Message from the Presidents

From time to time, I try to share with Edinboro alumni some of the better current thinking in higher education. One of the most insightful figures, professor George Keller, writes in Tectonic Shifts in the Geology of Society of three significant shifts which will occur before the close of this century: socio-economic realignment, technology and internationalism, and finances and productivity.

Dr. Keller suggests that the socio-economic realignment has created new culture patterns and expectations. This has affected institutions by polarizing them into service areas and dividing their faculties. We now see a body of faculty tending to remedial work, another committed to traditional college teaching, and a third dedicated to adult learners and distance education. These distinctions presage shifts in learning patterns, curriculum, and the calendarization of education.

Edinboro University's successes in technology and internationalism are well in line with Keller's thinking. The development of new instructional programming and its delivery through advanced technology is demonstrable by the many examples of our faculty offering instructional programming locally, regionally, and overseas. The blending of technology and internationalism has enhanced the dialogue in specific disciplines, as well as more direct contact between faculty and students.

The increasing cost of higher education suggests to Keller that we must find more productive ways of delivering and financing higher education other than through tuition increases and large scale appeals for private funding.

The shifts Keller describes are real and upon us. I want our alumni to know, however, that Edinboro University and the State System of Higher Education are prepared to respond to these unique challenges.

Homecoming 1994 not only marked the continuation of a long-established tradition at Edinboro University, but also provided the foundation for an exciting new beginning for our Alumni Association. The weekend activities, parties, reunions, Saturday parade and festivities at Sox Harrison Stadium were joined this year by a rising new landmark on Meadville Street. Alumni Hall is on its way to providing a new home for the Edinboro University Alumni Association and to establishing itself as a center of activities for the more than 30,000 graduates of the University.

As you read this issue of the Alumni News, our nearly finished new "home" already presents the beginnings of an impressive structure to the Edinboro community. For those of us who have followed the endeavor from its inception last May, through the summer months when it was just a hole in the ground, to the raising of the walls, to the shingling of the roof and the application of bricks and siding, it's been a great experience. And we certainly enjoyed visiting with the many alumni who stopped by the house over the Homecoming weekend.

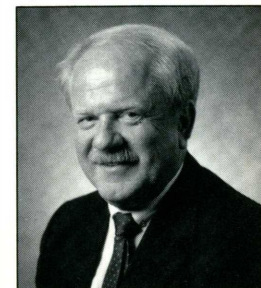

This project is a fitting tribute to the hard work of our members and the growing support your Association has enjoyed in recent years. As we move toward the 21st century, we've been able to maintain our established support for many activities of the University and to expand our financial patronage through a number of newly established scholarships and programs.

Your input and support have provided us with the foundation upon which to outwardly grow and build. Alumni Hall and the Annual Fund campaign are just two visible signs of the vitality of your Alumni Association. I encourage you to join in the fun of being a part of your University. Come spring, stop by and say "hello" to us at 210 Meadville Street.

Good thing Michael Lane isn't a name dropper. If he were, and if one of your passions in life is the game of golf, you would be agog at the names he could drop in his unprepossessing, matter-of-fact, almost shy conversational manner. In the course of a normal chat, say over a glass of iced tea, you'll hear the names of Arnie and Jack. Golf aficionados know who Arnie and Jack are. (Golf's legends, unlike great warriors or show biz icons – Patton, MacArthur, Carson, Letterman – need be identified only by their first names.) Chat with Michael Lane a bit longer, say about as long as it takes to play your routine par three, and you'll also hear the names of Gary Player, Tom Watson, Lee Trevino, and Nick Faldo. Great golfers, world-beaters many times over, but still, unlike Arnie and Jack, in need of both first and last names for sure identification. (One unknowingly and accidentally might confuse Tom Watson with Tom Kite, or Nick Faldo with Nick Price, though both Toms and both Nicks could eventually become acquaintances of Michael Lane.)

Michael Lane, you see, is one of the nation's premier golf artists. The 1979 Edinboro graduate has painted for some of the world's greatest golfers, capturing on canvas in a style all his own some of their greatest, tournament-winning shots, as well as many of their favorite holes at the world's most famous and prestigious golf courses.

For Tom Watson, he produced "The Chip Shot Heard 'Round the World," a limited edition print of Watson's famous sand wedge shot that eagled the 17th hole and won him the 1982 U.S. Open at Pebble Beach. It was one of Lane's first forays into painting for the pros.

The painting he did of Nick Faldo winning the 1989 Masters at Augusta National hangs over the fireplace in Faldo's living room.

For JN (that's Jack Nicklaus) Productions and Golden Bear International, Jack's worldwide marketing arm, he did four paintings for Jack's ABC television special, "The 18 Most Difficult Holes in Major Championship Golf," which aired nationally (except in Erie!) last year.

For Gary Player, Lane did a series of paintings illustrating Player's four major golf championships. Player, incidentally, is one of only four golfers in the world to have won all four major championships – the Masters, U.S. Open, British Open, and PGA (Professional Golf Association) – at least once. (Golf trivia quiz: who were the other three? Answer on page 28.)

While on a business trip in western Pennsylvania two years ago, Lane stopped by the Latrobe Country Club and met Arnold Palmer, who since commissioned him to paint one of his all-time favorite golf holes, the 416-yard, par four first hole at Laurel Valley Country Club near Latrobe. That painting, which Lane finished just recently, is shown on the back cover. (Another golf quiz: Whom do you think got limited edition print number one? Never mind . . . too easy!)

(An old golf joke: Did you hear that Arnie bought a new set of golf clubs? The unsuspecting taker falls for the come-on, of course, thinking it means that Arnie traded in his own line of custom-made Arnold Palmer clubs for a new set of Pings or Callaways. The come-back, though, goes like, "Yeah, Laurel Valley, Latrobe, and Ligonier." Is this a great country, or what?)

Lane recalls his first meeting with Arnie as one of his most lasting and treasured golf memories.

"Arnie has never forgotten his western Pennsylvania roots," said Lane. "He's got a beautiful home and office tucked away in the woods near the Latrobe Country Club. Our meeting was very pleasant, and you can tell that he's very approachable, calling members of the club by name."

Michael Lane is sitting in his studio, one complete with a skylight, in his home in Canton, Ohio, talking about painting and golf and business and life. A native of Erie and a graduate of McDowell High School, where he played both football and baseball, he developed his interest in painting golf courses while painting landscapes as a student at Edinboro University.

"I've always loved the rural settings around Edinboro," he said, "although some of my favorite landscapes happened to be golf courses." Lane said that one of his very favorites was and still is the Culbertson Hills Golf Course.

Lane graduated cum laude from Edinboro in 1979 with a bachelor of fine arts degree, and credits much of his success as an artist to the instruction he received at Edinboro.

"I got an outstanding education at Edinboro University. It has some of the best art professors in the world."

Lane listed Edinboro art professors Jim Vredevoogd, Jim McMurray, Lee Forrest, and Richard Knox as having had a major influence on his painting skills and style. "Especially the mental part of painting," he said.

