Message from the Presidents

It gives me great pleasure to announce the appointment of Dr. Frank G. Pogue, Jr., as the next president of Edinboro University of Pennsylvania. I am pleased to share my view of the good fortune bestowed upon Edinboro University with Dr. Pogue's appointment, for he brings exceptional talents and leadership experience to the presidency of our fine University.

Dr. Pogue's selection from a strong field of candidates came after nearly a year of dedicated work by the Council of Trustees and the all-University presidential search committee. Mr. R. Benjamin Wiley, who chairs the Council, also chaired the search committee, and I commend him and the members for their astuteness and for the steady and thoughtful role they played in concluding the search locally.

Edinboro alumni will also be pleased to know of the Alumni Association's strong participation throughout the search process in the person of Daniel Higham, the current secretary of the Association's Board of Directors and a 1970 Edinboro graduate. His tireless efforts on behalf of the Association and the committee contributed forthrightly to the success of the search and selection.

President-select Pogue will assume office on July 1, 1996. He comes to Edinboro from the State University of New York System Central Administration in Albany, where he has served as the vice chancellor for student affairs and special programs since 1986 and in various other leadership positions since 1973. It is gratifying to me personally and professionally to see the succession of University leadership pass to a proven administrator and scholar of Dr. Pogue's character and academic credentials. His experience and strengths in the areas of higher education management, student life, and the dynamics of a public university system will lead Edinboro University into the next century with surety and wisdom.

I know that all of you will join me and Mrs. Diebold in extending a warm and gracious welcome to Dr. and Mrs. Pogue in the months and years to come.

Foster F. Diebold, President
Edinboro University of Pennsylvania

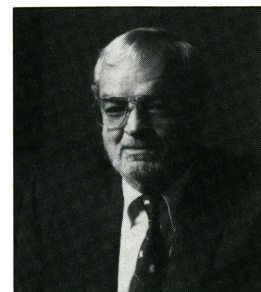

Looking ahead can be risky work. There are too many variables to predict the future in any field of endeavor. Weather, sporting events, and assorted political elections have always surprised even the most astute "expert." I am pleased that the future of our university and alumni association is certainly more predictable. Two recent events have ensured that a bright and cheerful forecast characterizes the future of both entities.

First, the Alumni Board of Directors continued an established biennial tradition by employing a retreat format for our November meeting. During the weekend, we were able to revisit our mission statement and goals for the years 1995-1999. Each committee started a plan that will help move ideas into action. Leading us through the process was retired Edinboro dean Dr. Jerry Covert. With his guidance, it proved to be a productive and worthwhile undertaking.

The second event that predicts future success for the University and Alumni Association is the appointment of a successor to President Foster Diebold, who is retiring in June of this year. The Executive Committee of the Board of Governors for the State System of Higher Education has appointed Dr. Frank G. Pogue, Jr., as the next president of Edinboro University. On behalf of the Board of Directors, my sincerest congratulations to Dr. Pogue. Also, many thanks need to be extended to Alumni Board Secretary Dan Higham for the extensive hours of work he contributed while serving as a member of the search committee.

As has been established with President Diebold, a strong relationship with the University President is one of our goals for 1996. If we, as an Alumni Association, are to promote and support Edinboro University, we must begin with our support of the chief executive - its president. Doing our part to make your university and your alumni association an example of excellence in the State System begins with this positive relationship. Let me begin doing my part, as President of the Alumni Board, by extending a welcome to Dr. Pogue.

Joe and Sue Palka – A Washington, D.C. Power Couple

Washington, D.C., has its share of power couples. There are Bill and Hillary Clinton, Al and Tipper Gore, Robert and Elizabeth Dole, and Joe and Sue (Pompeani) Palka. You'll be forgiven if you don't recognize that last pair. But earlier this year, Washingtonian magazine named the Palkas one of the town's power couples for 1995.

Joe, 43, has established himself as a playwright, newspaper columnist and actor, and is now talk show host of the Joe Palka Show on WRC radio. Sue, 39, is weather forecaster for Channel 5 in Washington. Both are graduates of Edinboro University of Pennsylvania – Joe in 1974, Sue in 1977.

What makes their story interesting is not only what they have accomplished individually, but also their potential together that the public has seen only glimpses of. In December, WRC asked Joe and Sue to co-host four days of talk radio, broadcasting live from the Salvation Army's distribution center from 1 to 4 p.m. Competing in a time slot against nationally syndicated talkers Rush Limbaugh, G. Gordon Liddy, and others, the Palkas were a smash.

Their witty and warm on-air personas are no different than their private personalities. They offer a non-stop dialogue – a running commentary on their family, friends and former classmates, their careers, and, of course, themselves.

Joe: "Her stature in the broadcast community is phenomenal."

Sue: "It's not that big."

Joe: "It's really, really big. Trust me."

Sue: "No, it's not."

Joe: "She is universally liked as a person and respected for her ability on the air, which is a combination you don't very often find."

Joe's career in radio began right after graduation in 1974 on WMDI in Erie and WMGW in Meadville. In 1976 he took the morning man job at WEDO in Pittsburgh. A year later he became morning man on WRIE where he became a local celebrity. On May 22, 1981, the late mayor of Erie, Louis Tullio, proclaimed Joe Palka Day in recognition of Joe's many hours of community service.

His first big break came later that year when he was recruited by WOW radio in Omaha to be their morning drive personality. Less than two years later he got a second break, landing the afternoon drive position on WRVA in Richmond, a top-rated, 50,000-watt, clear-channel station. As one of the station's star personalities he took part in countless public-speaking engagements, walk-a-thons and public appearances, and was active in many community activities such as the Boy Scouts, the Virginia Museum Theatre and the Virginia Association for Retarded Citizens.

He was lured away from Richmond in 1985 by WMAL radio in Washington where he was the weekend personality and production director. Just one year later, however, the station changed ownership, and Palka and several other personalities were let go.

The sudden and unexpected dismissal brought about a period of intense inner turmoil for the Palkas. They had just purchased their home two months earlier, their first child was less than a year old, and Sue was in her first year as a weather forecaster for WTTG in Washington. When Joe was offered a job by a station in Buffalo, they had to make a decision about whose career would come first.

"The Buffalo station was one I had listened to when I was at WRIE in Erie," he said. "Here was one of my dream stations saying, 'Joe, come be one of our stars.' And all of a sudden Sue was the major bread winner."

Together they decided to allow Sue's career to flourish while Joe played Mr. Mom. Although no longer in radio, he used his talents to teach at the University of Maryland, write a media column for the Washington Times, and devote more time to his playwriting career.

Among his works are The Last Stand of the Polish Sharpshooters, and Executive Leverage. Sharpshooters received critical acclaim for its humorous look at the people at an Erie social club. Joe said he drew upon his experience of being unemployed for part of the play. "You are the one who makes your job great. The job does not make you great," he said. "The characters of the Sharpshooters club understood that they brought dignity to what they did." Executive Leverage, an anti-war and political satire, was nominated for the prestigious Helen Hayes Award in 1993. He is currently writing a musical on Winston Churchill.

Joe's radio career was resurrected in 1994 when he began his current show on WRC for which he has been nominated for best radio talk show host. He unabashedly calls himself a "liberal voice, stemming the tide of fascism. There aren't many left of us, you know."

Ironically, the station is also home to the Oliver North Show, whom Palka calls a very gracious man. "I disagree totally with everything he says," said Palka, "but he is not a backstabber."

Sue has just completed her tenth year as weather forecaster at Fox's WTTG. As one of Washington's best known and most respected media personalities, she has received five or six Emmy nominations, but has yet to win. "I'm starting to feel like the Susan Lucci of weather forecasters."

Her career path into the media was not as direct as Joe's. She graduated from Edinboro with a degree in elementary education and spent the first four years of her career teaching in Erie and Girard.

Her interest in performing began while dating Joe, who was acting at the Erie Playhouse in Most Happy Fella. "I watched Joe's rehearsals and really got into it," said Sue, "so I auditioned for Death of a Salesman."

