Heating project continues

by Karen Trimbath
for The Voice

The orange, plastic fencing surrounding the front of the Bakesless Humanities Center seems to be the creation of an environmental artist.

However, this area is part of an ongoing construction project to replace wornout condensate pipes in order to increase BU's heating efficiency.

Don McCulloch, director of BU's Physical Plant and Energy Management said, "This project is very important. Right now, the campus' heating system is losing 22 percent of steam through pipes."

He explained that BU's central boiler plant heats water using coal and discharges the steam through underground pipes. After heat is released to the campus buildings, the steam condenses and returns to the plant.

According to McCulloch, "The leaks in the condensate pipes let water escape. Ordinarily, the returning water is around 180 to 200 degrees Fahrenheit. With escaping condensate, we must use fresh water which is 40-50 degrees. It takes more coal to heat fresh water, so it is inefficient."

He estimates that $6,000 is spent each month for the extra coal. "We still consider this heating system to be excellent. We have the highest rating of all the universities operating on steam in this state. Heating with coal is one-third the cost of electricity. This savings is reflected in the tuition," McCulloch said.

The campus buildings will not be affected because the new pipes are laid directly over the old ones.

The construction starts by the Waller parking lot, and extends to Bakesless and the roadway between North and Luzerne Halls.

McCulloch said a state bill was passed in 1980 providing $2.5 million for the reconstruction, but a contractor wasn't hired until 1987 because of governmental efforts to improve state prisons.

"This slowed our plans," McCulloch said.

McCulloch said the project is on schedule should be completed by July 1988.

ROTC: It's a gas

by Gail Gamble
for The Voice

Bloomsburg University's Army ROTC gained practical experience on Tuesday, March 1, about nuclear, biological and chemical warfare protection.

Cadet Robert Karnes, a senior chemistry major, taught the company about the history of chemical warfare.

Since the Greeks first experimented with it, chemical warfare has affected civilians.

During World War II, British school children had to carry protective masks. To allay their fears, artist Walt Disney designed a mask which looked like Mickey Mouse.

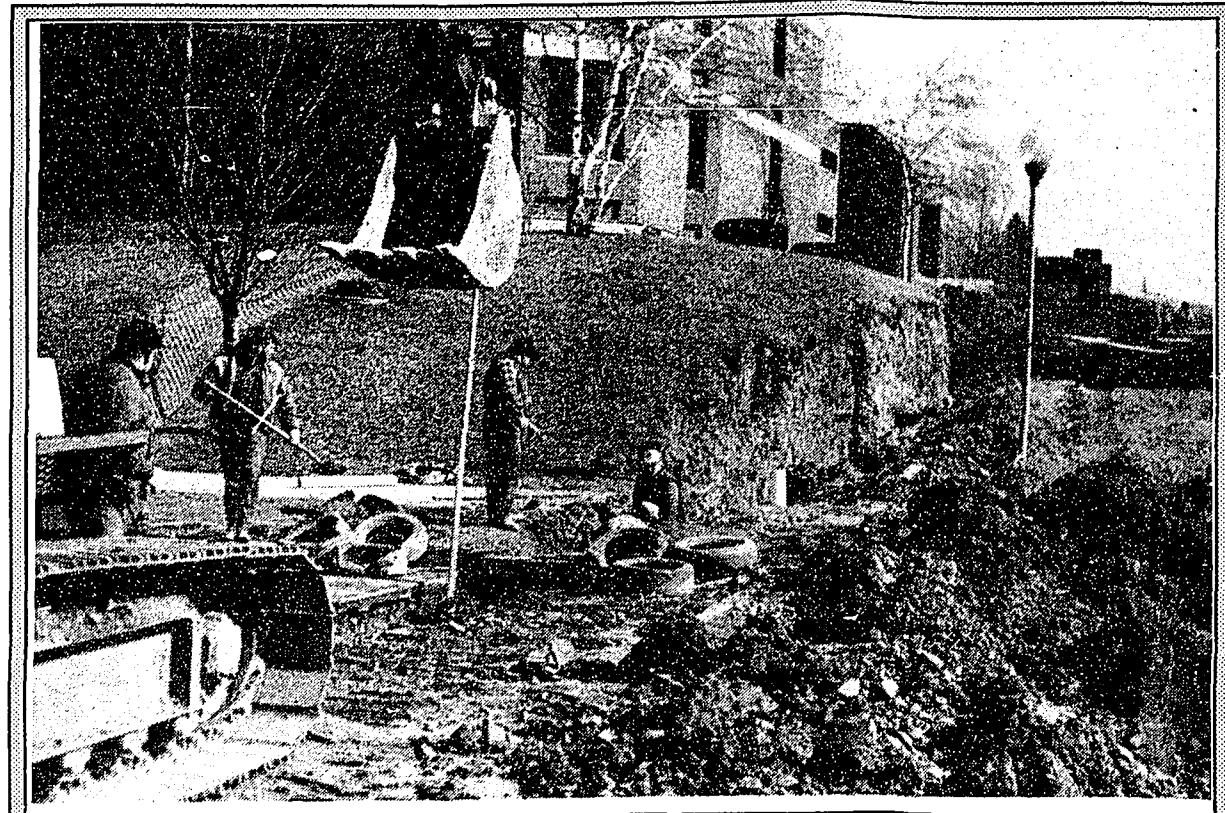

After the historical review, the company split into their respective platoons for two stations.

The first station donned the Mission Oriented Protective Posture, also known as the MOPP suit.

Once a year, Army personnel must wear this suit for eight hours doing their usual duties.

The second station taught cadets decontamination using the M13 individual decontamination kit which is used to decontaminate clothing, equipment and weapons. The M258 kit is used to decontaminate skin.

BU Army ROTC attempts to teach cadets things that are both interesting and practical in the military. For more information call 389-2123.

As contractors repair the university's condensate heating system, the sidewalk near Bakesless has recently become a construction site.

Daughter believes dream

by Gordon Ovenshine
Slippery Rock Rocket News Editor

The face, the mannerisms and rhetoric were familiar. And so was the message.

Vestiges of the late Martin Luther King Jr. were apparent Tuesday night when his oldest child told a University Union audience that the ugly letters of discrimination still pester America.

Yolanda King, actress, director, lecturer, told the 400 person gathering her father's dream of establishing a society in which all people are considered equal remains unrealized.

"We as black people and humanity have not reached the promised land," King said, mimicking her father. "We are still bumping into each other in the wilderness. And that magnificent dream articulated and fiercely pursued by my father is still only a dream."

King blamed many of the current social problems on bad fiscal and economic policies. Any country that spends 10 times as much on ways to destroy life than on educating its citizens is toying with destruction, she said.

The dream must never be forgotten, she said. Students must get "up off their apathy" and remember the tremendous sacrifices that were made during the civil rights era (1954-1968), she said.

She said she supported the decision to designate a national holiday in remembrance of her father, but insisted that its purpose should be to keep alive the memory of the civil rights movement in this country, not her father's birthday.

"We must never forget that discrimination was at one time a very fiber of our government," she said. "Because certainly, what you forget, you are doomed to repeat."

King said many contemporary college students don't remember the tumultuous civil rights struggle. They don't remember the sitting at the back of the bus, the lynchings, the snapping dogs, the sneering fire hoses or the "white/colored-only" signs.

"The movement rocked the whole world and brought the South, finally, into the 20th century," King said.

Fifty million people in this country are functionally illiterate, and still the Pentagon continues to spend $1 billion a day on defense, King explained. "And the perverted sickness of it all is that we still don't really feel safe," she said.

Our priorities are warped, she said. She added that basic reading and writing skills must be provided if Americans are to move out of the stagnancy that exists in our communities.

Racism is not the only culprit of discrimination, King said. Greed - an obsessive need to be powerful - contributes.

Six percent of our population owns and controls 70 percent of means and production while 35 million people continue to live at the poverty level, she said.

"For far too many people - both black and white - it is not even a question of getting a piece of the pie, because by the time the pie gets around to them, there's nothing left in the pie plate but a few crumbs," she said.

Fiscal stability and economic security will remain uncertain as long as we allow poor education and unemployment to run rampant through our nation, she added.

King said black history and its contribution to world history should not be thought about only once a year - in February, the coldest and shortest month of the year.

"It is imperative that we know our history," she said. "For you really cannot know the history - the true story of America - unless you also know the story of black America."

She urged students to get involved in organizations on and off campus that promote human rights.

Quoting her father, she said, "Either we will learn to live together as brothers and sisters, or we will perish as fools."

This Bloomsburg University ROTC member intends to set the trends by wearing this fashionable gas mask.