"I was also influenced by Steve Kemenyffy's entrepreneurial style and by physics professor and astronomer Dr. Jim

GOLF (golf, galf) n. A game in which a player uses a number of clubs to hit a small ball into a succession of holes, usually 18 in number, over an outdoor course having natural or artificial obstacles, the object being to get the ball into each hole in as few strokes as possible.

Legend has it that golf's 18 holes has something to do with the number of jiggers in a bottle of Scotch whisky. Historians claim the cradle of golf to be St. Andrews, Scotland, home of the Royal and Ancient Golf Club, where the game has been played since the year 1414.

Golf evolved from a forbidden and disgraceful recreation in the 1400s (as it obstructed compulsory archery training when the bow was the principal weapon of defense) to a legal, honorable and respected sport, so designated by King Charles I in 1633.

W.A.R.

When Michael Lane painted Tom Watson's famous chip shot that won the 1982 U.S. Open at Pebble Beach, it was his first go at working his painting talent around golf and golf professionals. That was 1984. Lane based his painting on a photo that was on the cover of Watson's autobiography. The painting impressed so many people that Lane obtained permission from the photographer and Watson to make and sell prints. The prints quickly sold out, except at the Firestone course in Akron, Ohio. "Nobody wanted to buy the Watson prints at Firestone," Lane said. "Of course, Ohio is Jack Nicklaus country!"

W.A.R.

LoPresto, who talked to our class about how painting relates to relativity."

Another major influence came into his life at Edinboro – his wife, Geri, also a 1979 Edinboro graduate. "Geri found a teaching job in Canton, which is what brought us here," Lane said. Geri still teaches at an elementary school near their Canton home, which, incidentally, is only about 10 minutes from the world famous Firestone Country Club, where the World Series of Golf is played every year.

Between Edinboro and Canton there was Michigan State University, where Lane was enrolled in the MFA program, and a free-lance stint for two years with Camelot Records painting rock stars. "I painted 10 hours a day, and learned how to work hard and paint fast."

He painted 120 rock stars, and his paintings were displayed at Camelot Record Company stores around the country. When work in the music industry ran out in the mid-1980s, he turned to painting golf courses. He wrote a letter to the head golf professional at Augusta National, the site of the Masters, asking if he would be interested in seeing some of his work. He got back a polite note saying that they'd "let him know."

The next year, while on a golf vacation in Myrtle Beach, South Carolina, he called the golf pro at Augusta. "I told him I was in the area and could drop by if he had some time to see me." Lane said that he was stunned to hear the voice on the other end say, sure, drop by tomorrow. "Actually, it's a four-hour drive from Myrtle Beach to Augusta, but I didn't mind . . . it seemed more like 10 minutes," Lane now says.

Augusta National commissioned Lane to paint the 12th hole, and he went to the next Masters and signed personalized prints of his painting. He's since painted three more holes at Augusta – the 7th, 11th, and 15th – as well as holes at Akron's Firestone Country Club, the new Caves Valley course near Baltimore, and the 11th at the Kahkwa Club in Erie.

"Painting a golf course is different than painting a landscape or a rural scene," Lane said. "For one thing, it's dangerous. When you're painting a mountain peak, you can sit and sketch for hours and not see a soul. But when you're painting a golf hole, somebody always wants to play through, and it gets hazardous with all the stray golf shots." He works instead from sketches and photographs.

Painting golf holes put the game of golf in a new perspective for Michael Lane. "I started playing more often, and playing a hole that I was painting became part of my preparation. I'd spend time at each hole, trying different directions and views, sometimes playing it in the morning and other times in the early evening. I'd take a lot of photographs and then sit and sketch the hole from different angles."

Lane said that the view he eventually selects is generally the view that a golfer would see, and that it takes him about two months to finish a painting. But the actual painting is the easiest part of his business, he said. He must also meet with clients or their representatives, visit locations, and attend promotions, as well as take care of the day-to-day chores of taking phone calls and packing and shipping prints. And then, of course, there's golf.

"I play quite often, and I've got my handicap down to a single digit," he said.

Lane has family in Erie and returns to the area often to visit them and friends. Two years ago, he returned to the Edinboro campus and spoke to new students at a Freshman Orientation Day.

"I told them to protect their professional standards, regardless of profession," he said. "You must be critical of your own work, for quality is the most important thing for a professional in any line of work; you can't sacrifice quality for time or money."

Lane also told the students, many of whom would major in art, to develop their business sense along with their artistic talents. "I've had to learn how to be a marketing person, which was difficult for me," he said.

"Painting is important to me, and I'm staying busy doing something I really enjoy. I'm not necessarily getting rich, but I have come a long way from the days when I was a student at Edinboro University and getting $200 for a landscape."

A Love for Creating – George Humes '80

Art, they say, comes in many forms. That is certainly the case for 1980 Edinboro graduate George Humes.

His interest in nearly every aspect of the trade is reflected in his resume – art teacher, professional artist, illustrator, photographer, advertising/commercial artist, and designer. Whether it's weaving, ceramics or jewelry-making, creating has always been his love. But the area of fine arts – painting and drawing – is his true passion. His specializations are as diverse as his talents. From watercolors and oil paints, to color-charcoal pencil and graphite, Humes has no real preference to the medium. But when it comes to what he prefers to paint, he leaves little doubt.

"Westerns," he said, "especially works of the American Indian." From Sitting Bull to American Horse, the meticulous detail of his work makes the subject come to life.

"I also do a lot of portraits for friends, mostly of their kids. The majority of my wildlife work is for my biggest fan, my father," said Humes. Other favorite subjects range from his wife, Wendy, and children, Adam and Leah, to such notables as Bruce Springsteen, Madonna, and former Pirate great Roberto Clemente.

Since 1981, he has been a fine arts and photography teacher at Harbor Creek High School in Erie, while doing free-lance artwork. From 1983 to 1986, he also taught commercial art and photography to adults at the Erie County Technical School.

While he has considered marketing his artwork full time, Humes is not enticed by the business aspect. Instead, he describes his priorities: "First, I'm a husband and father, then I'm a school teacher." Humes said that his art degree from Edinboro put him in a position to secure the job at Harbor Creek. "The level of my teaching success is measured by the success of my students," he said. "I am very proud that we have students who have established careers in the field of art, ranging from Walt Disney World to NASA to right back here at Harbor Creek."

"I wouldn't like painting as much if it felt like a job," he explained. "I would feel obligated to people, and the pressure of deadlines is certainly not very appealing to me. And I wouldn't want to be swamped with work – I create because I love it and because I enjoy the satisfaction it brings to people when I present them with a gift. That's what it's all about."

Humes discovered at an early age that his talent was something very special. "It is a God-given talent," he said, "and I've polished it over the years with a lot of practice. The personal satisfaction of creating something is what makes me pick up the brush or the pencil the next time."

In addition to his love for westerns and wildlife, Humes recently turned his attention to, as he says, "dabbling in sports art."

Dabbling? His home is a shrine to many great Pittsburgh athletes of the '70s and '80s. His son Adam's bedroom is a showcase for autographed works of Pittsburgh greats Jack Lambert, Rod Woodson, Mario Lemieux, Eric Green, and Andy Van Slyke. "I'm a huge Pittsburgh fan – hockey, football, baseball – it doesn't matter. They are my other passion, I guess."