She won the part of Ms. Forsythe and soon after got the starring role in the musical Gypsy.

Joe and Sue were married in 1980, and a friend at a local ad agency placed Sue in a couple of television commercials. Eric Johnson, then the news director at Erie's WICU-TV, saw Sue's work and invited her to audition for a weekend weather position. She accepted, came in one evening to watch veteran weatherman Vance McBryde, and later made an audition tape.

Before she could get an on-air position, Joe was hired in Omaha. Nevertheless, Sue was bitten by the television bug and became determined to get into television. When they moved to Richmond, Sue auditioned at station WTVR, and within a few days had her first television job as a weekend weather forecaster.

When Joe landed the WMAL position, Sue decided to break into Washington television, but was intimidated by the prospect of competing in a major market. At that time there were no women forecasters in Washington and the stations strongly stressed meteorology. When an opening developed at WTTG, Sue submitted her audition tape and was called a few weeks later for an audition.

"I was four months pregnant by the time I got the call," said Sue. "I thought there was no way they were going to put a woman on the air – especially a pregnant one. So I hid my pregnancy for the audition."

She told them about the pregnancy after the audition. The station hired her anyway, and the pregnancy became an asset, not a drawback. "When the station did its research several months later, I was already one of the most recognized people," she said. "I think the pregnancy had a lot to do with that."

Sue credits much of her success to Joe – her biggest fan and a tireless and enthusiastic promoter – and to her teaching career. "Teaching was part of the grand design of my life," she said. "I never worked harder than when I was a teacher. My background as a teacher has been invaluable. If you can be a good teacher you can do just about anything. So many people in the media were former teachers. They make good spokespersons."

Teaching runs in the family. Sue is the daughter of Hugh and Ginny Pompeani of Erie. Her father is a 1951 graduate of Edinboro and a retired elementary school principal.

It's important to Sue that she is recognized first and foremost as a forecaster, not just an attractive weather girl. She is certified by the National Weather Association and is confident her forecasts are just as accurate as those done by any meteorologist. "The weather forecast is my forecast. I have a high standard for my presentation. I want it to be good. Joe tapes my broadcast, and as soon as I come home I look at it. If I don't like it, I can't look at it again."

"She's her own worst critic," interjected Joe.

"I need Joe's guidance," Sue explained. "You're only as good as your last broadcast. It's important for me to pass the Joe test."

She's already passed the Presidential test. Sometime after President Bush left the White House, an insider told the Palkas that the President was a regular viewer.

Even with all her professional accomplishments, an adoring husband and their two children – Elizabeth, 10, and Nora, 6, Sue is looking forward to more opportunities.

"I know I can do more than I'm doing now," she said. "When I was growing up, I believed that women only had three career options: to be a teacher, a nurse, or a secretary. When I go out to talk to groups in schools I tell the girls to look at all the possibilities."

She is looking forward to doing more reporting, more local programming about kids and education, and perhaps magazine shows. But there are hints that Joe and Sue could be doing much more, and they hope, doing it together.

Joe has always been involved in theater – either as a performer or playwright. He had a principle role in an episode of television's America's Most Wanted, and he recently filmed an episode of Homicide where he played a cheesy landlord. In 1995 he appeared with his daughters in a dinner theater production of Gypsy – he, of course, had the male lead. He even was a guest host of Broadcast House Live on Channel 9.

Sue appeared in the Fox motion picture War of the Roses with Michael Douglas and Kathleen Turner. Sue plays herself – a weather forecaster. She was also asked by the Discovery Channel to anchor its one-minute environmental newsbreaks called "Green Alert."

It was their recent successful co-hosting of the radio talk show, however, that suggested bigger things may be in store for the two of them.

"Joe is my favorite person in the world," said Sue. "Doing the talk show with him was a complete blast. It was so intimate and natural."

If the producers of Live with Regis and Kathie Lee should ever need substitute hosts, they would do well to consider Joe and Sue.

David Mikolajczyk – Country Pure Foods

David Mikolajczyk's name may not be as well known as Rockefeller, Iaccoca or Gates, but within his own industry, he is one of the nation's most important players. The 1964 graduate of Edinboro University is CEO of Country Pure Foods, the largest independent juice company serving the food service industry in the nation. It serves corporations and supermarket chains in 32 states, reaching two-thirds of the nation's population.

Country Pure Foods was formed earlier this year by the merger of Natural Country Farms of Ellington, Ct., and Mikolajczyk's Akron-based company, Ohio Pure Foods.

An Erie native and graduate of Cathedral Prep, Mikolajczyk came to Edinboro to major in physics and math. Although he had no intention of pursuing a business career, he credits his Edinboro training for part of his success in the corporate world.

"I was able to apply the principles of more objective quantitative thinking to business," said Mikolajczyk. "This experience in analytical disciplines from Edinboro, coupled with my business education from Northwestern University, where I received my MBA in 1978, provided me with a clear point of difference from most of my contemporaries. After doing complex math and physics problems, most of the business opportunities I had seemed relatively easy by comparison."

Mikolajczyk's career is a textbook case of how to combine analytical skills with a great degree of perseverance and sacrifice to reach the highest levels of corporate America. It began quietly following graduation in 1964 when he married classmate and Youngsville, Pa., native Janet Anderson and took a teaching job in the Wattsburg area schools.

In December of 1967 he joined Westinghouse Electric as an industrial engineer. Within six months he became a buyer for the company, negotiating and expediting numerous government contracts. In January of 1970 he went to work for the Technicon Corporation in Tarrytown, New York, as a supervisory buyer. By the time he left two years later he had been promoted three times, becoming project manager of Technicon's main product.

An Erie native and graduate of Cathedral Prep, Mikolajczyk came to Edinboro to major in physics and math. Although he had no intention of pursuing a business career, he credits his Edinboro training for part of his success in the corporate world.

Despite his success, he eventually became aware that the business was too much of his own and not enough of his employees'. He felt an obligation to allow them to have an interest in its success. He created a profit-sharing program that paid out 26 percent of actual earnings over the first two years.

Next stop for Mikolajczyk was Abbott Labs in Chicago, once again moving quickly through the corporation, from manager of drug and chemical purchases to director of distribution operations to his final post in 1977 as director of technical and consultant services. He returned to the tri-state region in 1978 as corporate vice president of Welch Foods in Westfield, N. Y., where he was responsible for integrating the functions of purchasing, production planning, inventory management, transportation, distribution and customer service.

Following that brief, but successful assignment, Mikolajczyk went to work for Nestle Enterprises, Inc., in Solon, Ohio. From 1980 until he left Nestle in 1992 to acquire Ohio Pure Foods, he held top executive positions in three Nestle subsidiaries. He served as corporate purchasing VP for the Stouffer Corporation for three years, then was a VP for Stouffer Hotels and Resorts. In 1987 he was appointed president of Harper Resources, Inc., a group of five divisions serving hotels, restaurants, office buildings, hospitality centers and corporate travelers. He was also chairman of Nestle's North American Purchasing Council, which made $4 billion in annual purchases for 14 Nestle companies.

Mikolajczyk said his four years as president allowed him to become an entrepreneur within Nestle's large corporate environment. "It provided me with the knowledge, experience and courage to acquire my own company," he said. "If I hadn't had the experience as an entrepreneur I wouldn't have been able to do it. You really have to believe in yourself."

Mikolajczyk's success did not happen by accident. He has been guided by four important principles that served him well throughout his career. First, he realized early on that he was the only person who could plan his career. Second, and perhaps most importantly, he made it a point to accept any kind of responsibility. "I was not concerned with titles or money. If my performance was good, I believed the titles and money would take care of themselves." Third, he was willing to be inconvenienced. In reading the biographies of successful people, he discovered many had what Mikolajczyk calls a high level of inconvenience. They were willing to go out of their way to get the job done. Mikolajczyk demonstrated his own level of inconvenience when he went on a month-and-a-half trouble-shooting assignment to South Africa for his company just six weeks after his son was born. Fourth, he was flexible in how he achieved his goals. Although he knew where he wanted to go and what he wanted to achieve, he allowed himself to follow any number of different paths he encountered en route. He said those experiences from other areas gave him more strength and knowledge of the world around him.