Johanson speaks of bones and history

by Bridget Sullivan
Staff Writer

Anthropologist Donald Johanson, discoverer of the famous 3.5 million-year-old fossil "Lucy", gave his lecture, "A New Perspective on the Human Family Tree" in Carver Hall Auditorium Monday night.

Johanson discussed anthropological discoveries and how theories of human origin change as more discoveries are made.

According to Johanson, Charles Darwin predicted that humans could possibly find their ancestors in Africa, home to the chimpanzee, which happens to be man's closest relative. A two-percent genetic variance differentiates modern men and chimpanzees and gorillas, Johanson said.

Raymond Dart first discovered the Australopithecus, considered by some scientists to be the "missing link" between man and ape, in Africa in 1925, Johanson said. He added that many scientists disagreed with this.

But a Scottish anthropologist, Robert Broom, believed Dart's discovery was the "missing link". In Northern Transvaal of Africa, Broom found a fossil similar to Dart's Australopithecus that had many large chewing muscles which suggest it was a "specialized vegetarian." It also had a "fairly large brain and was walking," Johanson said. Broom named this fossil Australopithecus robustus.

Renowned anthropologist Louis Leakey developed paleoanthropology, which is the study of and search for human origins, Johanson said.

In 1959, African exploration efforts shifted to Olduvai in Northern Tanzania, where Leakey's wife, Mary discovered A. boisei or the "Nutcracker" fossil, named so for its "huge chewing muscles," Johanson said.

Johanson proceeded to discuss his own expeditions and discoveries, including that of "Lucy."

While walking in Hadar in the Afar Triangle of Ethiopia on his way back to camp, Johanson saw a "piece of arm bone" that his research team had not noticed protruding from a hillside. The skeleton he discovered would become known as "Lucy," after the Beatles' song "Lucy in the Sky with Diamonds," which was playing during the team's celebration of the discovery.

Lucy is classified as Australopithecus Afarensis, named after Dart's discovery and the Afar Triangle.

Johanson also talked about discovering of a 3.2 million-year-old adult skeleton that stood about 3.5 feet tall. Johanson said, "The arms are proportionately much larger than the legs," which indicated that it was probably climbing as well as walking.

In 1974, Johanson's research team discovered fossils of 13 adults and children, known as the "First Family." He said they died simultaneously, possibly because of a flash flood or hurricane.

Johanson is the founder and current director of The Institute of Human Origins in Berkeley, Calif.

Accounting students nominated for award

by Lisa Barnes
Staff Writer

Two Bloomsburg University students from the Accounting Department have been nominated to receive scholarships amounting to either $1,000, $500, or $100 for the coming academic year.

Richard McClellan, a professor in the Accounting Department, announced that Roger M. Jones and Jay E. McGuire have been nominated for the 1988 Pennsylvania Institute of Certified Public Accountants (PICPA) Scholarship Fund Awards.

The two students were chosen by the department to apply for the prestigious award.

"It's an honor to be selected (to apply), because there are well over a hundred business majors in the junior class just at Bloomsburg," McClellan said.

To qualify for consideration, the students have to meet certain criteria.

They must be of junior class standing, have completed at least 12 semester hours in accounting, and they must possess leadership qualities as well as show they are in good standing with the university.

Contras are backed

by Josh Getlin
L.A. Times-Washington Post Service

House Democratic leaders, seeking to firm up support from wavering liberal members before Wednesday's showdown vote, announced Tuesday that a number of U.S. peace groups are backing the party's plan to provide humanitarian aid to the Nicaraguan Contras.

The endorsements should make it clear that the Democratic proposal, which will be voted on along with a Republican alternative, is "the lesser of two evils," said Rep. David Bonior, D-Mich., the party's chief House spokesman on Central American issues.

Last week, Democratic leaders were embarrassed when a scheduled vote on Contra aid was postponed after party liberals rebelled at the idea of sending even non-military aid to the rebels. Now, they are confident these members will support the $30 million package.

"It's a question of voting for this proposal, which we think will further the peace process, or voting no and paving the way for another vote in Congress on military aid," said Bonior. "Once that word gets out, we'll be able to make our point that much easier."

The problem surfaced last month, after House Democrats narrowly defeated a White House aid proposal that included military aid. Speaker

Jim Wright, D-Tex., won the support of about 30 moderates on that vote after promising them that they would be able to vote on an alternative package of humanitarian assistance, including food, clothing and medicine.

Since then, however, Democratic leaders have been trying to win the support of "nervous" party liberals. They persuaded several peace organizations long opposed to the Contras to endorse the Democratic package of $30 million in humanitarian aid, contending that a defeat of their plan would trigger a new White House request for military assistance.

The students should find out near the semester's end if they qualify for the scholarship money.

Even if they don't, just being nominated is quite an accomplishment, McClellan said.

Degrading students is not part of job description

To the Editor

I'm sitting in the second half of my Thursday night class. Looking around, it's noticeable that many of the students have found the break to be a great time to escape.

Apparently, the instructor has noticed this also. His response? "I don't give a shit," he said. "That is the attitude of so many Bloomsburg students."

This remark truly bothers me. This is not the first time this particular professor has made a rude and, what I perceive to be, arrogant remark.

I've just about had it with listening to how dumb, ignorant, and uncaring MOST Bloomsburg University students are!

First of all, professor, would you chose to remain in a class where the "superior" (as you consider yourself) continually gives you a feeling of insecurity, stupidity and worthlessness?

Whenever a question is asked during class I've noticed that in your own little way you seem to avoid what the bottom line of the answer really is.

Could it be that you don't know the answer, so you cover it up by talking every which way around it?

Sometimes you don't even do that. Sometimes you make us feel like worthless, uneducated beings, especially when you make rude comments and avoid the question altogether.

Isn't it you who continually preaches to us about how important it is to learn how to learn how to spell (names especially) properly, only to have misspelled one of the most famous names in the history of film? You probably didn't even catch that one.

Talking to you one on one is no piece of pie either.

Why is it that you never make eye contact, and continually talk to us in an unfriendly, uncaring manner, not to mention never treating us like the educated persons we had to become to get here.

Giving extra help, even during your office hours, seems to be such a difficult task for you to accomplish.

I will not say that instructors of your nature are a majority. Of all the professors I have had in my six semesters at BU, you have been the only one who has made me feel unwelcome and not good enough for this fine establishment.

It is semi-true what you say about students not giving a shit. But only SOME students. These students are not the majority.

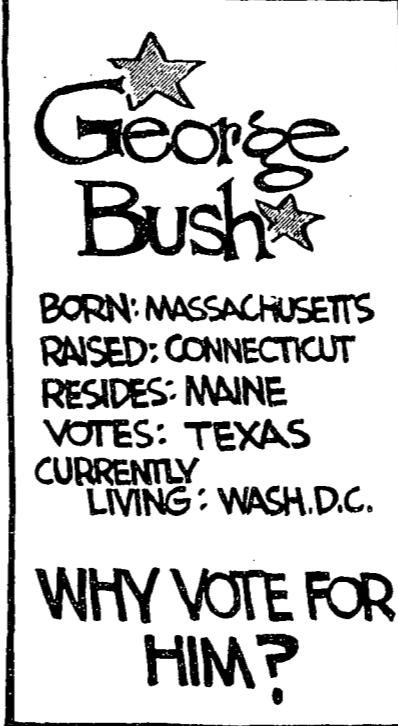

Most of us are here because we want to be, we want to be accepted, we want to prepare ourselves for the real world and we want to learn.

Perhaps you may not know this, but it really isn't easy to just slide on into BU. Many students are not accepted into the university. The best applicants are.

I am not dumb, I am not ignorant and I have never done anything to offend you. I treat you in a respectful manner, and I wish to be treated in the same way.

It is a shame that there are instructors like you. I really am interested in the material that is covered in class, I just wish it could be presented in a more positive atmosphere.

MADD sends safety message

To all BU Students

Spring Break is nearing and members of Florida Mothers Against Drunk Driving (MADD) are concerned about your safety during this time.

We want you to enjoy all that our state has to offer and return home with memories of a pleasant vacation.