Some of Humes' favorite subjects include former Steelers Terry Bradshaw and Rocky Bleier. He recently presented Steeler head coach Bill Cowher with a painting of what Humes calls "a vintage Cowher pose" from the scrimmage at Edinboro last August.

Humes is a graduate of Ringgold High School in Pittsburgh, along with classmates Ron Miller, a 1981 Edinboro grad who is currently serving as assistant public relations director for the Pittsburgh Steelers, and legendary quarterback Joe Montana.

An art major, Humes met his wife Wendy when they were both students at Edinboro. "She is my biggest supporter," he said with a smile, "but sometimes she doesn't understand the amount of time I spend hunched over my drawing board." A single painting may take anywhere from 20 to 100 hours. "It's something I have to do – I love it that much!"

During his years at Edinboro, Humes polished his skills, while his interest in art accelerated. "Those were the years when I experimented with many different types of art. I don't think you should restrict yourself to one style." His first painting was purchased by the Zortman family of Edinboro, owners of the landmark feedmill that used to be behind the post office. The painting, of course, was of the feedmill itself.

Humes remembers words of wisdom he received from the late Gopal Mitra, one of his Edinboro art professors: "He told me that if you have your work sitting around your home for your own display and enjoyment, you'll never be a satisfied artist. If you give them as gifts or get someone to buy them, regardless of how low the price, it will motivate you to do more paintings. He was right. It is the satisfaction of others that keeps me involved."

The paintings of George Humes have helped support numerous scholarships at Edinboro University. In addition, he plans to contribute a piece for the upcoming sports memorabilia auction next June. "If it's a good cause, I have no problem doing work for charity," he said. "Money has never been my motivation . . . I do it for the smiles on people's faces. That's what makes it all worthwhile."

Will he ever paint full time? "I don't need to be famous," he said. "I feel famous enough when I make people happy."

Edinboro Grads Making Beautiful Music

Amy Westbrook,
Kristyn Westbrook
Woodrow, and Stephen Westbrook.*

You can't hear Westbrook on the radio yet, but before long you may be listening to the sweetest sounds this side of Nashville. The sister-brother-wife singing trio of Kristyn Westbrook Woodrow, Stephen and Amy Westbrook, is about to become this area's best-known recording act.

The Edinboro-based group was selected for the nationally-televised Charlie Daniels Talent Roundup, one of the nation's largest talent contests. Westbrook competed against 26 other vocal groups and bands for a $25,000 prize and national recognition. The Nashville Network (TNN), which is broadcasting the talent show, will not reveal how Westbrook did in the contest overall, but the trio did win its first-round competition on October 29. They will now compete in the semi-finals on December 17. The final round will be televised on December 24.

Westbrook is also appearing three times on the Dr. James Kennedy television program. The Florida-based ministry invited the trio to sing at one of its church services this past spring. They were so well-received they were invited to return for the televised evening service. One of their performances was broadcast August 14. The dates for two other shows have not been announced.

Woodrow and her brother Stephen and his wife Amy have been singing together for 12 years since they were teenagers at General McLane High School. The group has its roots in the teen choir of the Federated Church of East Springfield where Kristyn and brother Stephen attended. Amy moved to Edinboro from Warren when she was 13 and joined the choir in the 1982-83 school year. At General McLane the three were also active in the school band, choir and show choir. They began singing together as a group in 1984 under the name Joy, performing at churches, fairs and weddings.

In the meantime, all three went on to school at Edinboro University. Kristyn graduated in 1985 with a nursing degree, and Stephen and Amy finished in 1987 with degrees in accounting and communications, respectively.

The trio's forte is contemporary gospel and country music sung in three-part harmony. One reason they attracted the attention of the Charlie Daniels Talent

Signing a recording contract would be the fulfillment of a dream, but it is secondary to the music itself. They would turn down a contract if they weren't able to sing the music they believe is right for them – music that will make a difference in people's lives.

Roundup is simply the rarity of country trios. There aren't many two female/one male trios in pop music, either. The last such successful group may have been Tony Orlando and Dawn in the 1970s.

Westbrook's material isn't limited to country and gospel. For the talent contest they performed "Bridge Over Troubled Water," an original song called "At the Westbrook," and "The Water is Wide," a cut from the Thirty Something soundtrack.

"'The Water is Wide' was a last-minute substitution," said Amy Westbrook. "The talent contest did not allow gospel or patriotic songs. We learned it in the car on the way down to Nashville."

The trio does its own arranging, and the group rehearses whenever it gets a chance, which is usually every other weekend. Kristyn and her husband Bob – a 1984 graduate of Edinboro – live in the Pittsburgh area where they own a health-food store called Joy of Health. They have a one-year-old son named Thaine. Steve is a CPA for the accounting firm of Maloney, Reed, Scarpitti and Company in Edinboro. Amy, the former corporate communications coordinator for First National Bank, spends most of her time at home with their 20-month-old son Graham. She does free-lance writing and serves on the board of directors of the new Family First Sports Park.

They are hoping the national television exposure will lead them to bigger things in the recording industry. In 1986 they cut a tape called Children of Light, and later recorded a tape at Aircraft Studios in Pittsburgh called Pressing On. Both were made for local distribution.

Signing a recording contract would be the fulfillment of a dream, but it is secondary to the music itself. They would turn down a contract if they weren't able to sing the music they believe is right for them – music that will make a difference in people's lives.

"Whatever comes our way professionally," said Amy, "we want to do it with integrity, singing positive music with an uplifting message. Most of all, we want to honor God in our lives."

Edinboro Junior Serves Summer Internship in Washington, D.C.

Sonya Lee, a nursing major from Cherry Hill, New Jersey, and a student member of Edinboro's Council of Trustees, recently completed a summer internship at The Washington Center in Washington, D.C., under a scholarship from the Ford Motor Company and additional support from Edinboro President Foster Diebold. Lee interned at Sen. Edward Kennedy's (D-Mass.) Health Office in the Senate Committee on Health and Human Resources.

During her internship, she gained first-hand experience participating in the formulation of Kennedy's health care bill. Other responsibilities included responding to constituent concerns and participating in several special interest projects, such as nurse education for the consolidation of nursing loans with Federal-funded loans, the Senate hearings on lupus, sickle cell anemia, and health insurance for American and foreign employees of multi-national companies.

Lee said she spent her free time taking a class, attending workshops on peace and conflict resolution, and volunteering at a local church's youth project for inner-city boys from single-parent households.

Founded in 1975, The Washington Center offers college students the opportunity to live and work in Washington, D.C., while experiencing the professional world.

Sonya Lee and Senator Edward Kennedy

Answer: A three-day Jeopardy! winner and English professor at Edinboro University of Pennsylvania.

Question: Who is Roger Solberg?

For four days this past June, Solberg was seen by millions of television viewers as he lived out his life-long dream of appearing on Jeopardy! He cruised through category after category, effortlessly providing the "question" to dozens of "answers" in the Jeopardy! and Double Jeopardy! rounds. He amassed nearly $40,000 in winnings before his miscalculation in Final Jeopardy! on the fourth day.