That well-rounded expertise paid dividends immediately when he acquired Ohio Pure Foods. Revenues grew at a compounded rate of 20 percent annually. The five-year plan he created was accomplished in three years. New products helped the company capture a bigger share of the market.

Mikolajczyk wanted to create a corporate culture of total quality in every phase of the company's operations and in every one of its employees. He brought in an expert in total quality management from the University of Akron who acted as a facilitator in implementing TQM within the company. "I had to step aside and allow the process to work," said Mikolajczyk.

Despite his success, he eventually became aware that the business was too much of his own and not enough of his employees'. He felt an obligation to allow them to have an interest in its success. He created a profit-sharing program that paid out 26 percent of actual earnings over the first two years.

As early as 1994, Ohio Pure Foods attracted the attention of First Atlantic Capital, Ltd. A year later, First Atlantic merged Ohio Pure Foods with Natural Country Farms, and Mikolajczyk became CEO of a $75 million company with 100 employees in Akron and 200 more in Connecticut. His ongoing challenge as CEO is to combine the cultures of both companies, find the common systems and create synergies of operation, allowing them to work together with greater efficiency. He is doing that by consolidating and streamlining such areas as transportation, distribution, and sales and broker networks.

Although Mikolajczyk is clearly dedicated to his work – he said retirement is not in his vocabulary – he does find time for his family and his community. “Tennis is my favorite pastime,” he said. “Janet and I play socially twice a week.” She is an art history instructor at the college level. Their daughter Allison is a medical social worker, and their son David is majoring in art at Kent State. Mikolajczyk is also an avid reader, primarily of business books. Among his recent titles are The Pursuit of Wow, Victory Secrets of Attila the Hun and Reengineering the Corporation.

He is proud of his work as a board member for the Salvation Army, Akron Family Hospital and Parmadale Family Services. “As good corporate citizens we have a responsibility to the communities where we live and work,” said Mikolajczyk.

He takes his obligations as a board member just as seriously as his corporate duties. And he uses the same analytic skills in solving the problems of the nonprofit organizations.

A case in point is Parmadale, a residential treatment center for children located in a Cleveland suburb. Prior to his appointment, Parmadale had suffered through a variety of leadership styles and policies that were inconsistent and ultimately directionless. Under Mikolajczyk’s influence, Parmadale set objectives that were concrete, attainable and measurable. It developed a three-year marketing plan, conducted much-needed market research, installed more modern bookkeeping techniques and launched its first capital campaign in 35 years.

The results were dramatic. It expanded the number of residential programs from two to eight. In ten years its budget increased from $1 million to $10 million. In that same period, the number of clients served by its community-based programs grew from 100 to 1,600. The fund-raising campaign resulted in the construction of a state-of-the-art intensive treatment facility for children.

The most exciting part of Mikolajczyk’s life may be yet to come. He has set his sights on further consolidating the industry and growing Country Pure Foods into a national juice drink company. At the time of the merger he said the new company would be “a one-stop, full-service premium quality juice/beverage company dedicated to meeting our customers’ needs. Country Pure Foods will offer the broadest product line, greatest packaging alternatives and widest geographic coverage in the industry.” Based on his track record, there is little doubt he will accomplish his goal.

– Brian K. Pitzer

Although Mikolajczyk is clearly dedicated to his work – he said retirement is not in his vocabulary – he does find time for his family and his community. “Tennis is my favorite pastime,” he said. “Janet and I play socially twice a week.” She is an art history instructor at the college level.

Steve Kohler – Revitalizing Meadville's Economy

It would be easy to believe that Meadville, Pa., is a dying town if one were to look only at the number of companies that have closed their doors over the past 20 years – companies like Avtex, Talon and Conrail. But that would be wrong.

While thousands of jobs were lost when the large employers ended operations, thousands more have been created by dozens of smaller companies. The big, antiquated factories are being remodeled and modernized to meet the needs of new businesses which have the potential to grow rapidly.

That these new firms do not have the visibility nor the individual impact of the older ones does not lessen their importance to the new Meadville economy. A diversified economy is likely to be healthier and more valuable in the long run than one which lives and dies by the fortunes of a single large employer.

Meadville's success did not happen overnight nor by accident. It happened in large part because of a network of agencies led by the Crawford County Development Corporation (CCDC) and includes the Meadville Area Industrial Commission (MAIC), and the Meadville Redevelopment Authority (MRA). Headed by Steve Kohler, a 1979 graduate of Edinboro University, the CCDC/MAIC/MRA has become one of the most successful organizations of its kind in the state with 2.5 million square feet of real estate, a staff of 50, and its own railroad, complete with engine.

Kohler said the projects undertaken by the CCDC are intended to upgrade and energize the area economy and to rehabilitate empty industrial buildings with the ultimate goal of returning them to the tax rolls. "We are atypical because we are progressive and are involved in some unique projects," he said.

The heart of the organization's work is its properties. It has taken old, underutilized, blighted industrial plants and converted them into productive, multi-tenant facilities. MRA acquired the former Talon Plant #5 in 1984 and created one of the first small business incubators in the state. It has been very successful, with 23 companies currently there employing 400 people. Several other fledgling businesses have already graduated from the site.

Talon Plant #7, which has 190,000 square feet on 14 acres, has been optioned to a developer who plans to turn much of the property into two office buildings worth a combined $4.5 million.

The CCDC acquired the old Conrail repair shop, sold part of it off, renovated the remaining portion and leased it to new tenants. Two of the occupants – American Industrial Container Corporation and M&P Lumber – still use rail facilities.

The crown jewel of CCDC's properties is the former Avtex Fibers plant. The complex is huge – "a city unto itself," said Kohler. Occupying 300 acres, the main building's central hallway is a quarter of a mile long. Its 12 water wells can produce 12 million gallons of water a day, compared to the four million gallons used by the entire city of Meadville. It had a sewage treatment plant capable of processing 26 million gallons of sewage daily. It even had its own electrical power plant which burned 400 tons of coal a day to produce 15 megawatts of power.

When the Avtex plant closed in 1986, the last 850 people lost their jobs.

Redevelopment of the 1,400,000 square feet of building space (40 acres under roof) began in 1989. Currently, 17 companies are located there employing over 1,000 people. One company, a manufacturer of truck doors for General Motors, has invested more than $20 million in its state-of-the-art plastics injection molding machines and robotics. Other companies include an international packaging company, a designer and manufacturer of bullet-resistant products, and a company that does precision measuring for the tooling and machining industry.

Long-term plans call for new construction on the eastern portion of the property. Other additions will include restaurants, leisure facilities, and video-conferencing capabilities in the technology center which is under construction.

In 1995, local efforts saved a 42-mile stretch of railroad between Meadville and Corry that Conrail wanted to abandon. After more than a year of wrangling, a new governing body – the Northwest Pennsylvania Rail Authority (of which Kohler is a member) – secured $1 million from PennDot and $1.9 million in private financing to purchase the line. Kohler believes rail has an important role to play in the area's economic well being.

"Rail is the most cost-effective method of shipping large items. Without this link, the old Erie Lackawanna southern tier between Chicago and the east coast would have been broken. We would have lost it without the Rail Authority. Had the tracks been taken up, the right of way would have reverted to the adjoining land owners. The rail line was worth saving, if for no other reason than to preserve the right of way."

Kohler listed several other projects the CCDC is working on as well as some of its goals for the future – increasing its capacity to lend; attracting ecologically sound manufacturers in non-emission industries; collaborating with local colleges and universities; recycling tires by using a heat process to reduce them to oil, carbon black and steel; and, perhaps its most ambitious project, coordinating a regional effort to create a large-scale industrial park.