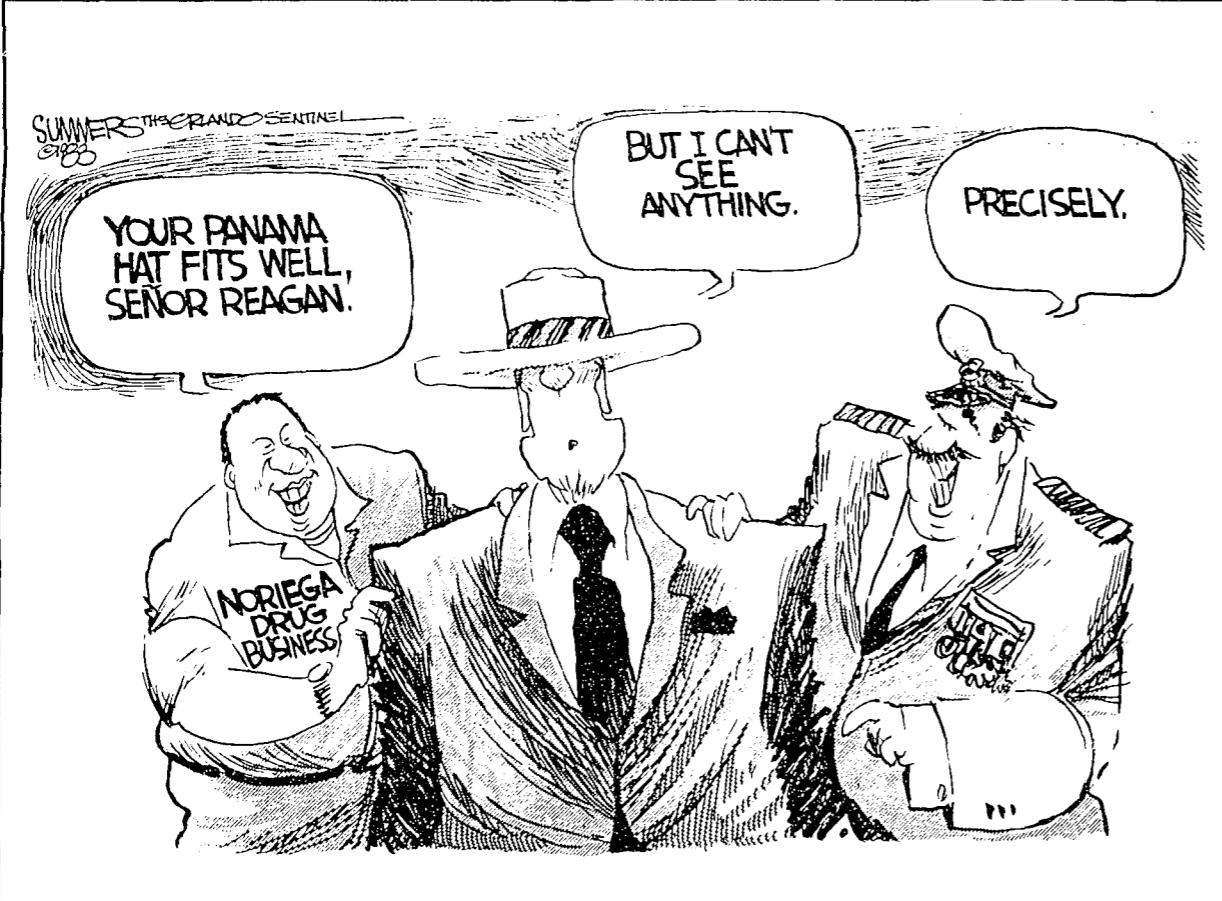

In years past, there have been out of state students which have not had the opportunity to savor these memories. Each year there are those which have lost their life because of driving impaired by alcohol or drugs.

Please come to Florida, enjoy our beaches, our landmarks, our night life and all our state has to offer, but do not drink and drive. Make your spring break safe.

Sincerely
Betty Jane Spencer
Florida MADD

Editor's note: Whether you are headed to Florida or Philadelphia, have a fun-filled, but safe, spring break. Don't drink and drive!

At Large

Another one bites the sacred dust

by Ellen Goodman
Editorial Columnist

When Jimmy Swaggart fell from grace, the event resounded as loudly as a golden idol hitting a marble temple floor. The fall, like the rise of this evangelical, made for high televised drama. At its peak, he cried out, "I know that so many of you will ask, 'Why? Why?' I have asked myself that 10,000 times through 10,000 tears."

Swaggart had preached mightily against sin, unforgivingly against weaknesses in his brother preachers and bitterly against pornography.

"Pornography titillates and captivates the sickest of the sick and makes them slaves to their own consuming lusts...ensnares its victims in a living hell," he once wrote. It appears now he knew a good deal about the living hell.

But it wasn't just Swaggart's flock that asked "Why? Why?" as they found out the details - the motel strip he cruised regularly, the $13-an-hour motel room where he is said to have paid a prostitute to perform pornographic acts, all in the shadow of a billboard that reads, "Your Eternity Is at Stake."

The most cynical and secular people I know seemed somewhat bewildered. Listing the sex-scandal ministers alphabetically from Jimmy Bakker to Marvin Gorman to Jimmy Swaggart, many of them asked, "What's with these guys?"

In the week that followed, I watched two distinct sets of answers to that question and to Swaggart's "Why?" emerge. They reveal a split in American Society that runs deeper even than the split in Swaggart's life.

A split between those who analyze human failings in the terms of psychology and those who analyze them in the terms of scripture.

To the millions who worship in Swaggart's church and through his televised ministry, the minister lost a round in the battle between God and the Devil. To the secular millions who've absorbed psychoanalytic terms into their everyday vocabulary, he lost in a battle between the super-ego and the id.

To the first group, he was a sinner. To the second group, he was screwed up. The first group described a struggle between the forces of light and darkness. The second described the subconscious urges that led to the motel strip where he was caught by his arch-rival.

These two American cultures spoke in their own distinct languages.

Even words like healing and counseling have different meanings in their dictionaries. If, for example, Jimmy Swaggart's wife had written to Ann Landers that her minister-husband had an obsession with pornography, she would have been directed to "seek help."

But it would have been a very different sort than the "counseling" prescribed by the Assemblies of God. As distant as prayer is from psychotherapy as a modern devil. There are therapists, in turn, who accept everyone and everything except religious self-righteousness.

The fundamentalist and therapeutic cultures in this country are not always crisply divided. Confession has much in common with what Freud called "the talking cure." One group's soul is the other's psyche. Most of us are at least somewhat bilingual. The therapeutic language has infiltrated fundamentalist speech, the words of a moral code are rampant in a secular world.

Fundamentalist Tammy Bakker described her use of contributions for personal shopping as "therapy." More than one secular supporter judged Gary Hart's behavior as both a character and a moral flaw, two parts stupid, one part wrong. At their edges, feel-good fundamentalists and feel-good therapy offer the same promises.

But between the hard-core groups, there are more than differences of vocabulary. There are conflicts as great as one's focus on the afterlife and the other's focus on the here and now. Swaggart himself railed against psychology as a modern devil. There are therapists, in turn, who accept everyone and everything except religious self-righteousness.

The gap is particularly great in regard to sex, the centerpiece for the Bakker-Gorman-Swaggart trilogy. Swaggart said more than once, "Victory over flesh does not come easily." But no child of the Freudian era would speak of victory over flesh as if Eros were the enemy of Psyche.

Indeed Freud believed that trouble came when sexuality was in conflict with the spirit.

The Swaggart story is the essence of a larger melodrama, played before two American cultures. One that thinks the preacher was led astray and another that thinks he's a neurotic mess. One thinks he can be saved and the other thinks he could use a shrink. And it isn't just one congregation in Louisiana that speaks in tongues that sound strange to outsiders.

The land of the evil empire

by Scott A. Davis
Guest Columnist

So, backed by the CIA, the Pakistan government was ousted and a dictatorship was put in place. That's right, Pakistan is now an American-backed dictatorship. This makes the U.S. happy.

The ruler of Pakistan, who has the U.S.'s arm around his shoulder, is free to deal with the United States no matter what the people want.

What has happened to the United States of the past? The United States that stood for freedom and opportunity. Now, the United States stands for...umm...what does the United States stand for today?

Does today's United States stand for freedom? Well, there is Pakistan. I guess not.

Does today's United States stand for opportunity? There are thousands of homeless throughout the country. Nope, I guess not.

Does today's United States stand for guaranteed rights? High school newspapers can now be censored even though the Constitution's First Amendment begins with "Congress shall make no law...abridging the freedom of speech, or of the press. I guess guaranteed rights are out.

The men of the West have lost something of great importance. At one time, the United States had morals.

We had values that we protected, for ourselves as well as for other countries.

Somehow we have lost sight of our morals. Instead of protecting the right of people to live the way they want, we protect our own interests.

Maybe someday the people of the world will once again look to the United States for leadership and inspiration.

But, for now, we must live with the fact that most of the world looks at us as we like to look at the Soviet Union. Maybe in the future...