There is much more to Solberg than the quick-witted, articulate game-show contestant. A native of Staten Island, New York, he attended Upsala College in New Jersey and earned master's degrees in education and English from Indiana and Iowa. For five years he was student activities director at Wagner College, and he taught English for two years at the University of Texas at San Antonio.

He had never heard of Edinboro University before applying for an opening in the English department in 1989. Since coming to Edinboro he has taught college writing skills, research writing, advanced composition, and introduction to nonfiction. He is also teaching a continuing education course on science fiction films from the 1950s.

Movies are one of Solberg's passions. He subscribes to a number of film magazines and has a large video library. Fortunately for him, it's a frequent Jeopardy! topic.

"The first day I was on, there was a category about the Golden Globe awards," said Solberg. "It was the category I was hoping for the most. I ran straight through it. I knew it would happen if I got a movie category."

Solberg is also a fan of the blues. He co-hosts a weekly radio program on WFSE-FM called "Nothin' But the Blues." Now in its fourth year, the show features two hours of music by traditional and contemporary blues artists. Unfortunately for Solberg, there was no blues category on Jeopardy!

Another of his passions is the theater. In his five years at Edinboro, he has appeared in many of the University and community theater productions. "It's one of the most enjoyable things I've done since I've been here," he said.

He hasn't appeared in any productions in about a year, since most of his free time has been devoted to studying for a doctorate in rhetoric and linguistics from Indiana University of Pennsylvania. Not that he had much time this year anyway. 1994 has been a landmark year in Solberg's life. In addition to appearing on Jeopardy!, he received tenure at the University, married Mary Benson, and bought a house in Edinboro.

It was Benson, a writer for the Lake Shore Visitor in Erie, who suggested he go on Jeopardy!

"I've watched Jeopardy! since I was a kid and Art Fleming was the host," said Solberg. "Mary and I were sitting around one night watching it, and I think she got sick of me saying, 'Gee, I want to get on the show.' So she persuaded me to write a letter to find out how to get on."

Solberg wrote the letter and made an appointment to take the test in Hollywood. He and Mary drove to Los Angeles to visit her brother, and, while there, Solberg stopped in the studio to take the test.

"They told me right away that I'd passed the written test, but I wasn't sure how well I had done in the simulated game. I thought I had done kind of poorly, because I kept ringing in too soon. I wasn't waiting until they had finished reading the question," he said.

Six months later, in mid-January, the phone rang. "Hi," said a voice on the other end. "This is Glenn from Jeopardy! Can you be out here in two weeks?"

"I couldn't believe it," said Solberg. "By then, I had decided that I wasn't going to get on the show. There is no guarantee that they'll choose you just because you pass all the tests. I had resigned myself to thinking that I wouldn't make it on my first try, and I would have to go back and try again."

Paying their own travel and hotel expenses, Solberg and Benson flew to Hollywood in early February. He was well prepared for his Jeopardy! debut. He had played the home version, the computer version, and practiced "ringing in" by clicking a pen incessantly. Winning at Jeopardy! is a matter of split-second timing.

A native of Staten Island, NY, Solberg made sure everyone at the Jeopardy! studios knew he was from a little town in Pennsylvania named Edinboro. He said, "Everyone has heard of Staten Island. I wanted Edinboro to have its moment in the spotlight."

We tape three shows in a row with fifteen-minute turnarounds between shows and then take a meal break. Lunch is served on an adjacent sound stage.

By 5:00 p.m., a new audience has been seated and will remain with us for the fourth and fifth shows of the day. After the final show, Alex will wave good-bye to the audience and thank them for their attention.

Tomorrow, we'll come back to the studio and begin the entire process over again, or we'll show up at the office to prepare shows for our next tape date. Either way it's a happy problem. Jeopardy! is an enormously successful show, and we are all proud to be a part of it.

— George Vosburgh
Producer

One can take it for granted that on most questions everyone knows the answer. It usually comes down to who has the best reaction time – and the best thumb.

Players see the “answers” on monitors. Beside the monitors are red strobe lights. When host Alex Trebek finishes reading the answer, the red lights flash, signaling the contestants to ring in. As we have seen many times, if they ring in too soon, they are shut out of that question.

When it came time to actually play Jeopardy!, Solberg discovered he had nerves of steel. “I was surprised by how comfortable I felt. Once they started taping the show and I was standing there playing, I wasn’t the least bit nervous. I think I was so totally focused on the game that I wasn’t thinking of anything else – the audience, or that I was on TV, or that there was money at stake. You have to put those things out of your mind. My attitude was: ‘I like playing Jeopardy!, so let’s play and have a good time.’ I think that’s the best way to go about it.”

Solberg’s name was called for the third show, which aired on Wednesday, June 8. He started out with a bang – correctly answering the first question under the category of Newspapers, then switching immediately to the Golden Globes, ran through all five questions in a flash. He quickly established himself as the dominant player.

Not everything went smoothly, however. He twice had the daily double, and twice lost. But, by the time the Double Jeopardy! round was over, Solberg had a substantial lead over his closest rival. When Trebek announced the Final Jeopardy! category as Books and Authors, it looked like Solberg would have an easy time. He wagered $1,301 for the answer: “JFK donated some of this book’s royalties to the city of Plymouth in Great Britain.” All three contestants wrote the same question: “What is Profiles in Courage?” And all three were wrong. Fortunately, Solberg’s $5,399 was enough to win game one.

His winning ways continued in the second and third games. For Final Jeopardy! on game two, Solberg successfully wagered $6,500 on the category of Letter Perfect, raising his winnings to $15,500 for the day and $20,899 overall. A $7,000 wager in the Final Jeopardy! round of game three brought in $16,400 for the day.

The three-time winner now had to wait for the next day’s taping for game four. It started out like the others, and by the Final Jeopardy! round, Solberg was once again in the lead. The category was Fictional Transportation.

During the break, contestants are given paper and pencil to help them calculate how much to bet. It was here that Solberg made a simple, but horrendous mistake.

“I was thinking too much,” he said. “I was trying to have just enough to squeak by. But I did the math wrong.”

Solberg later said he knew as soon as he wrote down his wager that it was wrong. But there was no way to change it. His only hope was that his answer would be right and the others would miss it.

The Final Jeopardy! answer was: “It is 70 meters long, powered by electricity, displaces 1500 cubic meters of water and cost 1,687,000 francs.”

All three contestants wrote “What is the Nautilus?” the submarine of Captain Nemo from Jules Verne’s 20,000 Leagues Under the Sea. It was the correct answer, and Solberg’s fate was sealed.

Even in defeat, it was clear that Solberg was the best player. A simple miscalculation had cost him a fourth victory and a chance at a fifth. Winners of five games automatically qualify for the Tournament of Champions. We will never know what might have been if Solberg had not erred.

Many people have asked Solberg about the game’s host, Alex Trebek. Solberg said he seemed to be a genuinely nice person who enjoys his work, including meeting the contestants and talking to the audience.

Solberg had nice things to say about the other contestants, too. “There’s no cut-throat, competitive nature between the players, and I find that refreshing,” he said. “I now have a lot of empathy and understanding for the people on the show. And I have a lot more understanding for people who have low scores – it’s not because they aren’t any good, it simply wasn’t their day!”