Just recently, the MAIC received $500,000 from the federally-funded Rural Economic and Community Development Service to establish an industrial revolving loan fund which will allow the MAIC to make loans to small and mid-sized companies. Already Kohler is looking at a half-dozen proposals in the $100,000 to $150,000 range.

The 38-year-old Kohler came to his current position naturally, aided with a lot of hard work. His interest in city government began at Meadville High School through a course in municipal planning.

He enrolled at Edinboro University and earned a degree in urban studies in 1979. While at Edinboro he interned in the Meadville city manager's office which gave him his first hands-on experience. The office hired him right out of college. "I finished class on a Friday, graduated on Saturday, and started work on Monday," said Kohler.

For a short period of time he worked for the Western Crawford County Council of Governments as a circuit rider manager, providing management assistance to municipalities and townships. He returned to Meadville in 1980 as assistant superintendent of parks and public buildings. In 1982 he joined the MRA as its industrial development coordinator and became deputy director in 1985. He served in that position until 1994 when he was appointed acting executive director and formally became the full-time executive director in 1995.

Kohler also serves on the boards of the Pennsylvania Economic Development Association, Vallonia Industries, Inc., Pennsylvania Incubator Association, and the Small Development Center Advisory Board.

Texas Alumni Enjoy Visit from Campus Officials

Edinboro graduates living in Texas had an opportunity recently to visit with Edinboro officials Jack Martin, associate vice president for institutional advancement, and Janet L. Bowker '84, director of alumni affairs, who traveled to San Antonio, Houston and Dallas/Ft. Worth in January. These areas were selected because of their high concentrations of the more than 300 Edinboro alumni living in the state. The last visit to Texas was in January, 1993.

San Antonio –

While we were hoping to host group dinners in each city, the response was limited, so plans had to be adjusted. Jack and Janet were met at the San Antonio airport by Dr. Dewey Davis ('49) who graciously served as host for lunch. Dewey gave us a tour of just a few of the buildings on the University of Texas-San Antonio campus, but they were very special buildings. Prior to his retirement from UTSA, Dewey was involved in more activities than we have space to mention, but they included designing and overseeing the construction of several of these buildings. He is still well-respected on the campus and was granted emeritus status shortly after retiring. Unfortunately, we did not get a chance to meet with Dewey's wife, Ruth (Tubbs) Davis ('66) because of a schedule conflict, but we look forward to seeing her the next time they travel back to the 'Boro.

Jack and Janet enjoyed dinner with Lynda (Schambach) Warring ('66) the second evening in town. We discussed a variety of topics, including Edinboro and her Civil Service job with the U.S. Air Force. She has lived in San Antonio for many years, but her position at the Air Force base may be in jeopardy due to the many proposed closings. We're hoping for the best, Lynda!

Houston –

It was on to Houston where we were joined for dinner by Carol (Jackson) Alden ('73), her guest Tom Weinkauff, and Mac ('77) and Ginny Eisenberg. Like many of our alumni in Texas, these folks have lived there for many years. It was interesting to find out what they've been doing since leaving the 'Boro. Carol taught and was then a guidance counselor, but is enjoying being back in the classroom teaching art. Mac works in the personnel department of ABM Securities. It was a nice evening, and we discovered that Jack and the Eisenbergs probably met about five years ago at Ginny's sister's wedding in Erie, since the groom is a friend of Jack's. "It's a small world after all. . ."

Dallas/Ft. Worth –

The final stop was the Dallas/Ft. Worth area (we were actually in Irving) where Jack and Janet were joined by Charles Battist '62; Dorothy Edoga-Ugwu '89 & '91; Chinyere (Geraldine) Edoga-Attah '85 & '87; Ignatius C. Chikezie '85; Keith '76 and Susan '77 Livingston; Marlene (Dashiell) Spells '76 & '88; and Bertha (Pasold) '58 and Charles Weed. The conversation was light and lively, covering many topics, including how they all got to Texas and current campus news. Everyone had such a good time, they want to do it again soon. Special thanks from Jack and Janet to Charles Battist who looked after us while we were in Irving!

It turned out to be a great trip, visiting graduates who don't often get a chance to return to the 'Boro. If you have an opportunity to visit any of these Texas cities and want to get in touch with fellow graduates, give us a call at the office and we can provide you with contacts. We plan to head back to Texas and hope to gather even more Edinboro graduates for a great time!

The group that dined in Irving, Texas, enjoyed reminiscing and making new friends.

"Young" Alumni Meet in Philadelphia

On January 27 a group of "young" alumni – those who graduated within the last 10 years – joined with graduates of the other 13 campuses of the State System of Higher Education at another event sponsored by the Pennsylvania Council of Alumni Associations. The group met at a Philadelphia hot spot, the Manayunk River Deck Cafe. Everyone enjoyed a dinner buffet, dancing to a DJ, and socializing.

These group events have been very popular all over Pennsylvania, providing an opportunity for graduates of the 14 State System Universities to make new friends and network.

If you are interested in helping to organize an Edinboro alumni event in your area, please call the Alumni Office at 1-800-526-0117. You might be surprised at how many 'Boro grads are your neighbors!

Changes Made in Florida Schedule

In the last issue of the Alumni News, we reported that we would be traveling to the same Florida cities we visited last year. Since then, we've made a few changes.

This trip is being scheduled during the spring break (March 6-15). The baseball and softball teams will be in Ft. Myers, and we hope local alumni will enjoy watching the Scots in action.

Details are still being finalized, but the tentative dates and locations for the events are as follows.

Thursday, March 7 St. Petersburg,
Tampa Bay area, and Bradenton
Friday, March 8 Ft. Myers
Sunday, March 10 Key Largo
Tuesday, March 12 Palm Beach
Wednesday, March 13 Orlando
Friday, March 15 St. Augustine

All graduates living in Florida will receive a mailing with more details, but if you have any questions now, please call the Alumni Office at 1-800-526-0117.

Hilton Head . . . Here we Come!

We are working with Sally (Arnold, '85) and Mike ('84) Manesiotis to plan an event on Hilton Head for graduates living in the area or anyone traveling to Hilton Head. Sally, Mike and their children have lived there for several years, and they currently own two restaurants in the area. They are eager to meet with other Edinboro alumni and they have even offered to host us in their home if we have a small group of people.

The event is scheduled for Saturday, March 16, so those of you living in South Carolina, North Carolina and Georgia, watch your mail for more details, or call the Alumni Office. Or, if you will be traveling in that area at that time and want to know more, call the Alumni Office.

Award Ceremonies to be Combined

During the September 9 and November 17, 1995, Board of Directors meetings, there was discussion about the possibility of combining two different award ceremonies now being held separately to recognize distinguished alumni.

For the past five years, there has been a separate and distinct award selection and presentation process to recognize graduates who have distinguished themselves in the arts or art education. Nominated by colleagues, former students or professors or family members, they are presented with a bronze "Waldo" sculpture named in honor of long-time art professor Waldo Bates.

The Distinguished Alumni Awards program has existed since 1976, recognizing alumni in the categories of arts and humanities, business and industry, education, natural and social sciences, and public service. This presentation of awards is a traditional part of the Alumni Reunion Weekend, usually held in June.

Recently, we noticed that the nomination pool for the arts and humanities category of the DAAs has been lacking in the number of truly distinguished graduates. In fact, there was no award in this category for 1995. Because the majority of those nominated for this category were art graduates, the pool has diminished greatly since the creation of the separate awards program for achievement in art.

*Retired Edinboro employee George Roberts works here part time. Last year's group had a wonderful time!

It is imperative to the Board and to the Alumni Office that the integrity of programs to recognize our distinguished alumni be maintained. It was, therefore, agreed that the Art Achievement Awards should be combined with the Distinguished Alumni Awards, while maintaining distinction within the different categories, yet keeping the award ceremonies uniform.