Black History

It is never easy

Kireston Wilson
Guest Columnist

It was never easy. Not then, not now. But still we've tried to preserve our ethical, cultural and racial pride.

Yet there are those who would do anything for lighter skin, blue eyes, straighter hair and a picturesque facial structure.

There has always been a need for blacks to be aware of their "blackness." Not necessarily our own blackness but simply the blackness of our people as a whole.

At one time Pakistan was a democratic country where people could make free decisions about who to trade with and who to work with. Even if this meant not dealing with the United States.

At the same time, Americans love the sound of "America, the land of the free" and "Russia, the evil empire."

The sad thing is the people in other countries once believed those statements. Unlike most Americans, most of these countries now see the truth.

No longer is the United States looked at as the great free country. It is now looked at as an oppressing country that will do anything to anybody as long as it benefits itself.

This view from abroad, unfortunately, is more correct today than most Americans like to believe.

One good example of the United States oppressing for its own good is Pakistan.

At one time Pakistan was a democratic country where people could make free decisions about who to trade with and who to work with. Even if this meant not dealing with the United States.

There are articles written, speeches given, and movies shown.

But what happens when the month is over? Do we wait another year until we emphasize the contributions of Malcolm X and King again? Do we forget for the remaining 11 months that our heritage exists?

The black race has been programmed. We have let others dictate for us so long that we forget to think for ourselves. Instead of asking questions and looking for our own answer, we let others think for us.

Others choose our heroes, our month to celebrate black history, our contributions and our great individuals.

If you have learned nothing else from Black History Month, at least learn to question and to correct.

Iraqi missile attack adds new life to war

by Charles P. Wallace
L.A. Times-Washington Post Service

Iraqi missiles rained down on Tehran Tuesday, hitting civilian centers in the Iranian capital and apparently changing the character of the 7-year-old Iran-Iraq War.

Iraq said it fired at least 16 missiles at the city in 28 hours. It was the first time that ground-launched Iraqi missiles had hit the capital, and according to reports from Iran, at least 27 people were killed.

Later Tuesday, Iran replied with at least three missiles fired into Baghdad. The barrage caused a number of casualties and destroyed houses and shops, an Iraqi military spokesman said.

The Iraqi attack appears to involve new technology and a new strategy. In August, Iraq said that it had test-fired a missile capable of reaching Tehran, more than 200 miles from the frontier, but until this week the missiles had not been used in combat.

Iraqi spokesmen said that the missiles were produced domestically, but some military analysts said they believed that the weapons were supplied by the Soviet Union and were altered to some extent in Iraq.

Radio Tehran said that Iran accused Moscow of supplying the missiles to Iraq. It said the Soviet ambassador in Tehran was summoned to the Foreign Ministry and told that "this is not the first time American policies have been implemented against us with Russian weapons."

Unconfirmed reports last year said that Iraq had acquired SS-12 missiles from the Soviet Union. The Iranians use Soviet-made missiles, apparently supplied by Libya and Syria. An Iraqi spokesman said that the missiles used in the latest attacks were Iraqi-made, with a range of 400 miles. He said that the attacks were a turning point and would avenge Iraqi war dead.

Telephone reports from Tehran Tuesday described a grim scene, with air-raid sirens wailing through most of the night and large areas of the capital closed off to pedestrian and vehicle traffic because of broken glass.

As the sound of the exploding missiles reverberated through the city, supporters of the Ayatollah Ruhollah Khomeini's revolutionary regime reportedly ran into the streets shouting "Allahu akbar!" (God is great).

"It was a nightmare," said Ilmur Cevik, a Turkish newspaper editor who was visiting Tehran with Turkish Prime Minister Turgut Ozal.

Members of the Turkish delegation said that the Iranians, apparently believing that the explosions were caused by bombs dropped from aircraft rather than by missiles, fired anti-aircraft guns throughout the night.

Iraq said that it suspended the missile barrage against the Iranian capital in order to allow the Turkish group to leave the country. But even at the airport, the Turks were forced to deboard from their plane as the explosions resumed.

Afterward, Iran warned the people of Baghdad to flee, vowing to take revenge soon for the missile attack.

"Only the language of force can bring the Baghdad rulers to their senses, and we will demonstrate who has the real power," Tehran radio quoted an Iranian military spokesman as saying.

The attack on Tehran was the worst since a year ago, when the Iraqis attacked with fighter-bombers. The so-called war of the cities, which began in 1985, was suspended last year on Iraq's initiative.

The attacks were resumed Saturday. Iraqi warplanes bombed an oil refinery in Tehran, prompting the Iranians to resume heavy shelling of Iraq's southern port of Basra.

The Iraqis retaliated, and Monday the Iranians fired two missiles into Baghdad, reportedly causing considerable damage to civilian areas.

Iraq said Tuesday, in a communique, that its decision to use missiles against

Robertson seeks to drop libel suit

by T.R. Reid
L.A. Times-Washington Post Service

Republican presidential candidate Pat Robertson said Tuesday he will seek to drop his libel suit against former Rep. Paul N. "Pete" McCloskey, R-Calif., even though McCloskey has refused to recant his charge that Robertson used his father's political connections to avoid combat duty in the Korean war.

Caught in a political bind as he faced the prospect of a long trial that is scheduled to begin March 8 - "Super Tuesday" - Robertson indicated that he will ask U.S. District Court Judge Joyce Hens Green to dismiss the suit he brought against McCloskey more than a year ago here.

When he filed the libel suit, Robertson declared that it was essential that he clear up the charges about his military service if he were to become president. "No man can serve in that capacity with an unresolved cloud over his own personal integrity regarding military service," he said.

But in a Florida news conference, Robertson said the political calendar forced him to leave the questions unresolved. Otherwise, he would have found himself stuck in a courtroom hearing witnesses challenge his patriotism and integrity at the height of the primary season. The emergence last week of two 11th-hour witnesses who strongly support the charge that Robertson skipped out of combat may have been another factor influencing his decision.

While battling McCloskey's challenge to his integrity, Robertson has also found himself criticized for a series of charges on the campaign trail that he has been unable to substantiate. In the past two weeks, for example, he has said he knows there are Soviet nuclear missiles in Cuba, a charge he revived Tuesday. He also said Vice President Bush's campaign may have leaked for political reasons the information about sexual misconduct that forced evangelist Jimmy Swaggart to give up his ministry and that Robertson's television network told President Reagan the location of U.S. hostages hidden in Lebanon.

McCloskey's lawyer, George Lehner, said McCloskey is "eager to go to trial" to prove that his charge against Robertson is true. He said McCloskey would likely oppose dismissal of the suit unless Robertson agrees to pay all the legal fees McCloskey ran up in the suit. Robertson said last week he would not pay "one nickel" of McCloskey's fees.

Robertson has called the judge "patently unfair" for setting a trial date in the middle of his campaign. At a news conference Tuesday night in Orlando, Robertson said, "I had a choice of either going to court and defending my honor and the honor of my father or else not keeping faith with the millions of people who asked me to be their president and I just couldn't do that to them. There's too much at stake to spend it in court." As Marine lieutenants, Robertson and McCloskey were on a troop ship together en route to Korea when Robertson was removed from the ship disproving the charges, if Robertson were to have any hope for success in the political world.

Some witnesses in the case support Robertson's contention that he did not take advantage of his father's clout. Others testified that Robertson regularly bragged that his father would

Two former Marines who served in Robertson's unit came forward last week on McCloskey's side. Dwight E. Roberts of El Paso, who was Robertson's bunk-mate, testified that Robertson "made it quite clear that his father had clout to keep him, get him out of the Marine Corps, or keep him out of combat... almost to a point that he was bragging about it." Leo T. Cronin of Fairfax, Calif., said that Robertson was abusing the memory of Marines who died in Korea by claiming that he was in combat

Staff Writer Tom Sherwood reported from Sarasota, Fla.: Robertson Tuesday revived his charge that the Soviet Union has kept missiles in Cuba that should be banned under the new Soviet-American treaty on intermediate-range nuclear weapons.

Robertson had previously backed away from this charge, which he first made Feb. 14 in a debate in New Hampshire. But Tuesday Robertson cited 20-year-old testimony from two second-hand witnesses as evidence that the missiles are in place.

Dreams necessary to maintain sanity

by Linda McLeod
Staff Writer

Dreams have forever fascinated the world and been a subject of interest to many great writers. Coleridge, Goethe, Stevenson, and Poe, among others made literature of their own dreams. They also recognized, long before the age of psychoanalysis, that dreams are the language of the subconscious.

