibility at the California school. Her assignments at Edinboro will include similar responsibilities, plus travel and scheduling for Edinboro's 16 intercollegiate sports.

Dan Langan, who replaces Paul Stamm as head men's and women's swimming coach, moves across the Pennsylvania Conference from Shippensburg University. He earned his bachelor's degree from the University of Pittsburgh and a master's in public administration from Shippensburg.

Langan will coach both Edinboro squads after directing the Shippensburg women's program since 1990 and both Raider teams since 1992. Last season, he led Shippensburg's men to the PSAC team title and a ninth-place showing at the NCAA Division II national championships. Langan earned conference "Coach of the Year" honors on the men's side for his accomplishments. His women's squad took state runners-up honors last year and improved each of the past three years at the national championship, peaking at seventh a year ago. He has guided 16 All-American swimmers over the past three years at Shippensburg.

Edinboro's men swimmers took 11th place at the NCAA Division II nationals last season, while the women captured top 20 honors, placing 17th.

Arnie White, currently a professor in the health and physical education department at Edinboro, takes over for former coach Bob Orr. White also coordinates the University's Human Performance Laboratory in McComb Fieldhouse.

White was the head golf coach at Lake Sumter Community College in Florida from 1989 to 1991 and an assistant at the University of Northern Colorado from 1983 to 1986. He earned degrees from the University of Georgia in Athens and Mercer University in Macon, Ga.

BRUCE! Captures 10th World Medal

No athlete, professional or amateur, has ever dominated their sport like Edinboro University's own Bruce Baumgartner. Fresh off his gold medal freestyle wrestling performance in Barcelona, Baumgartner hasn't rested on his laurels.

Taking his wrestling success to yet another level, he recently captured the gold medal at the Freestyle World Championships in Toronto, August 25-28. With his latest accomplishment, Baumgartner set a United States record by earning his tenth World Medal. He now owns four World-level titles, including World championship gold medals in 1986 and 1993 and Olympic gold medals in 1984 and 1992. His most recent performance led the United States to its first-ever team championship. The American squad had finished runner-up since 1986.

Baumgartner won by referee's decision over Ukrainian Merab Valiev, 2-0, in the finals to capture the gold. He scored a pair of takedowns, including one with two seconds left in the match, to secure the win.

"This is just the same as the other World titles," Baumgartner said. "It's not what you do in the past, it's what you do this year that counts."

Edinboro's gentle giant remains as elusive about his future as he does to his wrestling opponents on the mat. "I still like competing and I'm not making any rash decisions about my days ahead. The day I retire will come, but not yet," smiled Baumgartner. (You will recall that Bruce was featured as the cover story in the Fall 1992 issue of this magazine.)