Please refer to the awards nomination form below for information on how you can become involved. Nominate a special graduate you know. The form also includes space for Alumni Board of Directors and Athletic Hall of Fame nominations.

Alumni Board Continues Support of Highlands Festival

At the November Board meeting, the Directors voted to provide assistance once again to the Highlands Festival, May 3-4. The Festival brings distinction to the campus and attracts people from across the country and Canada. Competitions are held in different levels of piping, dance, and athletic events. There are also games for children, vendors, and lots of Scottish food.

Speech communications professor Tim Thompson has coordinated this event for the past five years. This will be the second year the Alumni Association has provided assistance.

Touted as the first festival of the season, the Edinboro Highlands Festival is rapidly becoming one of the finest and best known of its kind.

To offer your support, request a complete schedule of events, or just to get more information, contact Dr. Tim Thompson, department of speech and communication studies, Edinboro University, 814-732-2528.

Edinboro Business League

Business leaders become "hands on" participants in the Edinboro Business League of Learning

Edinboro University initiated the Edinboro Business League of Learning this past fall to form a synergistic relationship between the business community and Edinboro University. The unique partnership includes local businesses in Erie and Crawford counties, as well as regional businesses throughout the country (many owned or managed by former Edinboro graduates).

Because these business leaders have an interest in Edinboro University, they have agreed to share their expertise and experiences with Edinboro students and faculty, and to learn more about the University's mission, academic programming, and learning opportunities through a year-long schedule of activities. The partnership provides business leaders and students with a rewarding experience through seminars, lectures, and cultural activities, to name just a few.

Mr. Michael Redlawsk, president of James Properties, Inc., in Edinboro, serves as chairman of the Edinboro Business League. "Partnerships with local industry enable students to apply their knowledge to solve a real problem in a real business," he said. "The experience gives the students a strong foundation on which to build a future career."

If you are interested in providing these kinds of opportunities to your business or corporation, contact Jack Martin, Institutional Advancement, 814-732-2995.

Institutional Advancement Holds Open House

As part of the University's 1996 Academic Festival, the Institutional Advancement Office and the Institutional Advancement Committee of the University Senate held an open house to showcase the newly-renovated second floor of the Alumni House and to provide information on the activities of the Advancement division.

Students, faculty, and community members toured the facility and learned of the different facets of the operation: alumni affairs, public relations, publications, fund-raising, grant writing, and the alumni phonathon.

Seminars and displays focused on such topics as the mechanics of fund-raising, marketing tools and public relations, planned giving, matching gifts, the alumni magazine, advancement initiatives, the Edinboro Business League, and grant writing.

Spring Phonathon Begins

The Alumni Association's 1996 Spring Phonathon is scheduled for February 4 through 29. During the four-week period, student callers will contact alumni in an effort to increase the amount of financial assistance – scholarships – available to students. The focus of the phonathon will be to increase overall alumni participation among those individuals who have never participated in the Alumni Association's phonathon.

If you have not participated in recent campaigns, please consider joining those loyal alumni who have already contributed to the 1995-96 Annual Fund by making a pledge when a student calls you in February. This will assure you become a part of what promises to be a very successful phonathon and Annual Fund.

Touch the Future . . . Support the Edinboro University Scholarship Program

As Edinboro University continues its mission into the 21st century, it is clear that the scholarship program is a vital and integral part of the University's ability to flourish. The growth and strength of the scholarship program directly impact the lives of many of our future leaders by providing them with an opportunity to continue their education. Since the last issue of the Alumni News, the following scholarships were created or have reached endowment status.

Jack E. Tohtz Memorial Scholarship

The scholarship was established by Mrs. Anne Tohtz, family and friends of the late Jack E. Tohtz, a former professor in the University's English department. The scholarship will be awarded to students majoring in English beginning in the fall of 1996.

Manufacturing Engineering Technology Scholarship

This scholarship was recently established by faculty members in the physics and technology department and private local leaders in the tool and die industry. The scholarship will be awarded to individuals majoring in the manufacturing engineering program.

With your continued support, and that of other friends of the University, your alma mater can remain true to its mission of providing students with a quality low-cost education. Many of your fellow alumni who received scholarships were able to fulfill their educational goal as a result of your generosity. You can touch the future by continuing to support the Edinboro University scholarship program. For more information about establishing a scholarship at your alma mater, contact Mark Carter, assistant director of development, at 814-732-2992, or write to:

Fall Phonathon Surpasses Goal

Edinboro University's fall 1995 phonathon fund-raising campaign achieved its fall goal of $125,000 "and then some," according to University advancement officials.

Fourteen volunteer student callers staffing 15 phones for 19 nights in October raised the funds, contacting Edinboro alumni with histories of previous giving, said Mark Carter, assistant director of development.

"More than 3,700 Edinboro alumni responded positively to the fall phonathon's 'Supporting Scholarships' theme," Carter said.

The phonathon is held each fall and spring, Carter said, and is one of the contributing components of the Annual Fund, the year-to-year drive that raises money for student scholarships and other University programs and initiatives.

Carter said that alumni giving during 1994-95 increased by 20 percent over the previous year, and that more than half of the donations from the school's alumni came from gifts and pledges to the Annual Fund. Most of those came during the two yearly phonathons, he added.

"Supporting scholarships for Edinboro students has been a goal of the Edinboro University Alumni Association for the past several years," said John (Jack) E. Martin, associate vice president for institutional advancement. "Edinboro alumni have continued to embrace the Association's initiatives to increase the amount of scholarship funds available to Edinboro students."

Martin said that through giving to the Annual Fund the Association has been able to create individual scholarship endowments for each of the University's three undergraduate schools of study: education, liberal arts, and science, management and technologies. He added that another $30,000 has been raised to create an admissions scholarship fund to bring top academic students to Edinboro.

The growth and strength of the scholarship program directly impact the lives of many of our future leaders by providing them with an opportunity to continue their education.

The Win, Win, Win Benefits of Charitable Remainder Trusts

There are few situations in life in which there are so many winners as with a charitable remainder trust. Charitable donors win because they can benefit a favorite charity, increase their income, and reduce capital gain, income and estate taxes. Heirs win by receiving a much larger inheritance. And Edinboro University wins by receiving a generous charitable gift to help fund scholarships, technology investments, facility improvements, research, and other worthy causes.

To encourage charitable gifts, the federal government provides some very enticing tax incentives. The charitable remainder trust is just one of the several vehicles available to benefit a charity as well as provide numerous financial advantages. Some of the financial benefits that can be achieved are: (1) sheltering capital gain taxes on appreciated assets, (2) avoiding estate taxes, (3) increasing your heir's inheritance, (4) receiving a substantial income tax deduction, (5) generating a lifetime income, (6) protecting assets from liability and creditors, (7) converting lower-income assets into higher-income assets, (8) maintaining fiduciary control of assets, and (9) increasing portfolio diversification.

A charitable remainder trust is an exceptionally flexible way to provide for both yourself, your heirs, and Edinboro University through an arrangement tailored to meet your financial and charitable objectives. A trust can be established with the gift of cash or with a wide variety of other assets. The University invests the donated assets, or sells the transferred assets, and invests the sale proceeds. You are then paid an income based on a fixed percentage (which must be at least 5 percent) of the trust assets as revalued once each year. Since the University can sell appreciated property without paying any capital gain tax, the entire dollar amount goes to work earning income for you.

Though the details are slightly involved, the chart illustrates how a charitable trust that is coordinated with an irrevocable trust produced very favorable results for a 64-year-old individual who was selling a closely held business.

Such charitable trust strategies can be quite attractive to individuals in the following types of situations: (1) owners of closely held businesses, real estate, or publicly traded securities, (2) those who desire to transfer a substantial business interest or other asset to a future generation without taxation, (3) individuals facing high federal income or estate taxes, (4) people who have maximized their generation-skipping strategies, (5) those with retirement accounts that may be subject to excess distribution taxes or the estate excise tax, (6) people seeking a tax-advantaged way to shelter additional retirement money, and (7) those desiring to make a charitable gift but who still need the income from their assets.