Folklore has always told stories of dreams that come true, but now science has many well-authenticated cases. It is indisputable that the phenomena exists but the questions that remain are how and why? Do our sleeping minds have privilege to inconceivable dimensions of time other than the present in which our waking bodies live?

An incident of a dream coming true helped solve the Red Barn Murder Case. In 1827 Maria Marten ran away from her village in Suffolk, England with William Corder, a farmer. Corder later became involved with another woman, murdered Maria, and buried her under the floor of the barn. He wrote to Maria's parents saying all was well. For a year, no one suspected a thing.

Then one night, Maria's mother had a dream in which she saw her daughter's murder and burial. The dream was so vivid and alarming that she and her husband decided to go and check on Maria. They found the barn from the dream, tore up the floor, and discovered the decomposing body of their daughter stuffed in a sack.

Perhaps the most overwhelming fact of modern research is that we must dream to be healthy. Our bodies require dreaming just as they demand food and water.

Anyone who is deprived of dreams suffers as severely as a person who is starved.

In 1959, Peter Tripp, a New York disc jockey attempted a publicity stunt which temporarily cost him his sanity. Tripp announced he was going to remain awake for 200 hours. After 72 hours, Tripp began behaving strangely. He would roar with laughter at things that were not funny and take offense at imaginary insults.

Hallucinations followed. Tripp thought specks of paint on the turntable were insects, and imagined a doctor's coat was made of worms.

Tripp also became convinced that he was broadcasting from a building elsewhere in town, and that he had already finished his 200 hours and was being tricked into continuing to stay awake.

Tripp was suffering from "gross mental illness" according to doctors. The illness is a result of sleep and dream deprivation. The hallucinations he experienced were in fact dream imagery breaking through into waking consciousness.

It was recorded that his hallucinations were most intense between midnight and eight a.m. The disc jockey would have normally been asleep and dreaming between those hours.

Each night, millions of people dream millions of dreams. Some make no sense, some are terrifying, some are absurd, and some are symbolic. Many dreams have had powerful effects upon their dreamers.

So the next time you wake up from a dream, don't simply dismiss them as meaningless. After all, dreams are the language of the unconscious and just maybe, your dreams could change the world.

Excessive cholesterol can prove dangerous

According to the Federal Government's National Cholesterol Education Program, one quarter of adult Americans are at risk for heart disease because of high levels of cholesterol in their blood. Should we, as young healthy individuals, be concerned?

The substance cholesterol is produced primarily in the liver as a component of fat, and it circulates in the bloodstream to cells throughout the body. We make about 1,000 mg. a day, which is all we need after the age of six months.

Cholesterol is involved with many bodily functions and is a necessity for maintaining health.

The problem is that we get an additional 20 percent of cholesterol from the fat we eat.

The connection between high cholesterol and heart disease? Excess cholesterol collects on the walls of the arteries, eventually making them so narrow that blood cannot easily flow through.

When this happens in the large arteries that feed the heart, the stage is set for a heart attack.

Yes, cholesterol should be a concern to us, even though we are younger. The basic reason being that excessive cholesterol kills.

BU Players a growing group

by Shakuntala Rao
for The Voice

You need three things in the theater—the play, the actors and the audience,” Kenneth Haigh. The Bloomsburg Players are a colorful theatre group on the BU campus. Their creative intellect comes together at the Haas Theatre for Art, which houses the organization’s office and “mental-mating” ground.

The theatre’s green room, where the player’s secretaries, Mimi Mikalac and Laura Specht, are always found diligently at work, provides the background for our discussion of the Bloomsburg Players.

Their primary goal, besides working on the exotic costumes and set designs, is to attract more students into their world.

This organization is an inherent part of the campus society and involves itself in every department of theatre work.

“It does not function in a centralized manner,” Mimi says, “It’s more individualistic and has a participatory role for each of its members.”

Players expose the students to a professional environment of theatre work.

What are the various benefits of joining the players? “Not only can you express your creativity,” Laura adds, “but one can also train oneself in any department of theatre.”

Is it more of an exploration into the world of theatre for students? “Yes,” according to Mimi, “we have a wide range of specialized activities in which the students can involve themselves. Costume and set designing, theatre management, public relations and advertising.”

Besides completely immersing themselves in theatre, I wondered what else they derive from being such a closely knit family of artists. “Friendship,” came the prompt reply. The staff’s consistent guidance has helped to develop a bond between all Players members.

Karen, Jody, Jack and Prof. Sato are some of the names which always bring a smile for the players. They form such an inherent part of the group that it’s often difficult to realize that they are so much more experienced than the students.

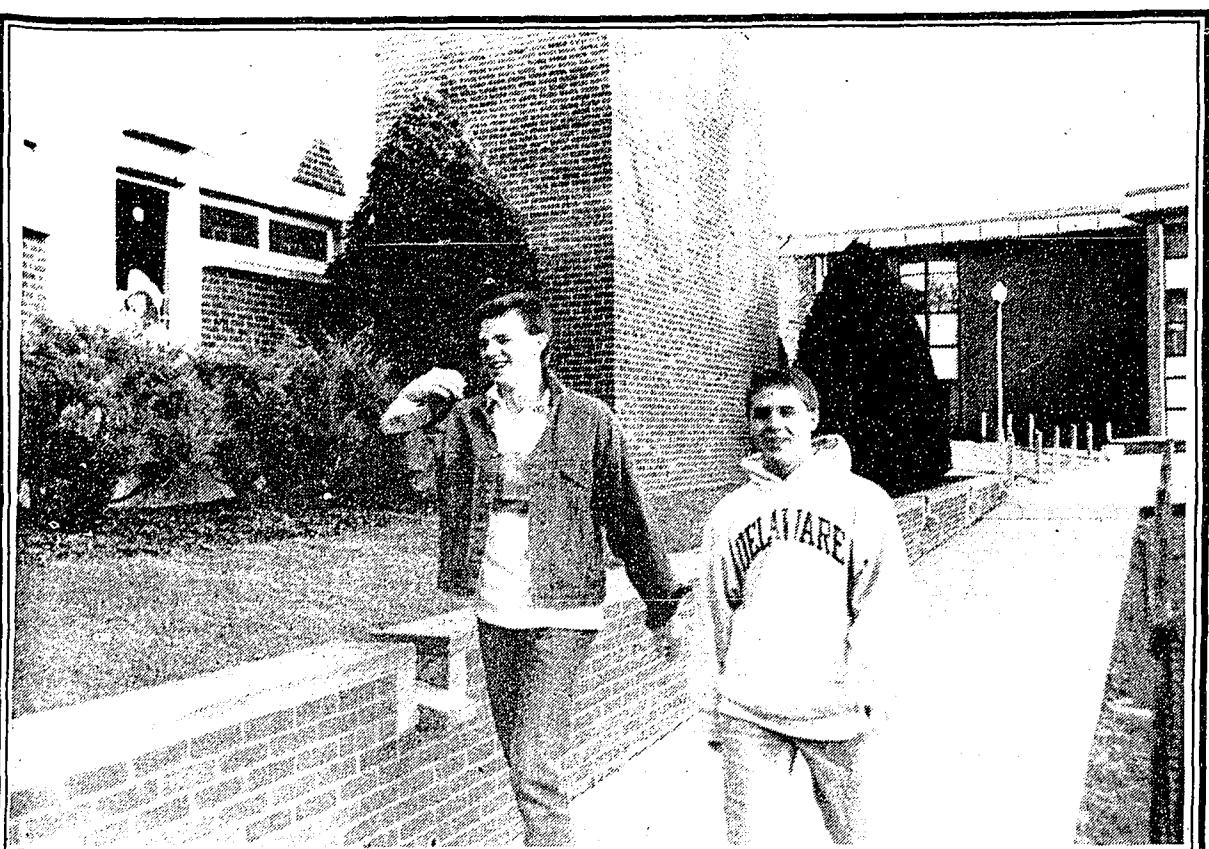

This kind of friendship fascinates many new players and delights all those who join.

The Players have staged several successful plays in the past, such as Glass Menagerie, Streamers, Wiley and the Hairy Man, Hamlet and Doors. “We are very proud of these productions,” said Mimi.

She is also proud of being a student director, a job that will expand her talents to the fullest. Command over decision making on full-length plays is more of a challenge to her and very fulfilling.

Why don’t the shows attract more attendance? “Students have come to expect that theatre is for a few selected arty people and that is not the truth,” says Laura, “If you can go and watch a movie, you can surely enjoy the theatre as much.”

As I walk out of the door, I see Laura writing on a poster for the next Players meeting, “Come and join us...we are too cool.” I accept this without a grudge. For, as Henri Frederic Amiel, “The great artist is only a simplifier.”