Being a Jeopardy! winner hasn’t gone to his head. He and his wife enjoy living in the lakeside section of Edinboro. “It’s funny to have people come up to you and say they saw you on TV. People really enjoy seeing someone they know on television.”

Homecoming '94 – A Weekend to Remember

If you weren't able to get back to the 'Boro on October 7, 8 and 9, you missed another great Homecoming with big crowds, great golf, a winning football team, and a lot of socializing and reminiscing. The weather was even cooperative for two days. (We're hoping for three days in a row next year!)

It was another beautiful fall day for another Homecoming tradition – the parade. The sidewalks bulged with people waiting to see the beautiful floats depicting "Disney Movies." This year's winner was Little Mermaid, built by members of Sigma Tau Gamma and Alpha Sigma Alpha.

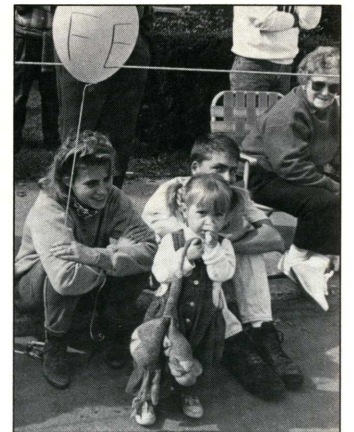

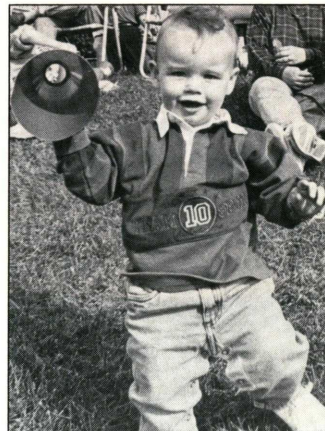

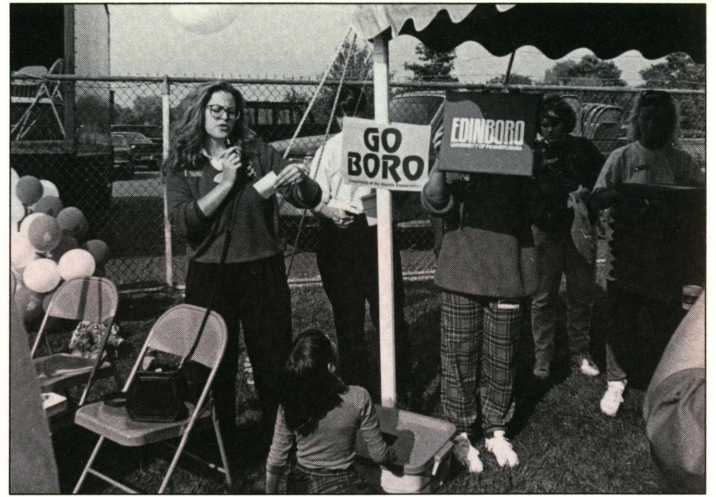

Friday, October 7, started the weekend with a full field of golfers for the 3rd Annual Homecoming golf outing. Late wanna-be participants had to be turned away until next year. All golfers enjoyed the challenging course at Culbertson Hills on a sunny day, as well as prizes and food for all. The day concluded with the traditional Friday night reception, also held at Culbertson Hills. Complimentary hors d'oeuvres and music by DJ John highlighted the festive atmosphere.

Many alumni stopped to visit the new Alumni Hall construction site. With brick work completed and windows installed, the structure was just shy of having the siding applied. Next year everyone will be able to enjoy the completed building.

The football game was well attended and proved to be exciting. The Scots fell behind early, but rallied and delivered a 31-17 win over Shippensburg. Prizes were raffled at half-time and everyone in attendance had access to Homecoming buttons and pompons.

Sunday brought the weekend to a successful close with light showers and cooler temperatures. The 5K race was well attended, as was the Tot Trot, despite the weather. Many thanks to Jeff Lemley '78 and '84, Patty Moore '79, Cyndy Patton '80, Jackie (McGrath) Masi '79, and Cheryl Blumenfeld '79 who organized the race and registered all the runners. Winners were Rich Laskowski (17:35) and Rosanne Siggia '91 (21:05).

Health and Physical Education instructors Linda Mukina '74 and Ken Felker, with help from their students, organized the Tot Trot and a health fair for the little ones.

HOMECOMING 1995 IS SEPTEMBER 29, 30 AND OCTOBER 1. MARK YOUR CALENDARS NOW TO RETURN TO THE 'BORO, SO YOU DON'T MISS OUT ON ALL THE FUN!

Alumni Hall Construction on a Fast-Paced Schedule

It has been approximately six months since the hole for the foundation was dug and the construction began for the new Alumni Hall facility. The progress has been tremendous, and there have been no major delays. At press time, the exterior was almost completed. As you can tell by the photo taken at Homecoming, the brick work was finished and the siding was ready to be installed. (The building will not be completely brick as depicted in the artist's rendering on the cover of the last Alumni News.) A small entrance deck, including a wheelchair ramp, will soon be added to the back of the building leading to the parking lot. Most of the remaining work will be inside, which, of course, will not be affected by the unavoidable winter weather right around the corner.

Completion is expected in January 1995, but the contractor and building committee are cautiously optimistic that it may be finished before then.

Now the Alumni Association is looking to the 30,000-plus graduates to add to the legacy of this project. As mentioned in the last magazine, there is an opportunity for our alumni to include a part of themselves and their era in this new facility. Certain items would enhance the interior appearance and provide the charm and warmth we seek for this building. You can help through both in-kind gifts and financial donations. These could include:

- ✓ antique or period furniture in good condition, such as sofas, coffee and end tables, chairs, etc.
- ✓ accessory pieces or appropriate rugs and lamps
- ✓ historical Edinboro memorabilia, including yearbooks (pre-1950), photographs, postcards, beanies, letter sweaters, etc.
- ✓ landscaping items or services
- ✓ defraying costs by making financial donations

If you're interested in helping directly or donating a gift-in-kind, contact the Alumni Office.

Greater D.C./Virginia Chapter Meets Again

The Greater D.C./Virginia chapter of Edinboro alumni met in Bethesda, Maryland, on September 24. The group enjoyed cocktails, hors d'oeuvres, and a nice dinner at the Holiday Inn-Bethesda. Following dinner, 1966 graduate Don Mikovch spoke about a variety of his life experiences.

You probably remember from the last issue of the Alumni News that Don was named a 1994 Distinguished Alumni in the field of business and industry. He currently heads Borvin Wines International, a highly successful wine import company.

Following graduation from Edinboro, Don spent several years with the Defense Intelligence Agency. He explained to the group how getting the job was actually the result of an impromptu tour of the Pentagon. He and a friend decided to take a tour "on their own" after their car broke down while passing through D.C. on their way to Florida for spring break. The military security didn't think that was such a good idea, but after talking with the young men rather extensively, they actually gave Don a job application.

Well, it must have been fate, because following some time with the DIA, Don moved on to a position with the Central Intelligence Agency. There he headed the technical surveillance countermeasures team that uncovered the major espionage story of the 1980s – proof that the Russians had "bugged" the American Embassy in Moscow. Don said that was the case of a lifetime and decided to leave the CIA in 1987 to found Borvin Wines. A fascinating story, to say the least!