The type of giving arrangement that is best for you depends on your situation. If you would like to explore some of the options that are available to help you achieve your charitable and financial objectives, call Mr. Jack Martin in the Advancement Office at 814-732-2992.

Dr. Frank G. Pogue, Jr.

New President Named

The Executive Committee of the Board of Governors for the State System of Higher Education has appointed Dr. Frank G. Pogue, Jr., as the next president of Edinboro University, effective July 1, 1996. The appointment was ratified by the full Board at its January 1996 meeting.

Dr. Pogue currently serves as vice chancellor for student affairs and special programs for the State University of New York (SUNY) Central Administration in Albany. He will succeed Edinboro President Foster F. Diebold, who is retiring after 17 years of service.

State System Chancellor James H. McCormick said, "Dr. Pogue possesses great insight into the dynamics of a public university system. His proven strengths in the areas of scholarship, higher education management, and student affairs are ideal attributes to bring to the university president's office."

"On behalf of the search committee and the Council of Trustees, I am delighted by the Board's action in securing a new president for Edinboro University," said R. Benjamin Wiley, chair of the Edinboro University Council of Trustees and the presidential search committee. "There were many well-qualified candidates in the search. Out of this process, we believe Edinboro University has gained an effective leader who will work well with the Edinboro campus, community, region, and the entire State System."

President Foster Diebold said, "Dr. Pogue possesses the academic and administrative acumen to lead Edinboro University. I am pleased that the succession of university leadership brings a proven administrator and scholar of Dr. Pogue's caliber to this university."

As vice chancellor for student affairs and special programs at SUNY, Dr. Pogue is responsible for system-wide student educational services and programming, access services, financial aid services, school and college relations, university public safety, educational opportunity programs and centers, the New York City student recruitment office, the Graduate Fellowship Program for Underrepresented Students, the undergraduate scholarship program, diversity and affirmative action initiatives, the New York African American Research Foundation, the Office of Hispanic Affairs, and the University-wide Native American Program, the Office for the Disadvantaged, and other functions.

Dr. Pogue serves as a member of the SUNY chancellor's executive council, and directly works with the SUNY Board of Trustees, members of the New York state legislature, and the state Department of Education. SUNY is the largest university system of its kind, with 64 campuses. Nearly 400,000 students attend SUNY institutions, including comprehensive research universities, arts and sciences colleges, agriculture and technical colleges, and community colleges.

Dr. Pogue is a member of the Commission on Higher Education of the Middle States Association of Colleges and Schools. He currently serves as vice chair of the executive committee of the Commission.

Dr. Pogue earned a bachelor's degree in sociology from Alabama State University, a master's degree in sociology from Atlanta University, and a doctorate from the University of Pittsburgh.

A noted author and lecturer, Dr. Pogue maintains professional memberships with the National Association of State Universities and Land Grant Colleges, the American Association of State Colleges and Universities, the American Association of Higher Education and the National Association of Student Personnel Administrators, among many.

Dr. Pogue has been cited in Who's Who Among Black Americans, the International Biography of Contemporary Achievement, and American Men and Women in Science, among others. He has received the Governor's Award as an African American of Distinction, the Martin Luther King Distinguished Service Award, and the Distinguished Alumni Award from Alabama State University.

Dr. Pogue and his wife, Dorothy, are the parents of a daughter, Constance, who works for MBNA America and is pursuing her master's degree in early childhood education at Widener University.

"Dr. Pogue is an outstanding leader with a long history of service to public higher education," Board Chairman F. Eugene Dixon Jr. said. "His broad knowledge and rich experience in higher education have provided him with the credentials to lead Edinboro University into the next century."

Dr. Judith A. W. Thomas, interim vice president for enrollment planning and student life, and chair and professor of education at Lincoln University, recently presented a workshop to education faculty on "Critical Multiculturalism and the New Curriculum." A 1962 Edinboro graduate and 1989 recipient of a Distinguished Alumna Award, Thomas is a nationally-renowned scholar, speaker and writer on issues of pluralism, diversity, and multiculturalism. Her presentation at Edinboro was a continuation of the State System's Social Equity Grant project, "Celebrating Diversity: Building Awareness in a University Setting."

PACT Conference Held at Edinboro

Edinboro University and State System of Higher Education officials and guests gathered at the recent conference of the Pennsylvania Association of Councils of Trustees held on the Edinboro campus. Keynote speaker for the two-day event was the Honorable Richard L. Nygaard, judge of the Third U.S. Circuit Court of Appeals.

PACT is an organization of the 154 State System university trustees dedicated to volunteer service, advocacy and support for public higher education in Pennsylvania. The fall 1995 PACT conference, titled "The Spirit of Outreach," was the first ever held on the Edinboro campus.

Edinboro Named to "Rugg's"

Edinboro University has been included in the 1995 edition of Rugg's Recommendations on the Colleges as one of author Frederick E.

Rugg's "One Hundred Colleges . . . Just Darn Good Schools."

Edinboro is one of only nine Pennsylvania schools listed and the only State System of Higher Education university in the 12th annual edition.

Besides Edinboro University, the other Pennsylvania schools named to Rugg's list were Allegheny College, Haverford College, Juniata College, Moravian College, University of Pennsylvania, University of Pittsburgh, Susquehanna University, and Washington & Jefferson College.

Rugg, a former secondary school college counselor, said in his foreword that his staff of 20 polled students at the 715 quality four-year colleges and universities chosen for the study.

Twelve Named to Emeritus Status

Edinboro University President Foster Diebold recently awarded emeritus status – one of the most prestigious recognitions in the profession of higher education – to 12 retired members of Edinboro's faculty and administration.

To be named emeriti, the University requires 10 years of exemplary service; retirement as a faculty member or administrator; and nomination by colleagues in the profession for excellence in teaching, scholarly research and publication, administration, or service to the University, community, and to the profession and disciplines of the academy.

Honored for past distinguished service were:

Dr. Robert Connors, Edinboro, Pa.
 Clifford L. Cox, Edinboro
 Dr. Robert Dowling, Erie, Pa.
 Dr. Mary Alice Dye, Edinboro
 Dr. Charles Glendinning, Edinboro
 Dr. Jose Gonzalez, Edinboro
 Stephen Hazlewood, Edinboro
 Dr. C. Gordon Hitchings, Edinboro
 Dr. Myron L. Morford, Edinboro
 David M. O'Dessa, Edinboro
 Dr. R. Harriet Phillips, Edinboro
 Dr. James Tan, South Burlington, Vt.
 (awarded posthumously)

732 Graduate in Winter 1995 Ceremony

Edinboro President Foster Diebold, now in the 17th and final year of his presidency, conferred master's, bachelor's, and associate degrees to 732 new graduates during winter 1995 Commencement ceremonies.

The newest alumni join 732 May graduates for a total of 1,464 Edinboro degrees awarded during the 1995 calendar year.

In his welcoming remarks to the graduating class and the Fieldhouse audience of more than 3,000, Diebold said that the communities and regions of today's America need a society led by leaders who are intelligent, tolerant and healthy in moral fibre.

Diebold said that his most surprising observation about the general public ill-temper and lack of civility in today's society is that so few voices have been raised to condemn them.

"The time has come, if somewhat overdue," Diebold said, "to honor good taste, hard work, and all those men and women who cherish human decency.

"The people in this country who have brought about positive change, who have moved things along, who have truly made things better, have done so with a clarity of vision, a clearly-defined core set of values, and a certain amount of grace," said Diebold.

Diebold began his remarks noting that Sunday's ceremony would be the final winter Commencement of his presidency at Edinboro University. He is scheduled to retire on June 30, 1996, after 17 years in office. No other chief executive at Edinboro has held the position longer in this century.

Dr. Philip Kerstetter, Edinboro's dean of education and acting dean of liberal arts, was the featured Commencement speaker.