BU students will be smiling a lot more often now if the weather remains the way it has been the last several days. However, weathermen warn that we shouldn't get too used to warm days yet.

1988 cars have continued an old concept

by Glenn Schwab
Features Editor

In the Feb. 29 issue of The Voice, I mentioned in my column the “more-bang-for-less-buck” approach to manufacturing performance cars.

This was a popular concept during the mid-to-late sixties, enabling younger buyers (the most interested market) to purchase a fast car, within their budgets. “More-bang” spawned such great cars as the Ford Mustang Boss 302, Chevy Nova SS 327/350 and Dodge Dart.

But this idea died out with performance cars in general in the mid ’70s, victim of the government’s ever-tightening emissions regulations. Compression ratios and horsepower ratings dropped lower and lower as automakers scrambled to meet emissions requirements, making performance an unknown word.

By 1979, the availability of a big-block V8 in any car had been a moot point for three years, after the passing of the 1976 Trans Am’s Super Duty 455. The most potent mill was the Corvette’s 230 hp. 350, with the Formula Firebird’s 400 coming in a close second at 220 hp.

But these cars were hardly in the “more-bang-for-less-buck” range. The ‘Bird retailed for $6,380 and a base Corvette set the buyer back $13,140.

Performance started to make a comeback in 1982 with the reintroduction of the Mustang GT. Even though it’s 302 V8 developed only 157 hp., the GT was a sure sign that the auto industry knew there were still people out there interested in a quick car. The Mustang’s engine gained more ponies every year, topping out at 210 hp. in carbureted form for 1985. Electronic fuel injection became standard in 1986, with the little 302 climbing to its present 225 hp. in ’87.

With the rebirth of performance also came renewed interest in “more-bang-for-less-buck”, because the auto industry knows that there are still those of us who are fascinated at the prospect of going from point A to point B in as little time (and at little cost) as possible.

Ford was among the first to recognize this by making the power of their H.O. (High Output) 302 available in the no-frills Mustang LX body as well as in the higher-priced GT model. A base 1988 5.0 liter LX sells for around $10,600, some $2,100 less than its GT stablemate.

Ironically, the lower-priced LX is actually a better performer than the GT. It doesn’t have the 300 or so extra pounds of acceleration-robbing weight, such as aero-skirts and other gingerbread, that the GT model is saddled with.

This enables the LX to do 0-60 in a quick 6 seconds and top out around 145 mph, figures that are very close to those of a new Corvette, but at a third of the price. These factors make the ’88 5.0 liter LX the best American performance buy around.

Ford isn’t the only manufacturer with the low-buck market in mind. Chevrolet and Pontiac are also offering affordable performance machines for 1988 - the Camaro Sport Coupe and Formula Firebird.

But, as usual, Pontiac does it better. Both cars retail around $13,800 but this price equips the Firebird with a healthy 215 hp. TPI (Tuned Port Injection) 305 V8 while the Camaro is stuck with a 170 hp. version of the same engine with the lesser Throttle Body Injection (TBI) setup.

The ‘Bird also comes with wide 50-series Goodyear Eagles and a 140-mph speedometer, more suited to the car’s acceleration abilities than the old 85-mph unit. The Camaro’s only advantages are in the looks department, in the form of lower body aero moldings gained from the now-defunct Z/28.

With the more powerful engine, the Firebird turns the quarter-mile in a fairly respectable 14.9 seconds, three-quarters a second faster than the LO3-equipped Camaro.

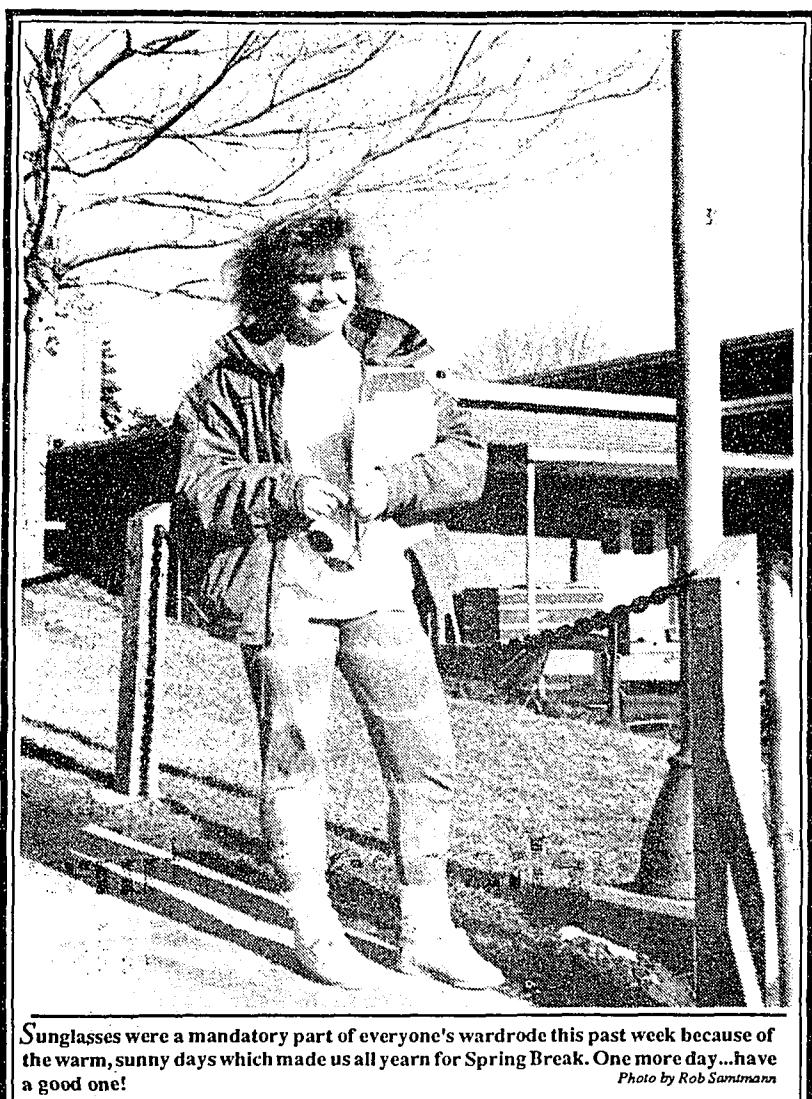

Though the Sport Coupe is Chevy’s only low-buck performance car, Pontiac offers two more in this field, a Formula version of the two-seater Fiero and the Sunbird GT Turbo.

The Formula Fiero comes in at around $11,400, equipped with a 2.8 liter fuel-injected V6 rated at 135 hp. and sporting a rear spoiler and large Formula graphics on the doors.

Going from 0-60 in 8 seconds may not sound like blistering performance, but it’s pretty good for a car weighing in at 2,775 pounds equipped with only a small V6.

With a price in the neighborhood of $13,900, the little Sunbird GT Turbo is expensive for its size, but for those who want the economy of a four-cylinder with the power of a V8 the Sunbird GT is the way to go. It’s 2.0 liter 4-cylinder pumps out an impressive 165 hp., booting it past the quarter-mile at 84.1 mph. in 15.68 seconds.

As long as the folks at Detroit and Dearborn keep offering cars like these, the low-buck performance market will no doubt continue to grow for years to come.

BU professor develops new training system for industry

by Tom Spock
for The Voice

By combining computer and video technology, Bloomsburg University Professor Harold Bailey has developed a useful training device for education as well as for industry.

Interactive video, the integration of computer screen text and graphics with audio-visual materials, provides an individualized environment for trainees, while saving employers money.

Bailey, director of Instructional Systems development, said, “The purpose of the programs is to provide training in a more efficient and cost-effective way than they have been done in the past.”

Some other educational programs include poison prevention for four to seven year olds and AIDS education for middle school children.

Interactive video also provides useful training for industry. Textron Inc., also of Danville, will have a program developed to train employees on a computerized milling machine. Before the program, workers would be sent away for instruction. “Now,” Bailey said, “the program should train more people in less time with less expense.”

Another program developed by graduate students is for entry level training for high school students. It is used by the Harrison School District in Colorado Springs, Colo. Industry would like to use this program as a training package for new employees.

Bailey said this opportunity to mix theory with hands-on practice gives students valuable experience.

This experience brought the Apple Corporation to campus two weeks ago to interview nine students in the program. “We were the only school in the country chosen for interviews,” Bailey said. “The fact that they came to Bloomsburg meant a lot to me.”

Some students interviewed will be invited to Coopertino, California for the next round of interviews. These positions include full-time employment and internships.