This active group plans to continue these activities and is looking for your involvement and event ideas. Please contact the Alumni Office (1-800-526-0117) with your input.

Calling all Wrestling Fans!

If you love wrestling, you won't want to miss the match that is sure to bring the house down!

On January 21, two Division I powerhouses will face off as the Edinboro Fighting Scots host the Clarion Golden Eagles. The match gets underway at 7:30 p.m. in McComb Fieldhouse.

Prior to the match, there will be a reception at Uncle Charlie's Pizza Pub located in the Giant Eagle plaza on Route 99 in Edinboro. Head wrestling coach and Olympic champion Bruce Baumgartner is expected to attend to fire up the fans. The reception will be organized through the Alumni Office, so watch your mail for more details, or call 1-800-526-0117.

The 'Boro Ventures West!

Those of you living in Arizona and California should mark your calendars for a System-wide alumni gathering. Similar to last year's swing through part of Texas, the alumni offices of the 14 universities of the State System of Higher Education are planning to gather all their graduates together for a fun evening of reminiscing, making new friends and networking. Janet L. Bowker '84, Director of Alumni Affairs, will be coming out from Edinboro and is looking forward to meeting you.

You should have already received detailed information, but if you haven't, call the Alumni Office at 1-800-526-0117.

The schedule is currently planned as follows.

Friday, January 6 – Scottsdale, Arizona
Sunburst Hotel & Conference Center
4925 North Scottsdale Road
5:30 p.m.

Monday, January 9 – San Diego, California
Hyatt Regency
1 Market Place

State's "Operation Jump Start" to Create New Complex on Campus

Anyone who's been on Pennsylvania highways during the last two years knows what comes next after an "Operation Jump Start" sign appears along the side of the road: slow down, merge into one lane, and pass mile after mile of road construction and repair. What motorists might not know, however, is that Operation Jump Start – the Commonwealth's plan to "jump start" the state's economy by undertaking critical public works projects and creating new jobs – has a higher education capital construction component that turned the starter key on 40 construction projects totaling more than $124 million at the 14 State System of Higher Education universities. Two projects are on the Edinboro University campus.

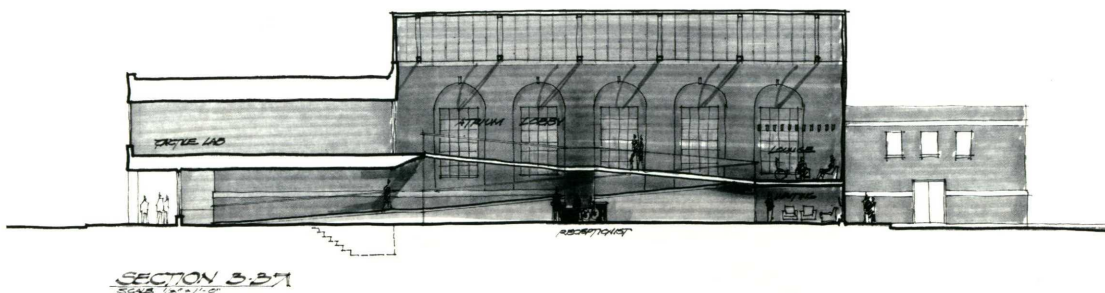

One of the caveats for Jump Start funding eligibility was that the projects must have been previously authorized in state legislation. Two construction projects had already been included in earlier legislation – though funding was never released – for Edinboro University: a $6.2 million disabled students center authorized in 1988 and a classroom/lecture hall facility originally approved by legislation in 1970 as a new $4 million auditorium.

The disabled student project will add a 44,000 square foot annex to the Crawford Gymnasium and renovate its existing interior to house specialized program components, add laboratories, and better focus support resources and expand their delivery for the already extraordinary level of support Edinboro University provides for student with disabilities.

The second project, though originally envisioned as an auditorium near the southeast corner of the campus, will combine with the first to create a totally new complex to strengthen Edinboro's already nationally acclaimed program for students with disabilities, as well as provide as part of the complex an expanded academic classroom and auditorium facility to benefit the entire university community. This part of the new complex will be attached to Centennial Hall and will extend toward the expanded and renovated Crawford Gymnasium to create a learning center complex connected by walkways and a courtyard.

Total cost to complete the complex: $10.8 million. Edinboro University's share under the Operation Jump Start cost-sharing formula is nearly $3 million, which must be raised from private and other sources of funding.

We're pleased to tell Edinboro alumni that nearly 35 percent – more than $900,000 – of our match commitment has already been raised during the "silent phase" of the fund-raising campaign. Yet many giving opportunities still remain available.

Carter Joins Advancement Staff

Mark Carter, a native of Sharon Hill, Pa., has been named assistant director of development at Edinboro University. Prior to his appointment, Carter was a counselor in the admissions office.

He graduated from Allegheny College in 1982 with a dual major in psychology and art. He worked at the Dr. Gertrude A. Barber Center in Erie for two years as a habilitation team aide before joining the Edinboro staff in March of 1985.

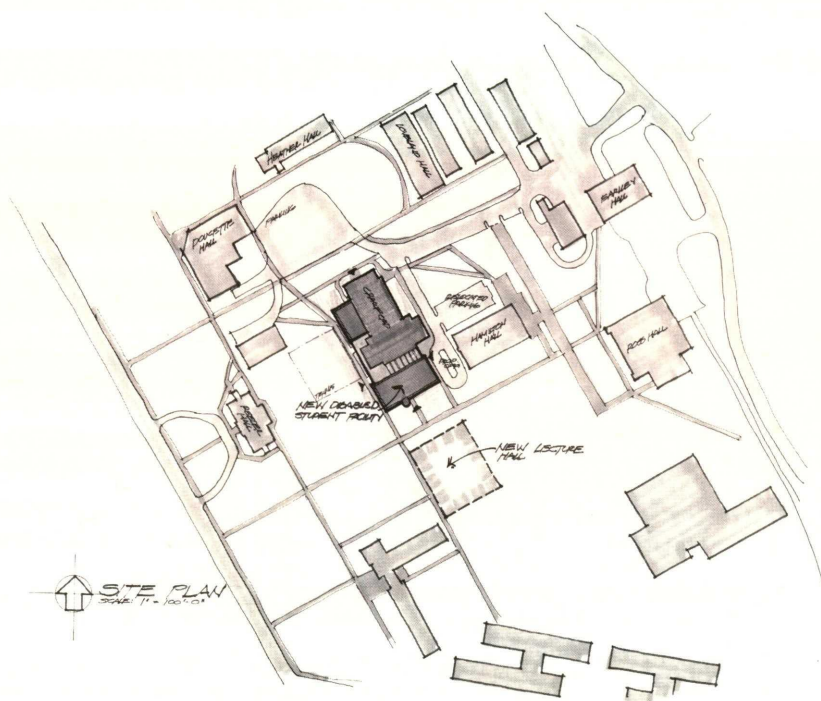

In his new position, Carter will be involved with many of the University's fund-raising programs, phonathons and other Annual Fund activities, and special campaigns such as Operation Jump Start. His primary role, as he sees it, will be to promote the University to its many constituents and to secure resources to enhance the school's programs and facilities.