Kerstetter told the graduates that they are living in a marvelous time, that they have a significant opportunity to make a difference, "and by doing so, make this world a better place," he said.

"It is only in the 1990s that we see an interest return to the subject of values and the importance of viewing ourselves as part of the larger whole," said Kerstetter. "We are again discussing ethical constructs and looking at issues within a larger contextual framework than in the earlier decades.

"While your accomplishments as a student are certainly to be proud of, your success in future endeavors will be equally as dependent on your capacity to function as a responsible member of society and by putting your needs and those of others within a context that includes the larger community," Kerstetter said.

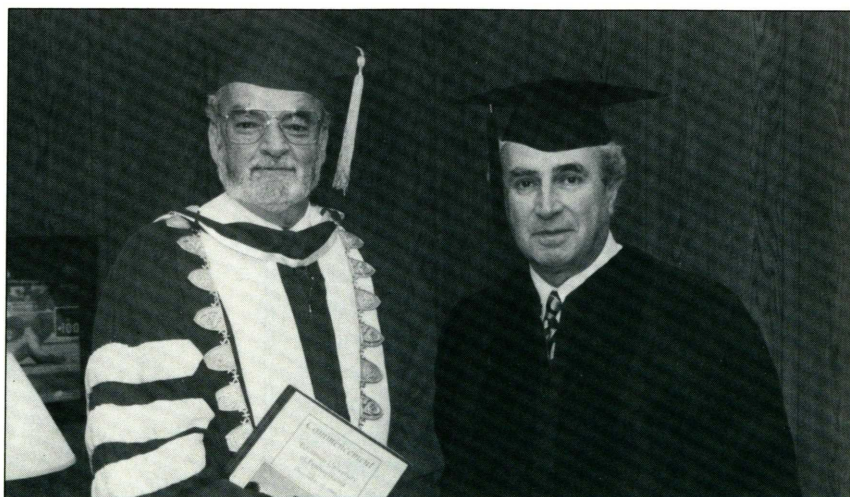

Diebold and the University's Council of Trustees also conferred the degree Doctor of Public Service (doctor beneficiorum publicorum, honoris causa) upon Erie businessman and civic leader Louis J. Porreco.

In 1987, Porreco donated his 27-acre, $1.1 million estate in Erie's Millcreek Township to Edinboro University in honor of his aunt, the late Mary Porreco, a two-time Edinboro graduate. The property is now the Edinboro University Porreco Extension Center and the 12-room main house was named Mary Porreco Hall in honor of his aunt.

His gift was and still is the largest single act of philanthropy in Edinboro's 138-year history.

In his acceptance remarks, Porreco said that the honorary degree will hold a special significance beyond any of his life's expectations and that he was truly humbled by the honor.

"Life's greatest values are not financial," Porreco said. "The trust and faith and unconditional support given us by our family and friends may be the greatest gifts we ever gain in life."

President Foster F. Diebold and honorary doctorate recipient Louis J. Porreco

Marjorie F. Eason, 73, retired art professor, died November 20, 1995, at her Venango, Pa., home. She was born in Laura, Saskatchewan, Canada, in 1922. At the age of 19, she accepted a teaching position in a one-room schoolhouse with a tarpaper roof. There she taught nine students in eight different grades.

She earned an associate degree in painting, a bachelor's degree in art history, a master's degree in art education from Penn State, and a doctorate in art education from Columbia University.

She came to Edinboro in 1968 and completed 23 years of teaching before her retirement. She is remembered by friends as a lover of horses. She was the owner and operator of Bole Run Stables where she often provided problem students with a home and instruction on the breeding and training of horses.

She is survived by two daughters: Erica L. Eason, M.D. ('73) and Lori M. Eason ('80 and '90).

Memorials may be made to the Marjorie F. Eason Scholarship Fund, Institutional Advancement, Edinboro University, Edinboro, PA 16444.

Vernon W. Vogel, 57, a librarian at Edinboro University for the past 27 years, died suddenly on September 10, 1995. He was the founder and owner of Bolingbroke Kennels in Edinboro, past president and secretary of the Flat-Coated Retriever Society of America, and a member of the Edinboro United Methodist Church.

As a past owner of several Model A Fords, Vogel contributed several articles to antique automotive magazines, was the indexer for the Model A Ford Club of America and the Model A News, and served three years as secretary of the Society of Automotive Historians.

Vogel attended Akron University, Kent State, Emory University, and the University of Notre Dame. He received bachelor's degrees from Otterbein College, a master's in library science from Western Reserve University, and an advanced certificate from the University of Pittsburgh. Prior to joining the Edinboro library staff, he taught for four years at the University of Notre Dame.

He is survived by his wife and three sons.

Memorials may be made to Edinboro United Methodist Church Vision Fund or Juvenile Diabetes Foundation, 1673 West 8th Street, Erie, PA 16505.

Scots Complete Banner Fall Sports Campaign

A fourth consecutive Pennsylvania State Athletic Conference title for the men's cross country team, and PSAC Western Division crowns for the football and women's volleyball squads highlighted three excellent months of competition for the Scots.

The Edinboro football team, under the guidance of head coach Tom Hollman, posted a 9-1 record during the regular season to win the PSAC West and earn a berth in the NCAA playoffs for the fifth time in the last seven years. The squad was ranked #8 in the final Division II poll – the seventh straight year among the nation's elite at season's end.

With a 6-0 record in PSAC play, Edinboro was the only school out of the 14 member institutions to post an undefeated conference record. The Scots also recorded victories over two schools ranked in the NCAA Division II Top 10: Portland State, 26-7, and Indiana University of Pa., 35-18.

Edinboro's volleyball squad followed up a 27-5 season in 1994 – Lynn Theehs' first season as head coach – with the most difficult schedule in school history. The Scots posted a 14-19 overall mark, but 12 of the setbacks were against teams ranked in the Division II Top 25. Edinboro dominated in PSAC West action with a 9-1 record to claim the division title and a berth in the PSAC Final Four for the 10th straight year. The Scots finished as the PSAC runner-up.

Under the leadership of head coach Doug Watts, the men's cross country team won a fourth consecutive PSAC title and the NCAA Division II East Regional team championship to earn another trip to the national meet, while the Boro women were regional runners-up.

All three Edinboro head coaches were selected PSAC Western Division Coach of the Year by their peers.

Individually, the Scots produced the PSAC West Athlete of the Year in each sport: senior defensive end Pat Schuster, senior distance runner Carl Leonard, and senior Michelle Hubalek.

Leonard, a three-time NCAA All-American, became just the third runner in PSAC history to win the league title three times, joining former Fighting Scots Dave Antognoli (1970-72) and Luke Graham (1984-86). Teammates Travis Kuhl, Todd Rose, Pete Boyd and Justin Renwick also capped All-PSAC honors.

On the women's side, freshmen Amy Perry and Sandra Sweet garnered All-PSAC and East Region honors respectively.

In football, the Scots produced eight first-team All-Conference selections and six second-team picks.

In volleyball, juniors Stephanie Radecki and Lori Schafer joined Hubalek as PSAC West first-team selections. All three student-athletes also earned Atlantic Region honors.

Henne Named Woody Hayes Scholar Athlete

As a senior tight end on the Edinboro football team, Todd Henne received several awards for his outstanding play on the field. As a speech communication major with a 3.79 grade point average, he has been recognized for his success in the classroom, as well.

Last month, Henne was selected to receive the Woody Hayes National Scholar Athlete Award by the Sertoma Club of Columbus, Ohio. Each year the Sertoma Club presents awards to only six outstanding men and women in each of the three NCAA divisions for "demonstrated excellence in academics, athletics, community service and leadership." The award is a living memorial to the high standards of excellence – both on and off the field – of the former Ohio State football coach.