Another company on campus at the same time was the Lancaster based ISC Educational Systems. The company came specifically to recruit students for internships.

While two other schools in the country (San Diego State University and the University of Georgia) offer graduate level interactive video training, Bailey believes the program at BU offers more.

“Our program has more practical applications,” Bailey added, “the other schools just don’t work at the program the way we do.”

The interactive video program offers advanced technology and equipment that can only mean only one thing—a larger audience in the future.

“Maybe ‘Born in the U.S.A.’ found an audience that was what, 16 million or something, and ‘Nebraska’ found it at 800,000. The important thing to me, which was one of the reasons behind thinking of doing this tour, was that I really felt that the ‘Tunnel of Love’ record was one of my very best records, and I said, ‘Look, I just want to make sure this record finds its audience.’”

Springsteen seemed extremely comfortable sitting on a sofa with his wife in the dressing room area, a picture that seemed to contradict the speculation that “Tunnel of Love’s” songs of troubled romance reflected signs of trouble in his own marriage.

About the album, he said: “I didn’t start out with something that was auto-biographical. Some songs are stories, some are more a part of my life. The main thing I tried to do is find real people in the songs. You have to make them live and make them be, and then you have a song.”

Soprano solo will be held this month at Susquehanna U.

of Chicago, and as Donna Anna in the Brussels production of Don Giovanni presented at the Chatelet in Paris.

She also has appeared with the opera companies of Boston, Denver, Houston, Memphis, Miami, Portland, St. Louis, San Francisco, San Diego, Seattle, Tulsa and Washington.

“The main thing you’ve got to stop worrying about is how much the record’s going to sell. My main concern was this: I want to make the best record I can, and I want to help that record find its audience, whatever that is.”

Queen of Scots. Three of her performances are featured on separate recordings, and she has appeared in an opera production on BBC television. Her recent performances include the title role of Jenufa at Covent Garden, as Musetta with the Lyric Opera

From the Wrestling Room

by Mary Ellen Spisak
Staff Writer

Call it dedication, call it devotion, call them the Bloomsburg University Wrestling team. This year "has been one of the most successful and satisfying seasons," says Head BU Wrestling Coach Roger Sanders. Sanders' 16th season achieved a 12-5-1 overall record this year, and is 4-1-1 in the Eastern Wrestling League. The coaches have trained and projected an attitude that teaches their grapplers to never give up! It is evident in the wrestlers that have left BU, and have left there winning ways behind. Names such as "Shorty" Hitchcock, Rick and Rock Bonomo, just to name a few. But it is in the 1987-88 team that we see the future NCAA champions. This fact is verified by Dave Kennedy ranked 9th at 126 lbs., Dave Morgan ranked 6th at 150 lbs., Mark Banks ranked 10th at 158 lbs. and Ron Ippolite ranked 12th at Heavyweight. And the new faces seem to show the same potential. Tommy Kuntzleman proves to be at his best this year. Placed in the starting lineup, Kuntzleman has done a tremendous job at 142 lbs. In the recent match vs. Penn State, he copped a 7-6 win over junior Rob McIoy. Scott Brown proved his potential on the mat has been steady and consistent. Wrestling at 177 lbs. in the match against Penn State, he used quick and aggressive moves for a draw with his opponent. Some other names to look for are Tony DeFlumeri, Ron Critchley, Roger Dunn, Tim Casey, Lenny and Rich Cory. These wrestlers present Bloomsburg with a promising future. They are dedicated, hard working and eager to carry on the winning tradition here.

In the last match of the season, Bloomsburg met up with top ranked Penn State. Nelson Field House could have exploded with excitement as the Husky Grapplers won 5 matches and had a draw. It was the Huskies who scared the Lions and dominated the whole match. With everything going so well, what could possibly go wrong? Well, a stalling call on the wrong person at Hwt. in the 3rd period with 12 seconds to go just might do the trick. Yes, it's true the unfairness of one referee Robert Pankake ended the match in a tie. Let me emphasize the fact that Penn State TIED US and not the other way around! Every wrestler performed in top condition, with only excellence in mind. It was truly a match to see, and if you weren't there, you missed it. You missed your last chance to see the Husky Grapplers end their season in the best way possible! I really doubt the ranking and superiority of Penn State now. Just because a team was ranked 6th, does not mean that they should be even considered to beat us. Never underestimate the power of the Husky Grapplers, and it can never be said we give up.

It has been a season to remember for Coach Sanders, Coach Poff and Coach Martucci. They are the driving force behind what is the best wrestling team to continue the tradition. The wrestlers have every reason to be proud of their team, but most of all, themselves! Congratulations also is extended to Hwt. Ron Ippolite who has completed a successful, and devoted season.

The Husky Grapplers "pin to win" and have certainly become one of the feared competitors on the mat.

Why our ice hockey team had no chance

Jim Fisher
for The Voice

The United States Olympic hockey team arrived home from Calgary without a medal this week. This was a disappointing performance compared to the 1980 "Miracle on Ice" at Lake Placid.

But were we really good enough to compete with the international hockey powers of the Soviet Union, Czechoslovakia, Sweden and Canada?

Dave Peterson's squad lacked international experience but didn't lack talent. Brian Leetch, Lane MacDonald and Craig Janney will star in the NHL.

Scott Fusco was the only Olympic team member without an NHL club. This leaves us to the question of a standing national team.

After the 1980 gold at Lake Placid, amateur hockey loomed all across the United States. Amateurs coming out of high school or college wanted to play where the money is, the NHL.

In the Soviet Union, the eastern bloc nations and Scandinavian countries, the athletes don't have the option of playing professional hockey.

The elite of these nations end up playing for the standing national team. Unlike the U.S. amateur players who play together for nine months to a year, the elite of other nations play together on the average of two to three years.

Imagine a U.S. lineup of defenseman Rod Langway, Chris Chelios and Mark Howe, goaltender John Vanbiesbrouck and an offensive of Pat LaFontaine, Jimmy Carson and Neal Broten playing together for a couple of years. This example can be compared to any other national team.

Peterson tried to play a European style of game to accommodate the bigger ice surface.

The only way the U.S. will be able to compete on an international level is to fund amateurs for more than one year and maybe even take U.S. born players out of the NHL.

As far as right now a "Miracle on Ice" can not be expected until changes are made in the American program of amateur hockey.

Laker star gives students 'Magic' touch

by James Rainey
L.A. Times-Washington Post Service

The kid on stage at the high school auditorium is a big man on campus. A star athlete who likes the right music, he knows the right people and can rap with the best.

But Earvin Johnson, the Los Angeles Lakers "Magic," brought a few other credentials to school - as the National Basketball Association's most valuable player and owner of a mansion in Los Angeles and the ink-black Rolls-Royce convertible parked out front.

For an hour last Monday, the basketball super hero came from the world of the fantastic and made himself familiar to 1,200 students at Westchester High School here.

"I didn't know before he came," Earvin Johnson Jr. They call me said teacher Peter Johnson, "but he is Magic."

Johnson, an English teacher and held the assembled students, teachers senior class sponsor, organized a let- and reporters gently in his sway. He opened with a simple message: Johnson, the superstar, to visit the Don't take drugs. Study hard. Go to college. Honor your parents. And Laker publicist Josh Rosenfeld dropped a box in front of Johnson that contained 200 letters from Westchester students.

Johnson's reaction was, "This is really nice. We should go over there."

When he stepped on stage on Monday afternoon in a powder blue sweat suit, Johnson was greeted by a roar worthy of any rock star. When the cheers finally died, Magic simply said, "Hi." The students erupted again.

"I'm happy to be here." More yelling and whistling. Students strained to push themselves in front of a bank of television cameras.

"We've all been on TV now, so let's just chill out," Magic said, bringing the crowd to a hush. "My name is

"I didn't know before he came," Earvin Johnson Jr. They call me said teacher Peter Johnson, "but he is Magic."

For the next 45 minutes, Johnson, an English teacher and held the assembled students, teachers senior class sponsor, organized a let- and reporters gently in his sway.

Then Magic asked for questions and Inglewood a couple of months ago, microphones in the auditorium.

-Girls asked for kisses.

-A boy wanted to know if Magic could beat Chicago Bulls star Michael Jordan one-on-one. (It would be a tossup, Magic said.)

-Another asked him to name the NBA's toughest player. (Larry Bird he answered - and the kids booed.)

The master showman didn't miss the small touches, either, recognizing the school's highly rated boys and girls basketball teams, and star forward Zan Mason by name.

He gently chided a questioner named Andre, joking about him being a lady killer. "I see the comb in your pocket, Andre," Johnson said, mimicking the boy combing his hair between classes. Andre and the other kids roared with laughter.