The Annual Fund runs from July 1 to June 30 every year and involves contacting all of Edinboro's alumni, employees, and friends through phonathons and mailings. The primary focus this year is strengthening the scholarship program.

Another key role for Carter is working with alumni and other friends of the University who are interested in creating scholarships. Carter will help to develop the criteria for determining who is eligible for scholarships and how they are awarded. Follow-up with donors is also a large part of this process.

Carter also serves as a member of the boards of directors of University Services, Inc., the French Creek Council of the Boy Scouts of America, and was recently appointed by President Foster F. Diebold as the University's representative to Leadership Erie 1994-95.

He lives in Erie with his wife, Gina, and their children, Jason and Alyssa.

Preliminary designs for the Centennial Hall classroom/auditorium facility call for two compact auditoria, one with 80 seats and a second with 125, and as many as 10 classrooms and combination conference/seminar rooms. All, of course, are completely wheelchair accessible.

Excitement over construction of the new complex has swelled on the campus and among Edinboro University's many friends in the region and across the state. We're pleased to tell Edinboro alumni that nearly 35 percent – more than $900,000 – of our match commitment has already been raised during the "silent phase" of the fund-raising campaign. Yet many giving opportunities still remain available.

We know that Edinboro alumni will want to be a part of helping their alma mater meet its Operation Jump Start commitment, and share in their University's distinguished tradition of service and quality education for Americans of all abilities.

Look for more information on Jump Start opportunities in forthcoming issues of the Alumni News.

University Center Dedicated

On Friday, October 7, Edinboro University officially dedicated the recently renovated and expanded student union, the University Center.

Mel Perry, president of the Student Government Association, presented welcoming remarks followed by President Diebold. Dr. James H. McCormick, chancellor of the State System of Higher Education, was on hand for the ceremony.

Planning for the new facility began during the 1988-89 academic year when the Student Government Congress voted to fund a bond issue from the Commonwealth through an increased union assessment fee.

Construction of the 60,000 square foot, six million dollar addition to the 1971 building's north side began on May 4, 1993, with total completion expected by the end of 1994.

Recreational facilities available to the student body will include: a multi-sport gymnasium; an elevated indoor running track; an aerobics room designed for low-impact, high-impact, step aerobics and aerobic dance; a weight room and fitness facility furnished with state-of-the-art fitness equipment and cardiovascular units; a third-floor lounge area; five multi-faceted racquetball and handball courts; locker rooms for both men and women complete with saunas and hot tubs; additional meeting rooms; and a seminar room with kitchen facilities.

Additional renovations added space and a textbook distribution center to the Campus Bookstore, created a new entranceway to the renovated snack bar area, and added a greenhouse near the multi-purpose room.

Geologists Discover Prehistoric Fish

Edinboro professors Dr. Jeffrey Gryta and Dr. Dale Tshudy, and student assistant Joseph Lichtinger discovered the fragmentary fossil remains of a giant armored fish that prowled the sea covering northwestern Pennsylvania more than 300 million years ago. They were studying the ancient bedrock of a streambed in southern Erie County when Tshudy made the find.

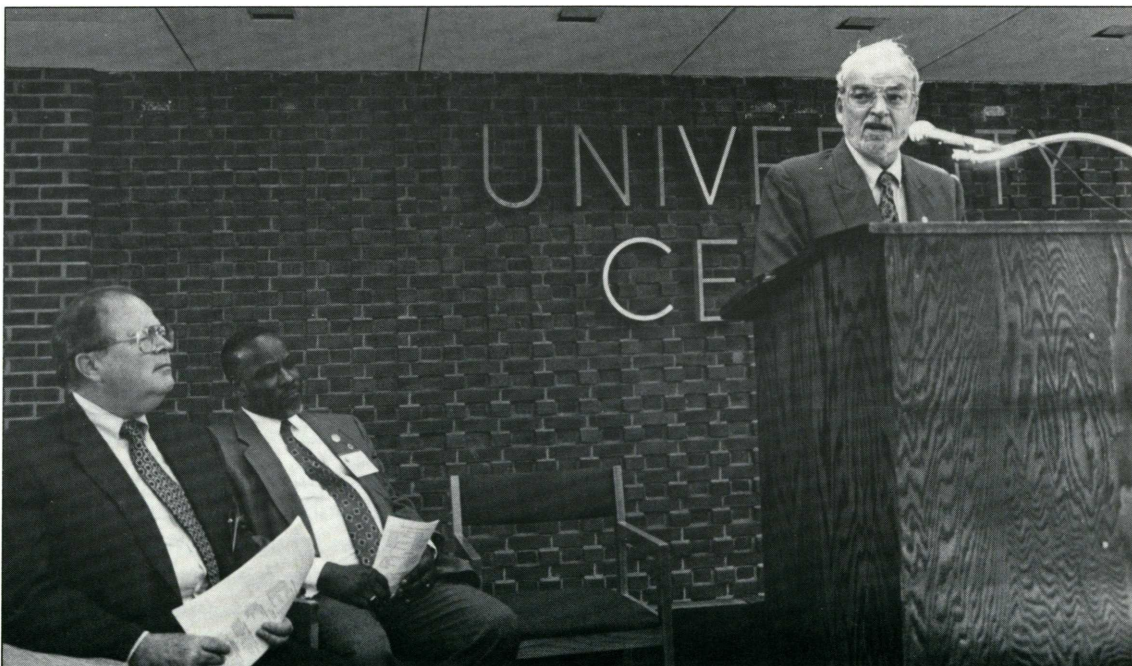

The fossil was tentatively identified as dunkleosteus terrelli, a predatory fish with a massively armored head and neck that grew to lengths of 20 feet or more. It belongs to a large group of armored fish known as "arthrodires." Several types of arthrodires are

Career Opportunities

The Center for Advising and Career Services offers a bi-weekly listing of both educational and non-educational positions throughout the nation. The Job Opportunity Bulletin (JOB) includes information about the type of position, title, salary, who to contact, etc.

To receive the JOB, send self-addressed stamped envelopes to the Center for Advising and Career Services, McNerney Hall.

President Diebold Addresses National Conference

Edinboro President Foster F. Diebold was a featured speaker at the 60th annual National Conference of the International Management Council. Speaking on "Developing a Mentoring Program for your Corporation," he defined facilitated mentoring as a structured process in which a manager, as a leader, provides guidance and evaluates the results of desired behavioral changes of those participating as mentorees.

The mentoring program Diebold developed more than a decade ago for Edinboro faculty, staff and administrators predates much of the mentoring literature and is recognized as a model for other universities in the State System of Higher Education.

known from Ohio and western New York, but this is only the third report of identifiable arthrodire remains in Pennsylvania.

"This fish was the tyrannosaurus rex of the marine world," said Tshudy.

Edinboro Celebrates the "Year of the Internet"

A grant from the State System of Higher Education will enable Edinboro University to put more faculty and staff in touch with the Internet. The grant funds a year-long program called the Year of the Internet which will demonstrate how the Internet can be used as a resource tool.