On the field, Henne was a first-team All-PSAC West selection as a senior, after earning second-team All-Conference honors as a junior. As the starting tight end for the Fighting Scots the past two years, he caught 37 passes for 361 yards and seven touchdowns. He caught 15 passes for 115 yards this year, including a critical touchdown in Edinboro's victory over Indiana which gave the Scots the inside track to the PSAC West title. He was also a key blocker for Edinboro's offense, which averaged 224.2 yards per game rushing and 28.7 points per game in 1995.

"I've often said that Todd is one of those people you know will be successful in life," said Coach Tom Hollman. "He truly exemplifies what college athletics is all about, adhering to the same ideals that Coach Hayes stood for. I can honestly say that, in my 29 years of coaching, I have never worked with a young man as well-rounded or as well thought of. We are very proud to have Todd represent our football program and our University."

Last fall, Henne was appointed to the NCAA Student-Athlete Advisory Committee, and he attended the NCAA's annual convention in Dallas. He is also a member of the Edinboro Student-Athlete advisory board. He was a national finalist for an NCAA Post-Graduate Scholarship award this year and served as sports director at Edinboro's WFSE-FM, the campus radio station. He was part of a student team that produced an award-winning video on responsible drinking.

Henne is currently completing requirements for his bachelor's degree by serving an internship in the public relations department at a children's hospital near his hometown of Louisville, Ohio.

"This award is very special to me," said Henne. Growing up in Ohio, I know all about what a great coach and a great man Woody Hayes was. To be presented an award in his honor is very gratifying."

Cross Country Squads Receive Academic Honors

Under the leadership of head coach Doug Watts, now in his 27th season at the 'Boro, the Edinboro cross country teams continually rank among the nation's best in athletic competition. This fall, the Running Scots were also outstanding in the classroom.

Both the men's and women's squads were recognized recently as Academic All-American teams by the NCAA Division II Cross Country Coaches Association. The women had an impressive grade point average of 3.37 for the semester, one of the highest in the nation, while the men posted an average above the required 3.0.

Senior Ann Gillespie (education major, Massillon, Ohio) and sophomore Sandra Sweet (nutrition, Erie, Pa.) both posted perfect 4.0 grade point averages last fall. Sophomore Jeannette Sabol (education, University Park, Pa.) compiled a 3.60, senior Dawn Folliard (education, Philadelphia) posted a 3.53, freshman Amy Perry (social work, North East, Pa.) recorded a 3.40, and sophomore Kathy Shufesky (education, Erie) earned a 3.09.

The men's highest academic achievers include senior Carl Leonard (education, Swansea, Wales) who, in addition to winning three straight PSAC titles and earning All-American honors several times, posted a 3.56 grade point average, and sophomore Travis Kuhl (education, Croghan, NY) with a 3.56 GPA. Senior Todd Rose (education, Union City, Pa.) completed his career last fall with a 3.43 semester, while junior Peter Boyd (education, Sharon, Pa.) posted a 3.17.

In addition, three individuals were named to the Coaches' All-American squad: Sandra Sweet, Ann Gillespie, and Travis Kuhl. To qualify, the student had to maintain a minimum 3.25 cumulative grade point average and finish in the top 10 percent at the NCAA Eastern Regional championship.

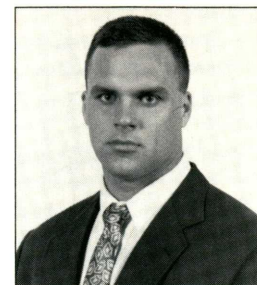

"I'm so happy for these kids," said Coach Watts. "They have displayed an outstanding work ethic and ability to focus, as well as the capacity to overcome obstacles and perform under pressure."

Student-Athlete Advisory Board

Under the leadership of Athletic Director Jody Mooradian, the Edinboro Student-Athlete Advisory Board was formed last fall, and the group has already started to make an impact on the campus and community.

"We wanted to provide student-athletes with a framework to more effectively communicate with members of the Edinboro University administration and faculty," said Mooradian. "We also wanted to provide an opportunity for all of our student-athletes to become actively involved in campus and community projects and to play a role in designing and implementing programs which will encourage academic achievement, healthy lifestyles and social responsibility."

"The Board already met with President Diebold and key administrators, as well as with deans and department chairpersons,"

Todd Henne

Former Scots Excel in Snowbowl

Two former Edinboro football players excelled in the third annual Snowbowl, the Division II all-star game, played in Fargo, North Dakota. The East squad posted a 10-7 victory over the West, their first ever in the series.

Pat Schuster, a 6-2, 235-lb. defensive end from Bradford, Pa., registered the East's only sack of the game for a nine-yard loss. He recorded seven tackles including two for losses.

Gilbert Grantlin, a senior wide receiver from Belle Glade, Fla., sparked the East's offense with three receptions for 48 yards, including a 35-yard touchdown catch with less than a minute remaining in the first quarter to give the East its only touchdown of the game.

said Mooradian. "Sometimes, simply providing a forum for the exchange of ideas can really make a difference in fostering positive relationships. I think it was good for our campus leaders to hear what our student-athletes felt were key issues affecting their sports and their fellow students. And it was important for our students to hear the administration and faculty perspectives on issues."

The group has already performed their first community service project – they collected food and clothing for a homeless shelter in Erie. The group also started a Big Brother/Big Sister program.

Philip Melton, a senior on the men's basketball team, was the main force behind the Big Brother/Big Sister program. "Edinboro University has given me the opportunity to play basketball and earn a college degree," he said. "This is my way of giving something back. When you put on that uniform, you become a role model, and kids might remember you for a lifetime. If you become involved in their lives, you just might inspire them to become something."

The kids who have spent time with Melton will certainly remember their visits to Edinboro. In addition to attending Fighting Scot football games, Melton planned a few surprises during their visits. On one occasion, he took a group of kids to WFSE-FM, the campus radio station.

"The kids called their parents or friends and told them to turn their radios to 88.9," said Melton. "Then they actually got to go on-air like a DJ for a while. They thought it was great! It was a real boost for some of them, and, who knows, maybe it will inspire one of them to pursue a career in radio."

On another occasion, Melton took a group of kids to his apartment to cook a spaghetti dinner, complete with chocolate cake for dessert. "It was pretty good . . . considering," said Melton. "The place was a little messy for a while, but they helped me clean it up. The kids had fun, and maybe it motivated them to do better because someone cares."

"Playing a positive role in the community is part of becoming an adult. It makes you feel good," he said. "If things aren't going well on the court or in class, I think about those kids, and I get a real boost. It motivates me to do better."

The Heat is On in Winter Sports

As the temperature outside continues to be frigid, the winter sports season at Edinboro is starting to heat up.

The Fighting Scot men's basketball team, under the direction of head coach Greg Walcavich, got off to an impressive start:

EUP		OPP
92	Columbia Union	76
81	Point Park	79
91	Mercyhurst	69
74	Ashland	76
78	Gannon	51
116	Thiel	67
106	Lake Erie	64
90	Hillsdale	70
85	Gannon	92
103	Daemen	54
75	Salem-Teikyo	67
93	Clarion	71

The high-scoring team that also plays tenacious defense has topped the 100-point mark three times already this season. The Scots are averaging 90.1 points per game, while allowing opponents just 69.6 points per outing. The squad's rebound margin of 7.8 per game is the best in the Conference.

The women's basketball team posted an exciting, 62-61, victory over West Virginia Wesleyan to bring their record to 8-6. Under the direction of Stan Swank, the team is averaging 80.4 points per game to rank second in the PSAC.

"We knew coming into the season that defense would be the key to our success," said Swank.

Edinboro's wrestling squad, under the direction of Olympic gold medalist Bruce Baumgartner, is young and rebuilding after one of the finest seasons in school history last year. The Scots placed 11th at the NCAA Division I national tournament last year and posted a school-record 16-2 overall mark in dual meet competition.

The men's and women's swim teams, under the leadership of Kenwyn Chock, finished 7th and 21st, respectively, at the NCAA national championships last year. They will host the PSAC championships on February 23-25.