Another girl wanted to know if Magic could dance "the cabbage patch," but instead he asked the kids to do it. They closed out the show that way - the basketball star leading rhythmic clapping and the students waving their arms and wriggling their shoulders.

The adoration continued backstage, where one girl gushed after reaching over to stroke Magic's hair. Others offered phone numbers and addresses, even marriage proposals. Magic responded with demure kisses and hugs.

A talk about drugs and school work would have gotten old fast, students said, if the message had not come from Johnson.

"No. 1, he is from the world champion Los Angeles Lakers," said senior Sherri Johnson, who interviewed the guest for the student newspaper, The Comet.

"No. 2, he's a people person. He's outgoing. He's funny. He can relate to people and enjoy people. He doesn't say 'Don't do this and don't do that.'

Johnson, 28, acknowledged later that there was one dent in his message about academics: he dropped out of Michigan State University after his sophomore year. "I didn't finish because the opportunity was there for me," Johnson said. "If there is a great opportunity for them to make money - a legal way to make money - then I would say, 'Take it.'"

But he says he still intends to graduate, and when he does, "I think the message will be stronger. I'm going to get the degree. That will put everything to rest."

Why?

Why would a young man on his way to big time Division I football decide to fool around with drugs? Why would someone with so much going for him just throw it away?

Yes, I am on my soap box. So what?

In case none of you people read page seven of The Voice, I would like to explain myself.

A few weeks ago, a high school football player, allegedly dealing drugs, died of a cocaine overdose. His name was Rico Leroy Marshall. He was 18 years old. He dealt with drugs.

Now he is dead.

Oh, he was a great guy. He drove an old car. He would split the cost of a movie with a date. He wore fashionable clothes, but they weren't lavish. He was on his way to the University of South Carolina to play football.

"He wasn't the type that was concerned about money," a friend commented about Marshall.

Unfortunately, he was the type that dealt drugs.

Basically, it happened like this. At 1:30 a.m. on a Saturday night, two officers in a marked cruiser were making a routine sweep through the 1400 block of Nova Avenue off Marlboro Pike in Capitol Heights, less than a mile from the District of Columbia line.

"They saw a young man standing next to a car and talking to its occupants. He looked up, saw the marked car and immediately ran off and the car sped away," Cpl Bruce Gentile, spokesman for the police said.

"He ran almost simultaneously into the arms of two uniformed officers on foot. They stopped him, searched him and found six empty glassine envelopes and approximately $150 in currency."

They didn't find any drugs on him, so they had no reason to arrest him.

Two hours later, he was dead.

It seems that he had swallowed six small chunks of crack, a cocaine derivative, when the officers approached. The time that elapsed between the encounter with the police and the time of death is consistent with the absorption rate into the bloodstream when a drug such as crack is swallowed.

So, if he got caught, he figured he could get off if he swallowed it.

Smart move.

If this isn't bad enough, after his death you have his old teammates volunteering to take blood tests. "I think we should have drug testing. It would be a big step for Forestville. It's too bad that we had to wait too long before this kind of thing had to happen," junior Torrence Montgomery said.

Great.

That makes a lot of sense. If he wasn't using drugs, like most tend to believe, then tell me how a drug test is going to do any good.

The problem is not the schools. They could make mandatory drug testing a way of life.

The problem is not the streets. A strong person will say "no" if taught to do so.

So the problem is - the parents.

A parent who has their son arrested two months earlier for possession of cocaine and does nothing about it is the one at fault.

And what did Marshall's father say after his son's death?

"I just want to bury my son. My son knew God. He's in His hands."

What inspiration from a man whose son is dead.

I don't do drugs. Neither did Leroy Marshall. He only dealt them. For all intents and purposes, I could be the one dead. Dealing is one thing, taking them is another. A person who takes drugs is more likely to overdose than one who only deals in them.

So for all intents and purposes, it could have been you.

Bloomsburg women headed to PC playoffs

Huskies preparing to face IUP in semi-finals

The Bloomsburg University women's basketball team will face Indiana (Pa.) in one semifinal game in the Pennsylvania Conference (PC) Championships this Friday, March 4.

The contest is scheduled for 6:30 p.m. and will precede the other semifinal game at 8:30 p.m., which will pit host Clarion against Millersville. The championship game is set for 8 p.m. the following evening, Saturday, March 5.

The Huskies (21-5, 10-1) have had several days off since defeating East Stroudsburg, 73-60, last Wednesday in the final regular-season game. Coach Joe Bressi's club won its first outright Eastern Division title and has already set a pair of school records for victories in a season (21) and consecutive wins (11). Among those 21 wins is a 67-61 triumph at Indiana, which occurred on Jan. 5.

Bloomsburg is among the national leaders in team defense allowing only 59.1 p.p.g. and is limiting its opponents to just 35.8 percent shooting from the field. The Huskies are scoring an average of 75.4 p.p.g. and shooting at 48.0 percent from the floor including 40.3 from three-point range. The club is also shooting 65.2 percent from the foul line. The defensive average, field goal percentage and three-point field goal percentage all lead the PC, while the offensive average and free throw percentage rank second and third, respectively, in the conference.

Junior All-American candidate Theresa Lorenzi leads the team in scoring averaging 24.2 p.p.g., which ranks her second in the conference and among the top five in the nation among NCAA Division II schools. She has made 281 of 504 field goal attempts for a percentage of 55.8, which is the conference's third-best individual shooting percentage. In addition, Lorenzi has pulled down an average of 5.1 rebounds per game, and she leads the squad in steals with 62.

Freshman Nina Alston has enjoyed a fine first season since becoming a starter and is the only other Bloomsburg player averaging in double figures scoring 12.4 p.p.g. She is the club's top three-point threat as she has made 21 of her 47 attempts, 44.7 percent, from beyond the 19'9" line.

Other regulars for the Huskies include seniors Carla Shearer (6.3 p.p.g.) and Amy Wolf (5.3 p.p.g., 6.5 reb.), sophomore Karen DeLullo (3.1

p.p.g.) and freshmen Barb Hall (9.1 p.p.g., 8.2 reb.), Donna Cooper (5.7 p.p.g., 5.2 reb.), Elaine Wolf (5.3 p.p.g.) and Becky Pigga (3.1 p.p.g.).

All nine players have performed in at least 22 of the team's 26 contests this season.

Indiana (15-13, 8-4), under second-year head coach Jan Kiger, reached the semifinal game with a 96-81 triumph at Lock Haven on Monday night in one of the conference's preliminary round playoff games. The Indians finished third in the division behind the Bald Eagles and Clarion but used Monday's playoff victory to advance opposite the Huskies.

Junior guard Margo Hinton is the

Swimmers send two sprinters to nationals

Senior All-American Beth Roeder, York, and sophomore Debby Legg, Naperville, Ill., will represent Bloomsburg University in this season's National Collegiate Athletic Association (NCAA) Division II Swimming and Diving Championships to be held Wednesday through Saturday, March 9-12. The event will be staged on the campus of the State University of New York at Buffalo.

Roeder has qualified for the national championships in each of her four seasons at Bloomsburg and earned All-American honors in 1985 as well as last season. She and Legg will both compete in four races during the four day meet. Roeder is entered in the 100 and 200-yard butterfly races and the 200 and 400-yard individual medley events.

She qualified for the 100-yard butterfly in a time of 58.86, which is slightly higher than her school-record clocking in at 58.14. Her qualifying time of 2:07.07 in the 200-yard butterfly is also above the school-record standard she established at that length, a time of 2:06.34. Roeder finished fourth in the 100-yard butterfly and seventh in the 200-yard butterfly at last year's national meet. In the individual medley races, she registered times of 2:11.30 and 4:48.67, respectively, at the 200 and 400-yard distances.

Roeder won the 100 and 200-yard butterfly races at the Pennsylvania Conference Championships two weeks ago and was second in the 200-yard individual medley.

Legg will swim in the 200, 500 and 1650-yard freestyles along with the 200-yard backstroke event at the national championships. She qualified for the freestyle races in 2:00.11 at the 20-yard length, 5:10.59 at the 500-yard distance and 17:46.65 at the 1650-yard length. In the 200-yard backstroke, her best clocking has been 2:14.33.

She recorded a pair of second-place showings in the Pennsylvania Conference meet, placing just behind the winner in the 200-yard backstroke and the 1650 freestyle, and was ninth and third in the 200 and 500-yard freestyle races, respectively.

The Huskies finished second in the conference championships for the eighth-consecutive season and closed the campaign with a record of 8-3, the school's 12th-straight winning season.