Andrew Lawlor, interim associate vice president for academic programs, said the Year of the Internet will make it easier to learn how to use the Internet and discover what resources are available through the world-wide computer network. The ultimate purpose of the program is to improve educational opportunities in liberal arts, physical sciences and education.

"While access to the Internet has been available on Edinboro's campus since January 1993," said Lawlor, "the amount of material available, as well as the variety of access methods, can be daunting to both novices and experts. We want to make faculty and staff comfortable with using the Internet and eventually get their students interested as well."

Using the Baron-Forness Library and the Computing and Communications Center, the University will offer more than a dozen training sessions, issue an Internet newsletter, and create an Internet users group. The key to developing interest in the program, Lawlor believes, is to focus on the resources available in specific subject areas, rather than treating the issue of Internet access as simply learning a set of skills.

Dr. John Fleischauer (left), provost and vice president for academic affairs at Edinboro, and Dr. Li Qing Zhen, president of Jinan University in the Peoples' Republic of China, recently formalized the agreement that links the two universities in a "sister school" relationship. The original terms of the academic linkage were concluded in China earlier this year by President Diebold. The agreement – which calls for the exchange of scholars, students, and materials, and the provision of faculty and staff consultations – is similar to the linkage Edinboro has maintained with China's Zibo College since 1987 as an outgrowth of the "sister city" relationship between the cities of Erie and Zibo. Jinan University is located in the City of Jinan, the capital of China's Shandong Province.

'23 MARJORIE (BURGETT) PUTNAM will be moving this fall to the Sarah Reed Retirement Center in Erie, Pa., after living in the same house for 54 years.

Sports Memorabilia Auction Set for June 10, 1995

The Edinboro University Athletic Department has announced plans to hold a sports memorabilia auction on June 10, 1995 at Culbertson Hills Golf Course. Proceeds will benefit all sports programs through the general athletic scholarship fund.

Nearly 50 items have already been secured, including autographed footballs from Mike Ditka and many of the Buffalo Bills and Pittsburgh Steelers, and a USA basketball jersey autographed by Larry Bird. Edinboro's own Olympic champion Bruce Baumgartner will also provide numerous items for the event.

Serving on the planning committee for the inaugural event are Todd V. Jay, sports information and promotions director; Sarah B. Jay, assistant women's basketball coach; Janet Bowker, director of alumni affairs; Connie Thompson, sports information; Jim Camp, sports editor of the Erie Morning News, and Erie sports directors Mike Ruzzi (WICU-TV), Gary Drapcho (WSEE-TV), and John Evans (WJET-TV).

Alumni wishing to donate items for the auction are asked to contact Todd Jay at 814-732-2811.

Jody Mooradian Named Interim Athletic Director

Ms. Jody Mooradian, associate athletic director for the past year, was named interim athletic director following the retirement of long-time AD Jim McDonald.

She joined the Edinboro staff in September 1993, after serving an internship at UCLA. A former practicing attorney, she has specialized in issues relating to NCAA compliance rules and regulations and matters of gender equity in athletic programs.

"We are fortunate to have a professional of Jody's caliber leading our athletic department," said President Diebold. "She has done an outstanding job for Edinboro and has developed an exceptional working relationship with the Edinboro coaches and her peers throughout the Pennsylvania State Athletic Conference."

New Coaches Join Staff

A trio of new coaches have joined the staff of the athletic department. Ms. Lynn Theehs will serve as the volleyball coach, Ms. Kenwyn Chock will coach both men's and women's swimming, and Nick Cronk was hired as assistant football/defensive line coach.

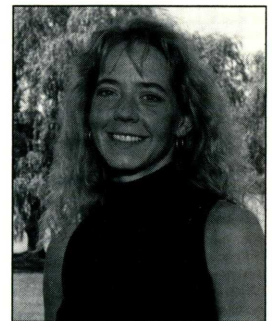

A native of Marquette, Michigan, Theehs earned an associate degree in business administration from the College of Lake County in Illinois, and a bachelor of arts in communication and coaching certification from the University of Wisconsin-Parkside. She joined the Edinboro coaching staff after serving as assistant coach and recruiting coordinator at Northern Michigan University. In that position, she was responsible for organizing all phases of the recruitment program and assisting the head coach. From 1991 to 1993, she was the head volleyball coach at her alma mater.

Chock, originally from Pittsburgh, will lead both swimming programs – a men's team which placed fourth at the NCAA championships last year and a women's team that placed 21st. A graduate of Slippery Rock University with post-graduate hours from Akron University, she previously coached at Peddie School in Hightstown, New Jersey, and in Hudson, Ohio, where she captured the Ohio Scholastic Coach of the Year honors once and was three times named Lake Erie and District top coach.

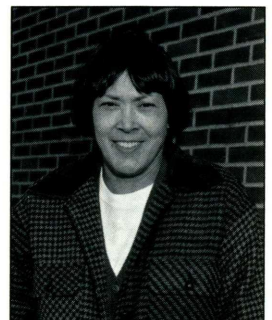

Cronk, a native of Indiana, joins the Edinboro staff following two years with Coach Bill Mallory at Indiana University. He earned a bachelor's degree in political science from Wabash College where he was an all-conference performer on the football field, and has completed course requirements for a master's degree in physical education administration.

Matt Brown

Defensive End Matt Brown Spends the Summer in Italy

Matt Brown, an honors student, junior accounting major, and defensive end on the Fighting Scots football team, participated in the University's Summer Study Abroad Program this past July thanks to the assistance of President Diebold.

Last year, Brown saw a brochure for the Italy program and set a goal to make the trip in 1994. During breaks from school he worked construction near his home in Chagrin Falls, Ohio, to earn money for the trip. He realized early in the year, however, that he would not have enough money to cover his out-of-state tuition and the cost of the program. That's when he decided to write directly to President Diebold.

"I sent him a letter, and just a week later I was meeting with Ted Atkinson, director of the Honors Program. He talked to the President, and the President personally decided to help me out," said Brown.

Diebold agreed to provide support for the project, and the Honors Program covered the cost of the travel. As part of the arrangement, Diebold asked Brown to represent the University at the National Collegiate Honors Conference in San Antonio. He and another student presented their experiences with the study abroad programs.

"I was bowled over," said Brown. "Not only was the President helping me go to Italy, he was sending me to a national conference to represent the University."

Brown's personal goals are to take the CPA exam following graduation in May 1996, and eventually work for one of the big six accounting firms and possibly go on to law school.

Larry Jackson Surpasses Raines' Standards

On October 8, 1994, Edinboro University tailback Larry Jackson rewrote Edinboro's history books by becoming the school's all-time leading rusher, a standard previously held by standout running back Al Raines.

Last season, Jackson became the first running back in Edinboro history to rush for consecutive 1,000-plus yard seasons. This year, he solidified his position as one of the all-time greats by topping the 1,000-yard mark for the third straight year in only his sixth game of the season.

Most recently, Jackson was one of only 24 players in the country nominated for the prestigious Harlon Hill Award.

Dating back to October 9, 1993, Jackson has rushed for more than 100 yards in 14 straight games. During that time, he has averaged an amazing 170.0 yards per contest with 19 touchdowns.
